This was at about nine o'clock. Into cars they all accordingly piled, and off into the night they went. A dreary dressing room, after the cold run, and the girls powdering their noses, reddening their lips again. Another bleak-looking table with a limp spotty cloth on it. They were all so tired they almost laid their heads on the cloth, and Gail was scared when she saw the hip flasks and the red wine again. Van had driven like a crazy man on those steep circuitous roads coming over; he certainly would not be in a condition to drive more carefully going back. Of course, they would get back to the ranch somehow, but it was frightening.

Funny to think of herself as home again tomorrow night, playing solitaire. Well, one thing was sure; if she ever married Van Murchison or anyone like him she would cure him of this sort of craziness.

Mockerson's was as dull as ditch water tonight. There were parties in the curtained alcoves, shouting and singing, but the main room was empty. A heavy fog was rolling in from the sea; the motor cars that went by made a muffled sound in the dark night.

"You're awful cute!" Van said affectionately, covering Gail's hand with his own.

A noisy party stumbled out of an alcove and scattered wearily toward dressing rooms for wraps.

"We ought to be going, too!" Lenore decided. "This is too awful!"

They stumbled up in their turn, staggered up the smelly, unpainted stairs to the odorous, damp, bleak dressing room. Its window, on this raw night, was wide open, the salty air blowing in deliciously cold and fresh.

"This won't do!" Gail said, going to close it. Standing beside it, both hands raised to the center rill, she looked down at a pool of bright light from the tavern doorway below.

"Come here, Duchess. That's the color hair I mean!" Lucia said suddenly, at Gail's elbow, also looking down. "Ash blond—and that's a real one, too. Look!"

Gail looked, too. Looked down at the bareheaded, loudly laughing girl a big raccoon-coated man was helping into a roadster. She recognized the ash-blond hair, the curve of soft cheek.

It was Ariel.

CHAPTER V

Gail had a sick moment of vertigo, of terror. What she saw, what it signified, where she was and where Ariel was—everything rushed together in a complete demoralization of mind and senses.

After a while she turned and dazedly reached for her brown coat and buttoned its belt about her. She followed the other girls downstairs, not knowing where she was nor what she was doing.

She was next to Van on the drive home. The cars shot away into the foggy night; the big engines throbbed on the grade. When they reached the top of the long rise, and the machines could run quietly, cautiously, through the enveloping thick mists, Gail spoke for the first time.

"Van, you saw those men and the two girls—the ones who were making so much noise?"

"Didn't notice 'em specially—why?" Van shouted.

"Oh, nothing!" Gail, actually writhing, saying the soundless words of prayers with trembling lips, added no more. But her soul was sick.

"Ariel! Oh, my G—d—not yet eighteen!"

Then night and fog and the exploring lights of the car and her own sick, heavy heartbeats again.

It was like a horrible dream. She was miles—miles from home, from Phil and Edith, and security and goodness and help.

The need to be at home gnawed at her flesh like teeth; her face burned, she could not breathe.

"Van, how far are we from home?"

"From Los Gatos? Let's see—"

"No. From Clippersville."

"Oh, Clippersville? Oh—well, about seventy miles."

Seventy miles! They seemed to fall on her heart like so many separate blows. Was somebody driving Ariel seventy miles home tonight? What was she doing away from home? Where did Phil and Edith think she was? Perhaps Phil and Edith were dead. . . .

Perhaps they were scouring the town for Ariel, telephoning Dorothy, telephoning the Lovelaces! And she not there!

"Ash Blond—and That's a Real One, Look!"

"Papa told us to take care of the children! And little Ariel, that Mother only stayed with four days—!

"And what does Ariel know about danger? Nothing. She's a baby. Men think she's pretty, and it amuses her. She never dreams. . . .

"Oh, my G—d! Where is she now?"

It was impossible that 12 hours must pass before she could be home again and know the worst. Hours—hours! They proved to be the longest through which she had ever lived.

Vaguely, secondary things penetrated the flaming wall of thought that shut her in. She realized, alone in her comfortable cabin room, that she was not going to sleep.

Ariel! Ariel! Ariel!

She walked out under the redwoods just as dawn began to paint the western face of the canyon with streaks of vermilion.

Then she must have gone back and flung herself on her bed and fallen asleep, for she was awakened by the other girls' laughter and voices at ten, and roused herself, stiff and half sick, with heavy eyes and chilled wet feet. She crept down to the main cabin for breakfast only anxious to avoid notice, to secure the earliest possible escape for home.

They were all going up to San Mateo, for it appeared that Van was to take the place of a missing polo player; every one was very much excited about the game.

But she was in a fever to get home. Van's arguments, his pleading, fell on deaf ears. Ariel perhaps murdered, Phil and Edith crushed with terror and doubt, and they wanted her to go to San Mateo and applaud the chukkers of a polo game!

In the end she had her way, and was established in the roomy empty back of a big closed car. Van saw her off reproachfully.

"You piker!"

"I know it." She smiled a sickly smile at the handsome boy.

"Why don't you stay and swim, anyway. It's noon; you'll cook—driving home through the valley!"

"I can't. I promised Ariel—"

"Oh, Ariel nothing! Listen, I got one good look at your little sister, and I want to tell you something! She can manage her own affairs."

Her face, already pale with heat and emotion, grew whiter.

"How d'you mean you—you saw Ariel?"

"Why—" He looked at her in puzzled surprise. "Why, she was at your house that Sunday night, two weeks ago."

He had not seen her at Mockerson's then! Gail sank back.

"Come on, have a change of heart, and let's swim! And then we'll go up to San Mateo."

His laughter, the grip of his big brown hand, would have been irresistible twenty-four hours ago. But Gail was hardly conscious of them now. Absently, apologetically, she persisted, said her farewells.

The world that was all pleasure—swimming, bridge, polo, tennis, frocks, trips—closed behind her as a pool closes over a stone.

She would be home before three o'clock. She must be patient. She would be rushing into the old house—and what a haven of rest and coolness and ease it would be!—at three o'clock. She would find Phil there, haggard and wild, Edith stricken, Sam making frightful suggestions about dragging the river and notifying the police.

"We Lawrences can never hold up our heads after this again," she thought. Not that it mattered, if Ariel, frightened and sobered, were home, were safe!

Thirty miles more! Her face was burned by the hot wind, and her head splitting. Twenty miles—ten miles. The big gas tank came into view, the red mills, the canneries, and finally the swimming treetops of Clippersville, from which dazzling lines arose like hairs of white fire.

Gail's heart was suffocating her. She said only incoherent farewells, as she descended from the back seat into the heavenly green shadiness of the old garden, and catching up her heavy suitcase ran for the side door.

On the threshold of the quiet, shaded kitchen she stopped short. Edith was sharing a light refection of artichokes and bread pudding with a book, "Martin Chuzzlewit." Ariel, dainty and cool, was sitting at the other end of the kitchen table, cleaning gloves in gasoline.

For a moment revulsion of feeling made Gail feel actually dizzy and weak. But if Ariel saw anything amiss her smile of surprise and welcome gave no sign of it, and Edith's delight covered all other emotions for a space.

"Oh, Gail, we didn't expect you until suppertime! Oh, darling, did you have a good time? Was it fun? I've been thinking and thinking—but you've not had lunch!"

Edith was in her arms, was racing about the kitchen eagerly, mixing iced tea, taking rolls from the old black japanned bread box. Ariel got up from the table to come and bestow one of her strange kisses. Gail, seated, her hat pushed off her damp, pale forehead, felt that she was still in the dream, and that things had shifted themselves about on all sides, strangely, as they did in dreams.

"But tell us, tell us, tell us!" Edith pleaded.

"And what'd you do last night?" Gail could finally ask, when the swimming pool, the frocks, and the general excitement of Far Niente had been pretty generally reviewed.

"Ariel was with Dorothy Camp. So the boys and I had to console each other!"

Gail gave Ariel her big sisterly, sympathetic smile.

"Was that fun?" she asked, feeling that it was somebody else talking, that it was all a part in a play—in one of their Sunday night charades.

"Fun! They stayed at the Fairmont," said the eager Edith.

"Oh, did you, baby?"

"We went to a movie," Ariel supplied.

Then—then the girl at Mockerson's wasn't Ariel? Or else . . . Gail's first impulse to tell her sisters of her sickness and fright died away. She dared not risk that yet.

Peace and shadiness held the kitchen. Ariel was expecting some boy friend for supper; Edith was going to walk over to Mrs. Appleby's at five o'clock to ask about the fiesta dresses; Sam was working; Phil had said that he must go to the office.

"Which I shrewdly suspect is Thomas Street hill!" Edith confessed ruefully.

Home. The infinite peacefulness of it! Gail, looking at Ariel, could not believe that her feverish, frightened suspicions of last night had any basis whatever. This was all reassuring, all soothing.

It was not believable that this innocent child of seventeen, in the blue organdy, had upon her mind any secret as disgraceful as a midnight escapade at Mockerson's.

But as soon as they had an opportunity to speak to each other alone, Gail went straight to the point.

"Ariel, did you ever hear of a roadhouse called Mockerson's?"

The blond head, with its drift of flyaway gold hair, came up like a flash. And Gail knew.

Ariel shrugged slightly, wary eyes on Gail's face.

"Yep," she admitted briefly.

Then there was a long silence. Ariel's eyes met her sister's.

"Some of us went over from the Chipp ranch," Gail said, returning the steady gaze. "What were you doing there, Ariel?"

The tone was dispassionate, quiet. But Gail's breast rose and fell once, on a heavy sigh.

"What—what you were, if you were there and saw me, I suppose!" Ariel blurted, in a tone that was meant to be bold and turned out merely trembling and frightened.

Gail took the shock without a sign, going on patiently.

"Who were you with, dear?"

"Oh, don't dear me!" protested Ariel, in sudden ugliness. "You know you think I'm a lost soul, and you're going to tell Phil, and stir up all sorts of trouble."

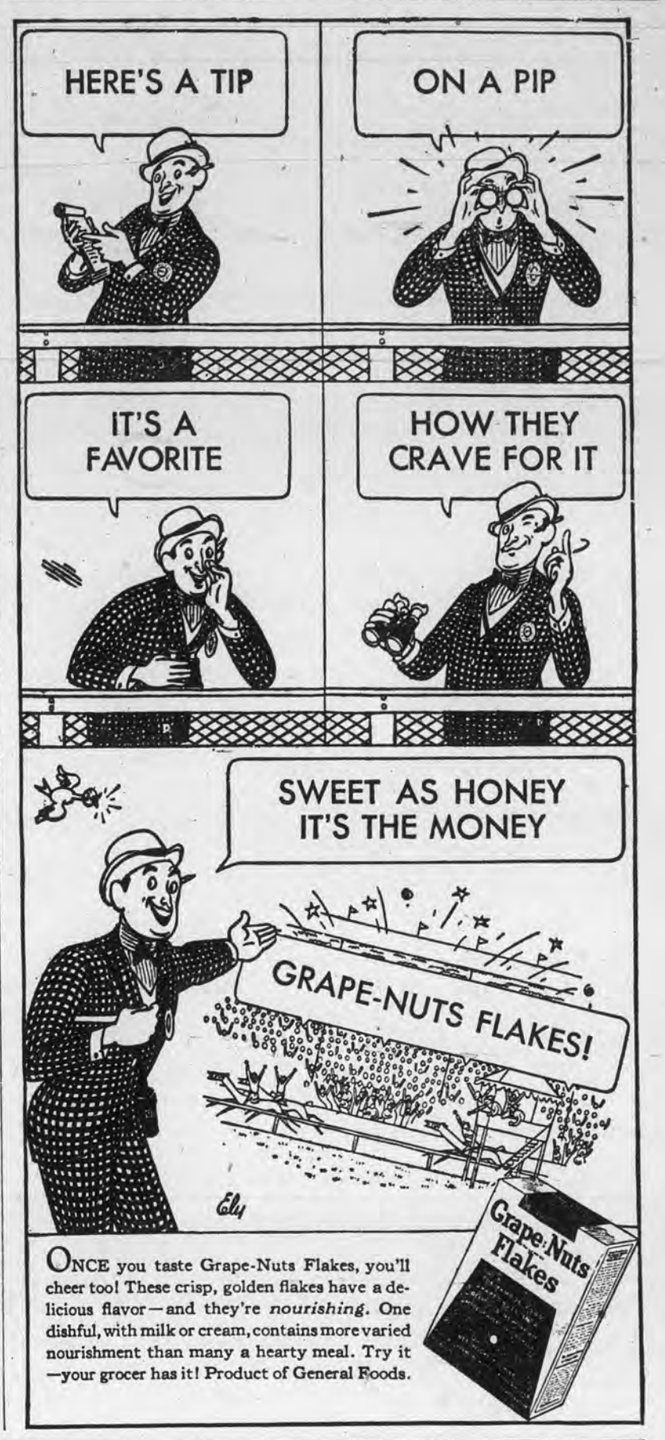
Joys and Duties of Holiday Time

Now that vacation days are here, children feel a marvelous freedom from restraint, and from tasks. It is a period of readjustment, just as much as is the beginning of school in the fall. It is well for parents to appreciate this, for by so doing they will spare themselves and their offspring some difficult moments.



Many young children will be inclined to rely upon mother to direct their time by suggesting games, or little helpful tasks made attractive through the idea of relieving her of work. The rest will strain at the leash of any restraint, believing that as school was their expected and peculiar occupation, that vacation means all play and no work. They will be irked by requests to do minor jobs, quite within their ability, or to run errands, however few, or, perhaps, even to have pleasant suggestions about recreational diversions.

It requires careful thought on the part of a mother to prevent the children from leaning on her too much, in the first instance, and from becoming a bit too aloof, in the second. It is well for the mother to have it definitely understood that she expects to be told when any one of the children goes out, and where the place is. Many adults believe it is a wise precaution to leave such word at home, since sometimes it is desirable or necessary to get in touch with them, and some one in the house should know their whereabouts.

It is well, also, to expect children to be home promptly for meals—which then should be served promptly. If the children find themselves unexpectedly invited to meals with their friends, then the telephone should be used to inform the home of their plans—and in younger children permission should be asked for and granted, if possible, or refused if necessary. Mothers' plans may have to be adjusted to suit such changes, or perhaps children have forgotten other engagements and can then be reminded of them.

Children can learn, in tender years, that the home is a circle made of different units, and while each unit has the right to individual freedom of wide latitude there remains the ties of the family, which should be respected. There must be co-operation, and vacation days can foster this, however old or young the members.

POISONING WEEVILS PAYS $5 TO $10 ON EACH ACRE

AUBURN, Ala. — Cotton farmers may expect to profit by $5 to $15 per acre if they poison boll weevils when 10 per cent of the squares are punctured, says Prof. J. M. Robinson, entomologist of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

"In experiments conducted on the Alabama Experiment Station the gains from dusting varied from no gain to 931 pounds of seed cotton per acre," he reports. "The large gains were made on fertile soils during years that boll weevils were very numerous and the small gains on poor soils or during seasons that boll weevils were not numerous. The six years average gains on three types of soil receiving from 300 to 500 pounds of fertilizer per acre were 240 pounds of seed cotton per acre on sandy loam, 252 pounds on black belt clay, and 282 pounds of red clay. Since the average yearly cost of dusting an acre of cotton was $5, or $3.80 exclusive of labor, profits of $5 to $15 per acre may be expected."

Columbiana 'Skeeters' Defeat Vincent, 3 To 2

Alvin Bird' Columbiana "Skeeters", young local baseball team, defeated Vincent, Tuesday, in Vincent, 3 to 2. The game was a pitchers duel with Baker of Columbiana getting the best of his rival when Frank Martin scored the deciding run from second base on an infield error. Baker struck out 10 men, and Sharbutt, on the mound for Vincent, struck out 8. Baker's triple and Bell's double were the only extra base knocks of the game.

Alabama Increases Swine Production

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama farmers increased their hog production during the first six months in 1935, announces F. W. Gist, state and federal agricultural statistician, who reports that this state "is one of six states in the United States which increased its hog production from January 1 to June 30 this year."

Sows farrowed were 61,000, or 103 per cent of the year before. The number of pigs saved was 327,000.

"While Alabama and five other states were increasing their pig production during the past spring, the United States decreased the number of sows farrowed by 24.4 per cent and the number of pigs saved by 19.6 per cent," Gist says.

Potato Planting Schedule Given

AUBURN, Ala.—The fall crop of Irish potatoes should be planted the latter part of July or in August, the exact time depending upon the section of the State in which the potatoes are being planted, advises Julian Brown, extension horticulturist.

"The potatoes should be planted in the northern sections of the State from July 20 to August 1; in the middle area from August 10 to 20; and in the southern sections from August 20 to September 1. Nothing is to be gained by planting during mid-summer when temperatures are so high and moisture is quite limited.

"Because of high temperature at planting time the seed pieces should be planted deeper than is recommended for the spring planting, unless the field is to be mulched.

"Growers should plant their fall crop of potatoes in a low moist area, or as nearly so as possible. Mulching with 3 or 4 inches of leaves or straw will tend to keep the soil cool, help maintain a favorable level of soil moisture, and greatly increas the yield."

County agents are advising farmers how to treat spring-grown potatoes to make them sprout.

NEIGHBORING

"Where is a more gracious thing
Than old-fashioned neighboring?
A voice that calls, "Here is a wedge
Of warm spice cake," across a hedge;
Or, "Have you garden space by chance
For some extra pansy plants?"
Or, knocking on the kitchen door,
"Want a new quilt pattern? Or
In hours of grief and trouble, "Do Let me help. I so long to!"
Little kindnesses that start
From a next-house neighbor's heart
To be returned, until they make
A chain the years can never break,
Linked with bonds of neighboring—
Where is any finer thing?"

The above poem brings to our attention one of life's richest blessings —Neighbors and Friends—!

Personally speaking, we could not get along for even one tiny little minute without our Friendly Neighbors. Rarely a day goes by but we are made to feel our utter lack of being able to express our deep appreciation for their many kindnesses so generously extended. We have little time to call our own, (as little as you may think about it, there is much detail work in a newspaper office) and Visiting, if any, would have to be done at such odd hours for a social call, that we fear we might break even a Neighbors charitable spirit. But we gratefully acknowledge their continued thoughtfulness, and their sweet retention of us—"as is".

This week has been especially marked by many material evidences of their gracious loyalty——Flowers to decorate the office and make work a happier task——Choice vegetables, fruit etc.——and best of all those cheerful words of encouragement as we swing by to work each morning. They often make the work-a-day-world worth the living. We personally vouch for this statement, and offer a heart filled with sincere gratitude for each of you.

L. C. Abbott, much beloved bachelor and man about town, has just dropped by the office and brought along an iced coco cola to refresh the hectic hours. He also made a statement which may be of interest to a number of people in Shelby County: "It is now time to pay up that Tax, or be written up as a Delinquent"—Only a few more days remain before publication will begin of the delinquent list of tax payers in Shelby County. Better call by the Collector's office and check up on this matter. Speaking of "Taxes", reminds me of a communication just received which may "Tax Your Patience". However, there is much truth in the jingle submitted:

"When you light the evening lamp,
You Pay A Tax.
When you buy a postage stamp,
You Pay A Tax.
When you buy the baby's clothes,
When you read the evening news,
When you buy a pair of shoes,
You Pay A Tax.
When you watch the screen man wink,
You Pay A Tax.
For the water that you drink,
You Pay A Tax.
When you smoke a cigarette,
For the dinner that you get,
You Pay A Tax.
When you buy an ice cream cone,
You Pay A Tax.
When you buy a small soup bone,
You Pay A Tax.
When you buy a loaf of bread,
When the Doctor says "you're dead",
And the final prayers are said—
You Pay A Tax".

So, what's the use?
There still seems no escape from DEATH or TAXES.

Now for a "Personal Check-up on Columbiana".

Mrs. Dick Martin, of Calera, is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Nora Lester. "Friend Husband—Dick"—she states is chasing the finny tribe with rod and reel in Florida.

A luncheon honoring the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Davis, was given at Curlee's Cafe on last Sunday by Dr. and Mrs. James Crawford. Included in this cordial bit of hospitality and congenial group, were: Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Davis, Mrs. Andrews, Mrs. Elizabeth Brake of Panama City, Fla., Mrs. Latham and the hosts.

Harold Harlin has returned from a vacation spent in Bowling Green, Ky.

Miss Alberta Gilmore, of Marion Junction, is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. A. A. Lauderdale in Columbiana. Miss Gilmore is one of the most brilliant students in Huntington College, Montgomery, and was recently elected President of the Senior Class for 1935-36.

The Young Matrons Class of the Methodist Church entertained their friends with an ice cream supper on the Court House lawn on Friday nite. A pleasing musical program was rendered by the 'Rhythm 'Ristocrats. Funds received will be appropriated in buying new song books for the church.

Mrs. Annie John Smith, of Pensacola, Florida, visited friends in Columbiana on Friday. Mrs. Smith (Annie John Haynes), was one of the most popular and talented girls in Shelby County, and she stated to the writer that she could not believe she was in her former home town. Paved streets and many marked improvements have taken place during the six years since she has not seen "your little main street and mine". She will be the guest of her sister, Mrs. Jasper Holcombe, in Calera for a few days, after which she will spend a few weeks with her parents, Hon. and Mrs. John J. Haynes, in Montgomery, Alabama.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Stone entertained their house guests, Misses Susie and Robbie Stone, of Uniontown, with a swimming party and picnic on the grounds of beautiful Yamakita, on Friday night. About 25 guests enjoyed this gala occasion.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats will play their regular engagement at the Airport in Columbiana on next Saturday night. A large number of guests are expected. This orchestra is gaining in popularity each week, and they played for a dance at Clearmont on last Thursday night, and other engagements are pending, with a full schedule on the calendar for August.

George W. Smith, Jr., of Aldrich, was a visitor in Columbiana, Monday.

Mrs. Esther Christian and daughter, Miss Ruth Christian, left Columbiana on Saturday night for an extended vacation in the Golden West. They will visit Mrs. A. Milner (Patty Mason) in Albuerqueque, New Mexico, and spend a few weeks with Mrs. M. Robinson (Mary McMillan) in Colorado, before returning home about September 1st.

Mr. and Mrs. Bolin Cooper, and Allie Claire Cooper, are vacationing in Elba, Alabama, and in DeFuniack Springs, Florida.

Mrs. Purnie Hendricks is the attractive companion-chaperone for a collegiate house-party now in session at Daytona Beach, Florida. Included in the happy motorcade which left Columbiana, Sunday, were: Misses Ruth Luck, Charlie Verne Tinney, Jane Fowler and Messrs Harris Milton Gordon, Rux Carter and Jit Taylor.

Miss Myra Acker, of Birmingham, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Curlee in Columbiana.

Miss Christine Moody, of Sylacauga, is the guest of Miss Alice Roberts.

Mr. C. F. Childs, newly eelcted Principal of Shelby County High School, spent Friday in Columbiana. Mr. and Mrs. Childs will soon move to Columbiana, and will be located in the practice home on the High School campus.

Mr. J. F. Harmon, Principal of Siluria High School, was a visitor in Columbiana on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Elliott, of Camden, spent the week-end with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Dycus.

"Happy" Whittaker's style is slightly cramped this week on account of an attack of Mumps. He sends word de does not "choose" any Kraut or Dill Pickles. No one is more sincerely missed in the business district than Howard. Here's hoping he does not take Whooping Cough. We understand he is in the same boat with us—We have had neither—and are rather shy about where we go these days. Both dread maladies are prevalent in Columbiana.

Francis Burns, of Northport, spent the week-end in Columbiana visiting friends.

Miss Ruth Luck, after spending a few days in Mobile with Miss Zoe Neville, returned home, Saturday.

"Here Comes Arabella", a Wayne P. Sewell production, will be staged in Montevallo on next Friday night. Beatrice Looney and Leon Perry, former Columbiana residents, are taking prominent parts in the musical comedy which is rated as one of the Sewell's best.

Mr. and Mrs. Gary Luttrell, Doris and June Luttrell, of Atlanta, were week-end guests of Mrs. Luttrell's father, James R. White. Miss Doris Luttrell left with the Columbiana girls on Sunday for a two weeks stay in Camp at Alabama College in Montevallo.

Several merchants in Columbiana who have recently begun an advertising campaign, stopped by the office this week and expressed their appreciation for the Democrat, stating that it was a veritable "Magnet of Trade". We deeply appreciate this tribute, and shall continue to offer the columns of this weekly to the communities of Shelby County for the advancement of their business. We sincerely hope to bring to each reader an interesting paper—one that merits the prestige and confidence you have reposed in us. We deeply appreciate your continued patronage and hope you will continue to call us—Phone Number 9.

S. C. Beane, of Wilton, was a visitor in the Democrat office on Monday.

Ike Natthews, prominent merchant of Shelby County, who resides in Montevallo, owns and operates the College Shop and the Dollar Store, spent Monday in Columbiana. Mr. Natthews was optimistic over the outlook for business during the Fall. His stock of goods will soon be complete, and an early Fall showing of the latest styles for the winter season will soon be announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wood are visiting relatives in Millen, Georgia.

Dr. H. C. Nickson, County Health Officer; Miss Nelle R. Davidson, County Nurse; and Mr. W. C. Evers, County Sanitation Officer, have been attending the Conference of County Health Workers in Montgomery this week.

The many friends of Mrs. Mason Edwards will be delighted to learn that she is rapidly recovering in South Highlands Infirmary, Birmingham, after an appendicitis operation on Monday.

Swimming parties at Yamakita continue popular these hectic nights. Try a refreshing swim after work hours in the lovely pool now open for your entertainment during recreation hours.

Mrs. John Curlee was the gracious hostess on Monday night when she entertained the younger set honoring her sister, Miss Myra Acker, of Birmingham. A program dance with an elaborate picnic spread served at midnight, at the Columbiana Airport, topped the clever program arranged by the charming hostess. LeRoy Mooney, versatile pianist, presented the musical program for the evening. About 40 guests enjoyed this unusually happy occasion.

Judge L. C. Walker just stepped by the office and seeing an unusually large stiff "white collar" bedecking the daily uniform this morning, asks Personal Mention if she had accepted a "white collar" job? Surely, Judge —you do not think I would be copy pounding in a newspaper office if I could rate a "white collar" job with a salary of $45.00 per month? I shall file my application immediately if you think I have a chance.

Remember the baseball game between Montevallo and Columbiana today and Saturday. Both games to be played in Columbiana.

Who Would Pay This $2,000,000 Loss In Alabama Tax Revenues?

COULD Alabama, its counties and municipalities and institutions afford to lose the sorely needed sum of $2,000,000 annually in tax revenue?

What new taxes would be levied to make up this huge deficit?

These are not mere idle questions. They are vital questions, which may soon call for answers from the taxpayers and citizens of this State.

If the Tennessee Valley Authority should extend its operations throughout Alabama and pay taxes only on the basis agreed upon, Alabama, its counties and cities, would lose tax revenues amounting yearly to approximately TWO MILLIONS.

This grim prospect, whose grave significance is as yet only faintly realized, is this:

The Tennessee Valley Authority has agreed to pay as its total taxes in the State of Alabama, only 5 per cent upon its proceeds from the sale of power at wholesale rates.

On this same basis, private power companies in Alabama would have paid in taxes in this State during 1934, less than $400,000 instead of approximately $2,400,000 which they actually did pay.

In brief, the State, its institutions, its counties and municipalities would lose the difference in $2,400,000 and $400,000 which is $2,000,000.

What State funds, what State institutions, what Counties would lose this $2,000,000?

COUNTY AND CITY SCHOOLS
Would Lose Over $955,000

ALABAMA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE
Would Lose Over ..... $ 30,000

UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA
Would Lose Over ..... $ 22,000

ALABAMA COLLEGE, MONTEVALLO.
Would Lose Over ..... $ 10,000

STATE TEACHERS' COLLEGES, NORMAL SCHOOLS AND OTHER EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES
Would Lose About ..... $ 53,000

THE CONFEDERATE PENSION FUND
Would Lose Over ..... $ 75,000

OTHER STATE, COUNTY, CITY AGENCIES
Would Lose About $855,000

Each County would lose the amount in the column on the right.

To make up this huge loss of $2,000,000 annually, existing taxes would have to be increased or new taxes levied.

Are you willing to pay more taxes to make up this huge loss?

Not Constitutional
Flies and Black Magic Kilkenny Cats, Again
Pickings for Lawyers

In Boston, the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals decides, two to one, that the "New Deal" process tax on cotton is unconstitutional. The judges decide that "the power of congress to regulate interstate commerce does not authorize it to tax products either of agriculture or industry merely because their production may indirectly affect interstate commerce."

Arthur Brisbane

This most important decision, if not upset by the higher courts, will upset, decidedly, the plans of the administration in regard to financing bigger incomes for farmers.

Universal Service says Abyssinia will not take Mussolini, his airplanes and armored tanks "lying down." Abyssinian sorcerers, dealers in black magic, will work against Italy. What is more dangerous than magic, Abyssinian fighting chiefs will use the poisonous tsetse fly against Italian soldiers. These flies, feeding on decayed animal matter caught in the teeth of sleeping crocodiles, get the tsetse germs from the blood of the crocodiles and plant them in the blood of human beings and cattle.

Slow death by "sleeping sickness," leaving the body almost a skeleton, follows the tsetse bite.

Two cats hung over a line must fight. The Kilkenny story proves it. Mussolini has committed himself to war, and once a dictator speaks positively it is unsafe, politically, for him to back down, especially when other nations interfere, as France and England have interfered. To retreat might cost Mussolini his prestige.

Difficult also is the position of Haile Selassie, emperor of Ethiopia. His hold is not firm. Important chiefs, heading various Abyssinian tribes, would like his job. If he should avoid war by yielding part of his territory to Mussolini, as advised by England, resulting complications might include assassination, common in tropical countries.

The United States Chamber of Commerce objects to the income and inheritance tax program, calls it confiscation. The question involved seems simple:

Does the property of the United States, result of thrift and intelligence, belong to the people that created it, or is it only held in trust by them for public use by those that for the time being exercise powers of government?

Owners of stock in Paramount-Publix Moving Picture company, once selling on the market at $100,000,000 and more, now worth about nothing, learn that in some windup proceedings lawyers ask for $3,600,000. That seems a good deal, but you must remember that one New York lawyer—he will not object to being mentioned—the skillful Louis Levy, once got more than $1,000,000 for settling a sad misunderstanding between a prosperous gentleman and a certain "little lady."

Figures do not lie, but they surprise you. For instance, in the year 1801 the government of the United States had 126 employees. Today it has 700,000 employees, an increase of 5,000 per cent. The number of congressmen has risen since 1801 from 128 to 531, a little more than 400 per cent, while United States population has increased 2,500 per cent.

The increase in population is due to mothers, the increase in government extravagance is due to politicians.

Austria seems not quite certain that she has had enough of the Hapsburg royal family, that has ruled and misruled an intelligent people for so long. The state council cancels a decree that banished Hapsburgs and took their property. Young Archduke Otto, pretender to the throne, may now return to Austria. He and his mother will find themselves rich, the confiscated imperial properties returned.

Young Otto, a handsome boy, with a somewhat peevishly conceited expression, may occupy the throne. Self-government is not easily learned. Austria, Italy, Germany, have discovered that, not to mention the U. S. A.

Anti-Semitic riots in Berlin included the usual cowardice that accompanies display of religious hatred, no matter by what race or religion. The "proud Aryans" bullied, beat and kicked Jewish men and women indiscriminately.

Washington reports a "whispering campaign" concerning President Roosevelt's health. It will be a very small whisper if the whisperers stick to facts. The President's friends will be glad to know that his health is excellent, has never been better since his Presidential work began. A constitution able to withstand and conquer such an attack of illness as the President has withstood need not worry about a few political annoyances.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

The Montgomery County Board of Revenue with representatives from the State Highway Department are procuring from the property owners on Birmingham-Montgomery Highway, an additional 50 feet of right-of-way. The old right-of-way is 50 feet wide and the State and National Highway Department propose to make it 100 feet wide, thus providing a four-lane drive all the way.

Alabama became the first state in the nation to obtain final approval on definite highway construction plans under the president's $4,000,000,000 work relief program as road and grade crossing projects costing $2,232,400 were okehed for immediate start of work.

Three roadhouses near Huntsville h ve been closed by sheriff's deputies. Temporary injunctions against operation of the Green Lantern, Dinty Moore's and Cedar Gap were issued by Judge Paul Speake upon motion of Solicitor John E. McEachin.

Construction of 7.8 miles of concrete road to link the paved highway systems of Alabama and Tennessee will be a project of the approaching Au tumn, according to a promise given by Gov. Bibb Graves to Sen. Shelby S. Fletcher, of Madison County.

Declaring "it was too hot," approximately 40 employes in the weaving department of the Florence Cotton Mill, walked out. A spokesman for the group said poor ventilation endangered the health of workers during the current heat wave.

Col. O. K. Yeager, chief consulting engineer on armories with the works progress administration at Washington, praised Alabama for its speed in submitting 32 definite national guard armory projects, eight of which have been approved.

The fourteenth annual tri-county picnic, composed of former citizens of Tallapoosa, Clay and Coosa Counties, their families and friends in Birmingham, was held Friday afternoon, July 19, in Avondale Park.

Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael has ruled that the Perry County Board of Education had a prior claim on the assets of the closed Marion Central Bank for $32,745 that was on deposit when the bank closed.

Application will be received through Aug. 2 at Washington for examination for third class postmaster, to be given by the U. S. Civil Service Commission, to fill vacancies at Adamsville and Gilbertown, Ala.

Work is going forward rapidly on two new vocational buildings for Pickens County, located at Carrollton and Aliceville. The new buildings will be ready for the opening of the Fall term of school.

The Pioneer Lumber Co. mill which was closed April 4, 1933, by a fire and which did not open after NRA went into effect, will resume operations within four weeks to employ about 300 men.

The government's drive against the danger of screw worm among Alabama livestock has reduced the number of reported cases to 50 in the 34 counties where the worm has made its appearance.

Francis W. Inge of Mobile was elected commander of the Alabama Department, American Legion, at Mobile, by a vote of 267 to 133 for his opponent, J. W. Brawner of Andalusia.

Organized labor in Alabama has renewed its campaign in behalf of the child welfare amendment to the federal constiution, and has laid plans for a determined fight for the measure.

Arrested near Attalla, two youths were lodged in Etowah County Jail at Gadsden on charges of operating a distillery. The youths are Sam Williams, 20, and Tom Williams, 17.

The State Highway Department is employing 18 men and expending several thousand dollars in repairing the flooring of the Tennessee River bridge between Sheffield and Florence.

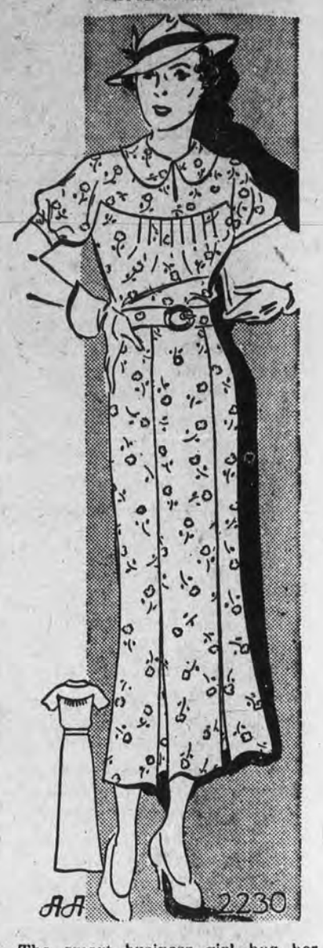
All restrictions removed Delta Air Lines have begun regular transportation of passengers over the new night route between Atlanta, Ga., and Dallas, Tex., through Birmingham.

A $33 license, three times as large as that paid by local dealers, has been placed on itinerant dealers in coal and bakery products by the Huntsville City Commission.

Alabama led all states in Region 6 of the Federal Housing Administration in number of homes started on National Better Housing Day recently, with a total of 85.

The movement to build a tuberculosis sanitorium in Tuscaloosa has been renewed. Leaders consider seeking funds from the Works Progress Administration.

A crew of relief workers from the Department of Public Welfare are at work constructing a swimming pool and two tennis courts near Leeds High School.



Approximately 1,000 pieces of Tarrant City property will be sold by the city Aug. 15 for delinquent public improvement assessments totaling $200,000.

About 300 men have begun work at Gadsden on Etowah County Federal Works Progress Administration projects for which $111,000 has been allotted.

Eufaula's latest census, counting everyone from a day-old white baby to a 100-year-old Negro, shows a total of 6,086 persons to set an all-time high mark.

BUSINESS GIRLS WILL LIKE THIS

PATTERN 2230

The smart business girl has her own rules for chic—tailored feminine simplicity. And here's the frock that obeys the dictates of fashion and utility. There's a world of youthful charm in that simple collar and flattering curved yoke that cuts into a bodice with the very new "bosom and back" fulness. The paneled skirt breaks into pleats just in time to give you lots of walking freedom. Wear the sleeve puffed or flared—let your "type" be your guide. Because every smart business girl will choose this pattern and run up several in the evenings, the frock pictured has been kept especially simple. Choose a cheery flower print silk on a dark ground—or a washable pastel.

Pattern 2230 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 takes 3⅝ yards 39-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York.

Visitor—Won't it be nice when your little sister learns to talk in a few months?

Little Bernard—Aw, why should she take the trouble to talk? She gets everything she wants already just by crying.—B'nai B'rith Magazine.

Knit Outfits Are Ideal for Vacation

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WHETHER you spend your summer in town or in country, on the golf course, or at the beach you will find it the better part of wisdom and good taste to have at hand one or several of the prettily colorful, porous, airy knitted outfits that have been developed in wide variety to keep you cool as the mercury mounts. They'll keep you fashionable at the same time because of their graceful, silhouetting lines, smart tailoring and casual appearance.

For vacation purposes knits are ideal. Throw them into your valise at home and take them out ready to wear when you reach your destination, as crinkles and wrinkles disappear with a shake. Their sportsy appearance, too, tunes them to practically all daytime requirements whether your program calls for active recreation or just lazing about.

The vast majority of these creations for warm weather wear are two piece dresses coming in linen, featherweight zephry, silky and cotton knits. Sweater blouses in openwork effects, many with self belts and novelty tie girdles, are undeniably in the lead. These are generally set off by skirts in plain stitches. A new touch, which is seen with increasing frequency is a match of sleeves with front blouse panels. Sleeves, by the way, are usually short and of the puffed type.

Ideal for bridges and teas on sultry afternoons and suited as well to spectator sports is the two-piece ensemble, knitted of a silk frill, shown to the right in the picture. Hand fashioned throughout, it is marked by a lacy knit bosom which matches split umbrella sleeves. A novel touch is provided by a braided neckline running into a tie effect, with two crystal clips for adjustment purposes. The neckline theme is carried out in a braided cable cord ending in a long graceful tassel. Other details of interest include the rib bottom of the blouse and the novelty rack hemline of the skirt. Dusty pink is a becoming color for this smart, serviceable costume and it is also definitely modish in bijou blue, wheat gold, antique mauve and white, also other summery shades.

Simplicity is the keynote of the two-piece cotton knit, shown to the left, rendering it perfect for golf and tennis and just as good for morning shopping on these cloying summer days. It is an almost imperceptible bird's eye knit with a unique straight collar line developed in a rib effect, similar to the treatment of the brief puff sleeves and the bottom of the blouse. Ample freedom of action is permitted by semi-concealed pleats, front and back, which make walking no battle against skirt restrictions. At the same time the skirt is fashioned so as to retain its trim effect. A decorative touch is introduced by a self-belt which may be casually and even negligently, tied at either side in accordance with your whim.

As a pert addition to your beach wardrobe you will find that a knit pajama outfit, as centered in the illustration, will give you endless comfort and satisfaction. The garment, which is in a corduroy stitch, is distinguished by the wide knit rib waistline which assures close fit. The contrasting stripes of the waist are carried out in the wide opening club collar, which is also in a rib knit. Interesting details are the button closing in the now-so-voguish shirtwaist effect, the pocket monogram, the wide pants and the backless treatment. Gray is an unusually effective shade for this pajama, the contrasting stripes being red and blue.

LACE AND CHIFFON

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Lace and chiffon make a charming combination and one that is most fashionable at the present moment. For the model pictured silk lace goes partner with navy silk chiffon, the matching jacket being entirely of the lace. The V-decolletage in front can be adjusted high or low.

SUMMER PARTY TOGS NOW HOLD INTEREST

Summer party dresses are absorbing the attention of the younger set these days. Sleek sophistication is out for summer evenings, so far as the youngsters are concerned, and fluffy ruffles are the rule of the day. Sheer confections of lace and net and organdie are blossoming in shop windows, with plenty of frills and furbelows.

Consider, for instance, an evening gown made entirely of diagonal ruffles of Chantilly net lace, mounted on tulle. In petal pink or baby blue it is about as fetching a costume as ever was donned by a dewy debutante.

White also is on the up and up for summer evenings, what with the new epidemic of organdies and organzas and such. Ruffled white net is a sure-fire summer dance frock number, with a black net jacket, if you must be sophisticated.

"Something Different" Is Slogan for Accessories

"Something different" is the slogan for the accessories which accent the new clothes. Almost every one has changed its shape and design a bit.

Gloves are shorter, bags are deeper, belts are wider, handkerchiefs larger and all marked by new touches and trims. Short gloves of pigskin, doeskin or suede are the last word in chic accessories to the new tailleur. They extend only about one inch higher than the wristbone, sometimes slashed briefly up the back and buttoning on the back of the hand.

Button Trim

Tiny buttons of crochet or pearl are part of the dainty detail of sheer lingerie blouses. Rows of them range down front frills or along the sides of cuffs.

Lesson for July 28

AMOS

LESSON TEXT—Amos 7:7-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—But let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.—Amos 5:24.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Hero Preacher.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When God Needed a Hero.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Standing for the Right.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Plumb Line and Our Social Order.

Amos was a herdsman called of God to be a prophet. A prophet is one who speaks forth the message of God. He convicts the people of their sins, pleads for them to get right with God. The only effective way to correct wrong social usage is to bring the people into right relationship with God.

I. The Call of Amos (1.1).

He was a herdsman and gatherer of sycamore fruit (7:14). He was not a prophet by succession, neither was he trained in the prophetic schools.

II. To Whom Amos Was Sent (1:1).

Though he was from Judah, his ministry was to be primarily to Israel.

III. Amos' Message.

1. Sins denounced (2:6-8; 6:1-6).

a. Avaricious greed (2:6-8).

(1) Sold the righteous for silver (v. 6). The judge, for a bribe of silver, declared the innocent to be guilty.

(2) Sold the poor for a pair of shoes (v. 6). It doubtless referred to the practice of selling into slavery the debtor who could not pay for a pair of shoes which he had been sold on credit.

(3) Pants after the dust of the earth (v. 7). So avaricious had these men become that they even grasped after the earth which the downtrodden poor cast upon their head in their mourning because of their misery.

(4) Turned aside the way of the meek (v. 7). These grasping rich men turned aside the meek, that is, those who did not stand up for their rights.

(5) Licentiousness (v. 7). So notorious were the immoralities practiced that they were even guilty of incestuous prostitution. How adequately this pictures the licentiousness of our present age.

b. Reckless security (6:1-3). They closed their eyes to the approaching judgment predicted by the prophet.

c. Luxury (6:4-6). Their luxury expressed itself in:

(1) Extravagant furniture. They had beds of ivory, which means, doubtless, wood inlaid with ivory.

(2) Laziness (v. 4). Many stretched themselves on their couches, thus living lives of indolence.

(3) Feasted on delicacies (v. 4). They bought what they desired, regardless of its cost.

(4) Adorned their feasts with music (v. 5). They sang idle songs, even inventing musical instruments for this purpose.

(5) They drank wine (v. 6). They drank from bowls, indicating excessive drinking.

d. They failed to grieve for Joseph. Many are today indulging in luxury, entirely indifferent to the crying needs of others.

2. The remedy proposed (5:4-9). The prophet called upon them to return to God. The time to repent is while divine judgment is stayed. In their turning to God they were to renounce:

a. Idolatry (vv. 5, 6). They were to turn away from the places of idolatry—Bethel, Gilgal, and Beer-sheba.

b. Seeking to pervert judgment (v. 7). Turning judgment to wormwood implies the bitterness of the perversion of judgment to the injured.

c. Seeking to dethrone righteousness (v. 7). "Leaving off righteousness" is thought to mean that unrighteousness was allowed to take its place.

IV. Intercedes for the People (7:1-9).

The prophet stands here not merely as the proclaimer of judgment, but as the intercessor for the people.

V. Opposed by Amaziah the Priest (7:10-17).

1. Message sent to Jeroboam (vv. 10, 11). The priest sought to hinder the prophet by informing the king of the judgment which Amos proclaimed.

2. He attempted to silence the prophet (vv. 12, 13).

3. The prophet's bold reply (vv. 14-17).

a. He declared that he had received his commission from God directly (vv. 14, 15). The one who has heard the call of God must be faithful in the declaration of his message even though opposed by ecclesiastical and political leaders.

b. Doom pronounced (vv. 16, 17). He set forth the shame and distress of the Babylonian captivity, which came upon them because of their unfaithfulness to God.

An Overwhelming Thought

How could we bear that overwhelming thought "Thou knowest"—the thought that there is certainly somewhere, unless also we had the conviction warm at our hearts, "Thou lovest"—the certainty that the deepest certainty of all is the love of him who orders all.—W. Charles.

Better Thoughts

A single gentle rain makes the grass many shades greener; so our prospects brighten on the influx of better thoughts.

"TALL" TALES OF HUMAN MARVELS

Folklore Is Responsible for Stories of Giants?

A recent dispatch from India reporting that natives have found bones of a giant's skeleton no less than 31 feet high has torn up all records of this particular myth. Not even the imaginative Doctor Mazurier, who fabricated in 1613 the circumstantial tale of a brick tomb not only containing his giant, but provided with equally gigantic swords and other weapons, and even labeled with the name and titles which the giant had borne, dared to make his imagined relic more than 26 feet tall. The famous Giant of Lucerne, who involved scores of Swiss and German scientists in acrimonious controversies from 1577 until after 1600, was credited with only 19 feet. England's Giant of Thorneway, in Cumberland, said to have been found in armor which has conveniently disappeared, measured but 14 feet, by contemporary accounts.

No doubt the new 31-foot marvel of Calcutta belongs with these others among the long list of confusions between human bones and those of fossil animals, mostly elephants. A few thousand years ago several types of elephants, such as the mammoths and mastodons, were much more numerous and widespread than any kind of elephant is today. Being comparatively recent in geologic history, their bones lie close to the ground and frequently are found by diggers or plowed up by farmers, something which is not true of bones of still larger animals of earlier ages, such as the gigantic dinosaurs. Some elephants' leg bones look superficially not unlike human bones. It is small wonder that they and human giants have been confused, although even in 1620 the famous William Harvey remarked of the supposed Giant of Gloucester that his bones evidently belonged in reality to "some exceedingly great beast, such as an elephant." There is less excuse for Doctor Mazurier's manufacture out of whole cloth of the brick tomb, weapons and inscriptions which he said he found with the 26-foot previous holder of the giant record.

To students of folklore these misconceptions about elephant bones supply one possible explanation of the virtually worldwide belief that giants once existed, but not the only one. Another suggestion is the recollection by primitive people of other human beings able to walk on stilts, as fen dwellers still do in eastern England or dune dwellers in southwestern France. Thus probably originated the tale of the fast-moving seven-league boots. Still another possible origin of giant myths is garbled tales of men standing on towers or platforms, like the movable siege towers used in ancient warfare. And perhaps some giant myths date from days when relatively short races, such as the Celts, were in conflict with relatively tall ones, like the Danes or Saxons. But not even folklore has recorded giants 31 feet high.—New York Herald Tribune.

THE NEW FIRESTONE GROUND GRIP TIRE WILL ENABLE YOU TO USE YOUR CAR, TRUCK AND TRACTOR IN ALL KINDS OF WEATHER

THE body of this tire is built with patented Gum-Dipped Cords, giving it extra strength and greater flexing ability without creating heat, the greatest enemy of tire life.

The extra-heavy super traction tread on this tire is scientifically designed to prevent the bumpiness on smooth roads that is so objectionable in other tires designed for traction in soft ground. This heavy self-cleaning tread, required to withstand unusual pulling traction and strains, is securely locked to the cord body by Firestone's patented construction of two extra Gum-Dipped cord layers under the tread.

These new and unusually effective Firestone super traction tires enable you to operate your tractors, trucks and passenger cars for all kinds of farm work and over ground and roads that could not be traveled with ordinary tires, even equipped with chains.

AN OLD ROMAN LAW

AND ITS PRESENT DAY SIGNIFICANCE

THERE was an old Roman law relating to bank deposits to the effect that a depositor who left his money only for safety ranked before a depositor who received interest for his money.

Today, in America, each of those depositors is protected against loss in insured banks. Whether or not their funds earn interest makes no difference. All depositors of an insured bank, share in the benefits of Deposit Insurance.

DRIVING 60 MILES AN HOUR IS COSTLY TO AUTO OWNERS

Driving an automobile at excessive speed consumes twice as much gasoline and seven times more oil than it does traveling at a moderate rate over the same distance, the Alabama Motorists Association announced last Sunday in presenting figures supplied by the American Automobile Association supporting its campaign against fast driving on the nation's highways.

"Numerous tests have been conducted as to the rate of fuel consumption at various speeds, "a statement issued by the A. M. A. declared, "and without exception these tests have demonstrated that consumption of gasoline mounts as rapidly as speed increases.

"These studies, as averaged by the U. S. Bureau of Standards to give typical performance, show a car which gets 18 miles to the gallon at 30 miles an hour will get 12.6 miles to the gallon at 60 miles an hour and only 8.6 miles to the gallon at 80 miles an hour, or less than half of the mileage obtained at the slower rate."

Following is the tabulation of the rates of gasoline consumption at varying speeds:

10 Miles Per Hour—18.7 miles per gallon.

20 Miles Per Hour—18.9 miles per gallon.

30 Miles Per Hour—18.0 miles per gallon.

40 Miles Per Hour—16.4 miles per gallon.

50 Miles Per Hour—14.6 miles per gallon.

60 Miles Per Hour—12.6 miles per gallon.

70 Miles Per Hour—10.6 miles per gallon.

80 Miles Per Hour—8.6 miles per gallon.

"Since gasoline is the largest single factor in the cost of car operation," the A. M. A. statement continued, "the motorist can readily see the benefit of moderate speed. for it means a saving of both dollars and of human lives.

"Study of oil consumption at various speeds was made in a test conducted by the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association at the Indianapolis Speedway. This survey involved 13 makes of automobiles, each of which ran 9,000 miles, lasted 24 days and more than 600,000 calculations and observations were made. Averaging the performance of all cars, it was found that 6.9 times as much oil was consumed at 55 miles an hour as was used at 30 miles an hour.

"The great strain placed on a vehicle by excessive speed results in greatly shortening its life. Engines, tires and steering mechanism all are subject to unusual wear and tear when the driver is suffering from a speed complex."

Convict Department Costs State $24,034

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The State Convict Department during the first nine months of the 1934-35 fiscal year lacked only $24,034 of paying its own way despite charges of $110,301 for court costs.

Cleon B. Rogers, president of the State Board of Administration, said the department grossed $1,729 590 against expenses of $1,753,624.

"With free trade we could have more than paid expenses," Rogers said, pointing out that prison crops had been reduced to a minimum to prevent the department from competing with farmers.

There were 5,280 prisoners behind bars at the various prisons on July 1, with 1,135 at Kilby Prison here.

Many Are Hurt In Wreck Tuesday Nite

Members of a Sunday School Class, of Shelby, Alabama, left for a picnic on Tuesday night, for a destination near Jemison. Lester Crawford was driving the truck on which were about 35 members. In an attempt to pass a car on a curve, the two machines side swiped each other, and many were injured. Several members of the party were carried to hospitals in Birmingham.

FARMERS MEETING AT SHELBY SPRINGS IS WELL ATTENDED

SHELBY SPRINGS, Ala. — The Shelby County Association of Farmers held its annual meeting last Thursday at Shelby Springs at a picnic rally. This is an annual event, the object being to get together, and exchange ideas, and to sponsor a better spirit of cooperation among farmers.

Speakers were R. J. Goode, commissioner of agriculture; Roland Turner, of the agricultural department, Southern Railroad; W. R. Sizemore, of Auburn, and others. Mr. Goode told the gathering that "the outdoor meeting is one of the best ways to promote better agriculture and is a meeting that is attended by this county as a whole".

The attendance numbered about 1,500 people. The farmers were entertained with swimming, games and other amusements.

ALABAMA HEALTH WORKERS MEETING IS WELL ATTENDED

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Closer cooperation between county health units, agricultural agents, child welfare workers and school authorities was emphasized at a conference of public health workers from throughout the state held here last week.

The conference was called by Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer, and was attended by more than 200 health officers, nurses, sanitation officers and others, to discuss plans for expansion of Alabama's public health program.

Representatives of all of the 53 county health units were present, and Dr. Baker said that prospects were that at least a half-dozen other counties would be organized within a year, bringing the system beyond the peak of efficiency of pre-depression days, when 90 per cent of the peovle of the state had full-time health protection.

Words of optimism were brought to the conference by Lawrence Lee, Legal Adviser to Governor Bibb Graves, who told the county physicians and others that whatever appropriations were made this year, these appropriations would be paid 100 cents on the dollar. He declared that Governor Graves considered the health system one of the most important arms of the state government.

Dr. Baker, along with representatives of the U. S. Public Health Service, outlined the manifold benefits that will accrue when the pending Social Security Bill is passed by Congress. Local authorities were urged to make plans to match federal funds that will be available for certain types of work.

Dr. L. N. Duncan, President of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute; Dr. J. A. Keller, State Superintendent of Education, and Mrs. Harry Simon, of the State Child Welfare Department, emphasized the importance of these agencies and departments cooperating with the health department to a common end.

This county was represented at the conference by Dr. Hugh C. Nickson, County Health Officer; Nelle R. Davidson, County Nurse; and W. C. Evers, County Sanitation Officer.

Montevallo Crossing Among Bids Asked

Advertisements for bids on overhead grade crossing projects to cost $429,700 were released late Monday by the Alabama Highway Commission, according to Associated Press dispatches from Montgomery.

Bids will be opened August 14 and are for projects included in Alabama's $8,000,000 allotment for highway and grade crossing under the $4,000,000,000 works progress program.

Among the bids advertised was an overpass at Montevallo over the Southern Railway to cost $87,000.

DANCE SATURDAY, AUGUST 10

Make your plans NOW to attend the dance at the Columbiana Airport, August 10. A good time is assured.

ADULT EDUCATION PROGRAM IS BEING ATTENDED BY 500

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—Five hundred students in the adult education program, in addition to the regular college enrollment, are at Alabama College for the second Summer term. Representing every section of the state, they are being trained in a variety of fields for instruction of adult classes in the Fall.

Judson Snead, of the State Department of Education, is directing the program in cooperation with committees from the college and the department. Dr. M. L. Orr is chairman of the Alabama College committee.

The required courses include general education for adults and a course of methods in this connection. The former embraces adult psychology, organization of adult classes and methods and plans for special development meetings. It is being taught by H. G. Dowling, superintendent of education in Tuscaloosa County.

FARMERS ASSURED OF 12-CENT LOANS ON THEIR COTTON

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Senator John H. Bankhead, of Alabama, last Thursday, July 25, said the Government would lend cotton farmers at least 12 cents and possibly 13 cents a pound on this year's crop.

He said official announcement would be made as soon as the Agricultural Adjustment Administration amendment bill reaches the President.

"The Administration is prepared at least to sustain last year's purchasing power for the cotton farmers and to protect the cotton now under Government loan by making a loan on this year's crop," Bankhead said.

"That loan cannot be less than 12 and it is hoped that it will be 13 cents. Announcement has been withheld pending the continuance by Congress of the Bankhead act. That is being continued in the AAA amendments.

"It is reported that buyers of cotton goods have largely with-drawn from the market because they believe there is a prospect for cheaper cotton and cheaper textile goods. This is without justification. No one need expect cheaper cotton nor cheaper cotton goods this season, but on the contrary textile buyers should recognize that the price is now probably at its lowest point."

Summer School Closes At Shelby County Hi

The Summer session of the Shelby County High School closed here last Friday and reports shown indicate that a very good record and attendance was prevalent. Prof. J. M. Lawson gives the students of this school the recommendations possible as to attendance and work.

Heart Drifts

L'ENVOI
Rudyard Kipling

When earths' last picture is painted, and the tubes are twisted and dried,
When the oldest colors have faded, and the youngest critic has died,
We shall rest, and faith, we shall need it—lie down for on aeon or two,
'Till the Master of All Good Workmen shall set us to work anew!

And those that were good will be happy; they shall sit in a golden chair;
They shall splash at a ten-league canvas with brushes of comets' hair;
They shall find real saints to draw from—Magdalene, Peter and Paul;
They shall work for an age at a sitting and never be tired at all!

And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;
But each for the joy of working, and each, in his separate star,
Shall draw the Thing as he sees It for the God of things as They are!

DOORS.

Some doors have hearts, it seems to me,
They open so invitingly;
You feel they are quite kind—akin,
To all the warmth they find within.

Some doors so weather beaten, grey,
Swing open in a listless way,
As if they wish you had not come—
Their stony silence leaves you dumb.

Some classic doors stand closed and barred,
As if their beauty might be marred
If any sought admittance there,
Save King or Prince or Millionaire.

Oh, may mine be a Friendly door;
May all who cross the threshold o'er,
Within, find sweet content and rest,
And know each was a welcome guest.

State Farmers Receive $8,594,693 From U. S.

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama farmers received $8,594,693.71 in rental and benefit payments from July 1, 1934, through May 31, 1935, reports Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the state extension service. Cotton farmers were paid $8,145,224.97 and corn-hog farmers $447,525.15.

25 MILLION WILL BE SPENT IN TEACHING PLANTERS SCIENCE

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Ninety-one new "demonstration areas" to teach farmers how to protect their crops from flood and drouth are planned by the soil conservation service of the Department of Agriculture.

Officials said the location of the projects, which will augment 40 now in existence in 32 states, will be announced soon.

Each project will consist of a watershed area of about 25,000 acres in which owners of farm land, with the aid of government engineers and agronomists, will make surveys and then institute methods intended to halt erosion and conserve fertile topsoil.

Farmers will be introduced to such things as "contour planting," "buffer-strips," proper placement of drainage ditches, check-dams and terracing.

Recent floods in New York State, as well as those last Spring in parts of Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, have convinced bureau officials that millions of dollars in annual crop losses can be averted, H. H. Bennett, soil conservation chief, said.

Soil conservationists took photographs after the New York State floods showing how one farmer's potato field was ruined by deposits of shale from the rushing waters while another's, properly located and protected by conservation methods, escaped.

Officials of the service first photograph a project from the air, and then make contour maps and studies to determine how erosion and floods can be checked. With farmer-owners furnishing as much of the labor as possible, the land then is terraced and drained, and planting planned to prevent the creation of gullies and provide harmless outlets for waste waters.

The engineers have determined that planting along the contour lines of a hillside, with occasional "buffer-strips" of oats, materially aids in preventing top-soil loss.

Established two years ago, the bureau has spent $14,000,000 so far in conservation instruction. The new projects will be financed through a $25,000,000 slice of the work relief fund.

STATE MERCHANTS CONVENTION, WILL BE HELD IN AUGUST

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Again, as for eighteen years past, Birmingham will be host to thousands of retail merchants, many with their families, from all parts of the state and adjacent communities, expected to arrive for the Nineteenth Annual Convention of the Alabama Merchants Association, August 21 and 22.

And again, as in former years, the Executive Committee of the Wholesale Merchants and Manufacturers Division of the Chamber of Commerce, with James C. Lee as Chairman, will be "host" to the convention, and M. J. Roberson has been chosen as General Chairman of all committees arranging the details for the convention, with George Bellsnyder as Vice-Chairman.

Members of the Executive Committee of wholesalers and manufacturers who will entertain the convention, in addition to Chairman Lee, are: T. A. McGough, Murray Brown, W. A. Currie, William Morris Given, J. Chap Hodges, F. M. Jackson, Jr., M. R. Norton, J. C. O'Dell, George Phillips and S. J. Price.

Details for the convention are already being worked out by various convention committee chairman including: F. M. Jackson Jr., Finance; J. F. (Jimmie) Jones, Entertainment; John Cole, Registration; Harry Todd, Publicity; Joe Overton, Welcome; and Dave Wood, Invitation.

Registration headquarters will be at the Municipal Auditorium, where a large mass meeting will also be held, but group meetings and business session will be held at the Tutwiler Hotel. With more than 5,000 merchants registered last year from all sections of the state and adjacent voints, still greater throngs are looked for this year in view of the generally improved conditions in many sections, and the arrangements for their reception and entertainment will therefore be on a correspondingly larger and more elaborate scale, with all forms of entertainment absolutely free to the thousands of expected visitors.

The program of entertainment provided free for this convention is much "different" from the customary routine, but will prove a two days real "fun-fest", in addition to a beauty show, also a floor show in connection with the annual grand ball, a famoos orchestra and band, and a number of imported vaudeville acts, with a large array of "surprise" features added.

J. Ed Wallis, of Sylacauga, is this year's president of the Alabama Merchants Association, and the other officers are: P. W. Stockton, Guntersville, First Vice-President; George T. Walker, Kennedy, Second Vice-President; W. T. Wells, Trade Promotion Director of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, Secretary, and M. R. Norton, Birmingham, Treasurer.

June Is Busy Month For Farmers & FHA

WASHINGTON, D. C.—More business was transacted with the farmers under the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration during the month of June than any other month of its existence.

More than 1600 farm modernization credit loans were extended thru financial institutions approved by the Administration during the month. This was a gain of approximately 300 over the number of loans extended during May.

The June credits totaled $663,503.50. Since the inception of the modernization credit plan, 7,589 farm loans have been made totaling $3,114,419.09.

California led the United States during the month of June with 307 credits extended in the amount of $145,272.80. New York was second with 157 credits totaling $66,961.93 and Michigan was fourth with 96 credits totaling $31,237.

Arizona, which was third, rose from three loans extended during February, 1935, to 114 during June. In February the loans averaged $356.48 each and in June the average for each credit extended was $403.84.

President's Way of Ending Virgin Islands Row Arouses Criticism—Senator Black Probes for Truth About Utilities Cigar Box.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

THAT row over the administration of the Virgin islands was so unpleasant that President Roosevelt felt impelled to settle it himself. So he removed from office the two chief battlers, Gov. Paul M. Pearson and Judge T. Webber Wilson, had other jobs found for them, and nominated as Pearson's successor Lawrence W. Cramer, who was serving as lieutenant governor of St. Croix island. Confirmation of this appointment was not immediate. The senate committee investigating the islands affairs was slow in making up its mind about Cramer, and from St. Thomas came the news that the foes of the Pearson administration there, together with a delegation from St. Croix, were protesting vigorously against the President's selection of a new governor.

L. W. Cramer

The Emancipator, opposition paper, said editorially:

"The islanders would about as soon have Pearson, for under Cramer no change of policy can be expected. Poor and unknown as the humble people of the Virgin islands may be, they are entitled to an example of honor and courage from the President of the American Republic."

The disposal of Pearson and Wilson also aroused criticism in Washington. The former had been attacked steadily by Pat Harrison of Mississippi and other Democratic senators, but Secretary of the Interior Ickes had defended him warmly, so he was given a job under Ickes, being made assistant director of housing in the PWA at $8,000 a year, a place not previously filled.

In order to provide a job for Judge Wilson, a former congressman from Mississippi and a protege of Senator Harrison, a woman was forced off the federal parole board. Attorney General Cummings requested and obtained the resignation of Dr. Amy A. Stannard, a psychiatrist who has been in the government service 12 years with a civil service status and had been a member of the parole board since 1930. Wilson was sworn in as her successor. Since Wilson's qualifications for the place appeared to be chiefly political, observers in Washington noted sadly that the parole board was getting back into political hands.

WHAT was in the cigar box wrapped in a newspaper? That is what Senator Hugo Black, chairman of the senate lobby committee, wanted to know. Before the committee for questioning was John W. Carpenter of Dallas, president of the Texas Power and Light company. He admitted freely that he and other utility men had hotel conferences, dinners and a trip down Chesapeake bay with congressmen during the fight over the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, and that he himself had centered his efforts on Texas congressmen. But of the mysterious box he could or would tell nothing. Black probed and probed, and finally asked:

Senator Black

"Do you still say that in the morning (of the day before the vote on the utilities bill 'death sentence') you didn't give a congressman a box wrapped up in a newspaper?"

Carpenter replied quietly: "I don't think I did, unless it was a few cigars."

Senate and house conferees met to consider the utility control bill, but there were small signs that they could get together, and one session ended abruptly in a real row. Two administration lobbyists, Benjamin Cohen and Dozier A. De Vane, were brought into the executive session by Senators Wheeler and Barkley and though Representative George Huddleston protested, their continued presence was insisted upon. Whereupon the fiery Alabama congressman and his fellows from the house walked out and broke up the meeting. Cohen is generally given credit for writing the measure.

After leaving the committee room, Huddleston said flatly that the house conferees woud not recede from the position that the "death sentence" must be eliminated.

OPPONENTS of the AAA amendments designed to strengthen the powers of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace decided to let the basic act go up to the Supreme court, so the administration bill was passed by the senate with only 15 adverse votes.

Both Republican and conservative Democratic foes of the AAA are confident that the Supreme court will hold the basic act unconstitutional and an early test is assured by a senate amendment permitting suits to recover processing taxes that have not been passed on to producers or consumers. One of the major purposes of the amendments was to close the courts, but the senate rejected this scheme by a vote of 41 to 23. As a result, the Hoosack Mills case, in which the Boston Circuit Courts of Appeals held the AAA unconstitutional, will not be thrown out and the highest tribunal will have a chance to pass upon it.

Amid so much adverse criticism, the action of the Midwest farm leaders gathered in Chicago must have been soothing to Mr. Wallace. Resolutions were passed praising the secretary and congressional leaders for their efforts in behalf of "agricultural equality."

The farm leaders urged senate approval for the commodity exchange bill, passed by the house, and asked re-establishment of the Pacific Northwest Wheat Export corporation under the AAA to prevent wheat surpluses in that area from competing with Midwest wheat and other grains.

The meeting voiced opposition to the plans for transportation co-ordination, suggesting farmers would profit more by competition among carriers.

PERMANENT federal control of the liquor business is provided for in a bill which was passed by the house and sent to the senate with prospects of early adoption by that body. The measure, which creates within the treasury a new agency to be known as the federal alcohol administration, was asked by the President to replace the FACA killed by the Supreme court's NRA decision. Mr. Roosevelt wanted the new agency to be an independent office, but the house decided otherwise.

IMMEDIATE convocation of the League of Nations council to deal with the Italo-Ethiopian question was demanded by Haile Selassie, emperor of Ethiopia. On his behalf the demand was telegraphed to the league secretariat at Geneva by Tacla Hawariat, Ethiopian minister to France and delegate to the league. He insisted that the council proceed to the examination of the situation under article XV of the league covenant, Ethiopia invoking this article because of the "threat to her independence from Italy."

Emperor Haile Selassie

British dispatches said Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin and leading members of his cabinet were believed to favor full league action, if other nations agreed, as a last resort to avert the threatened conflict. Diplomatic quarters in London heard that the British government probably would alter its policy and permit the export of arms to Ethiopia. The emperor's new minister there, W. C. Martin, had a conference at the foreign office and came out smiling happily but saying nothing.

Previously Mr. Martin had admitted that Ethiopia was short not only of arms but also of money.

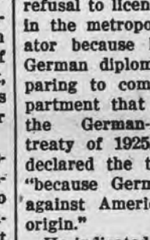
"At the moment we have very little money," he said. "I am doing all that is possible to raise loans in London, but thus far I have not met with a great measure of success."

PARTIAL investigation of the milk industry by the federal trade commission was said to have revealed deplorable conditions and the administration asked for $200,000 to continue the inquiry. The senate committee in considering the deficiency appropriation bill cut out that item altogether, but when the measure came before the senate Duffy of Wisconsin moved an amendment adding the sum asked. After a hot debate this was approved by a vote of 51 to 18 and the bill was then passed. The numerous senate amendments had added a total of more than $80,000,000 to the house measure, so the $306,000,000 bill was sent to conference.

FARMERS in the Middle West, ready to harvest their crops, found they couldn't get hands to do the work. The idle men ordinarily counted on for this were on the relief rolls and declined offers of farm labor for two reasons: The wages paid by the farmers were less than the sums received from the relief organization or for government works, and if the men once went off the dole they feared they would have trouble getting back there when the harvest was over. The situation was desperate and emergency relief commissions were urged to take action. This they did in the states affected and it was announced the "revolt" was under control.

The Illinois commission stopped all relief works in the rural areas until after harvest. In Kansas persons refusing any temporary employment were removed from the relief rolls. In Nebraska 26 counties were cut off from federal relief allotments and in 15 others the allotments were cut in half.

In nearly a score of Iowa counties officials denied relief and able-bodied men on relief rolls were admonished to accept employment in the harvest fields.



In North Dakota all but specialized projects were halted and the state administrator announced that as soon as the harvest was over the new works progress administration would take care of unemployables.

CHESTER C. DAVIS, AAA administrator, and his fellow officials were greviously shocked when they were shown this classified real estate advertisement in the Globe of Joplin, Mo.:

"Dandy way to make money: Buy this 13 acres for hog raising. Sign up with the government to not raise, say, 500 hogs. It will pay you $1,000. That will pay for the acres and have some left."

"It's preposterous!" exploded Mr. Davis. "It's at least preliminary to fraud. It's deliberate misrepresentation and not in any way possible. I shall begin an investigation at once."

DETERMINATION of the Nazis to put an end to "political Catholicism" in Germany and their consequent drive against Catholic youth organizations may bring on results more serious even than has the Nazi anti-semitism. General Goering, head of the secret police, gave out a warning to Catholic priests to be careful in their comments from the pulpit, and Franz Guertner, minister of justice, issued a decree threatening prosecution for any priest violating Goering's injunction. Throughout the country generally the Catholic clergy was cautious, but in Freiburg, Baden, where the Goering order had not been published before Sunday, the priests read in their pulpits a letter from the episcopate calling the Nazi action a violation of the concordat with the Vatican. To this charge the Nazis reply that the Catholics were the first to violate the concordat by making attacks on the Hitler youth movement in their parish papers.

Franz Guertner

This new "purge" by the Nazis includes a renewed crusade against the Jews and dissolution of the Steel Helmets, veterans' organization, in various provinces. The Jews are helpless and, if Julius Streicher has his way, will be all driven out of Berlin or segregated in ghettos. But the Steel Helmets, whose chief is Minister of Labor Franz Seldte, are likely to cause the Hitler government a lot of trouble. The organization's weekly paper is using language that is not often heard in Germany these days, and Seldte is demanding the reason for suppression of the local divisions.

MAYOR LA GUARDIA of New York has created an international incident all by himself. He backed up License Commissioner Paul Moss in his refusal to license one "Mr. K" to work in the metropolis as a massage operator because he is a German. The German diplomatic officials were preparing to complain to the State department that the city was violating the German-American commercial treaty of 1925. But Mr. La Guardia declared the treaty is null and void "because Germany has discriminated against American citizens of Jewish origin."

He indicated that not even the State department can force him to back down.

"This order shall be carried out until such time as we are directed to do otherwise by the courts," he said.

The German question also threatened to come up in the senate, for Senator King of Utah said he would ask an investigation to determine whether the United States would be warranted in "severing diplomatic relations" with Germany.

THAT wholly un-American procedure, the general strike, was tried out by organized labor in Indiana and the 67,000 inhabitants of Terre Haute were deprived of all food supplies. The local authorities of Vigo county called on the governor for help and Mr. McNutt promptly ordered 14 companies of the National Guard to the scene. Brig. Gen. Wray De Prez, in command, promised the merchants who had been bullied into shutting their shops would be given protection, and said his first endeavor would be to restore the milk and ice service. This had been cut off even from hospitals.

The general strike was called by 48 unions without warning, because labor leaders had been unable to reach an agreement with the Columbian Enameling and Stamping company. Some 600 of that concern's employees went on strike in March and the plant was closed down, but the union leaders thought it was about to be reopened by strikebreakers.

Conciliators from the Department of Labor arrived and within 48 hours the general strike collapsed and was called off by the union officials in charge. The strike at the stamping company, however, continued in effect and several times the troops were forced to use tear gas bombs to disperse riotous mobs.

Terre Haute merchants estimated that the two days' strike cost them at least half a million dollars. The state spent probably $50,000 in maintaining order by use of the troops. The state federation of labor asserted the sympathy walkout was unauthorized.

DROPPING all their rebellious indignation, the Democrats of the house did everything the administration wished in considering the social security bill as altered by the senate. The conferees had settled all differences after two weeks of hard work, but one of the amendments they accepted was that permitting private pension systems to function under the measure. The majority members of the house were informed that President Roosevelt was opposed to this, so they refused to accept it. The senate would not permit the elimination of the amendment, so back to conference went the bill.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—No one knows where the figure of $340,000,000—first mentioned in connection with the President's tax proposal as the amount certain schedules would raise—came from. But it is no secret that while no clever work had been done in figuring the returns, for they were obviously wrong, the figure did mean something.

What the figure meant was the estimate of a certain brain truster, now very much in the saddle, of what the treasury needed each year in addition to present revenues.

The reason the figures were so far wrong, in fixing the amount which those mysterious levies would raise (for no one has ever admitted parenthood for the figures either) was that the administration, after working out the schedules, did not ask the treasury to put its experts on them. The reason for this was not an oversight, but the fact that Treasury Secretary Morgenthau had just expressed himself in such vigorous terms against the tax proposals being made at that time that the brain trusters who had won the President's approval hesitated to ask him.

But let no one be deceived about the significance of the figures, despite the discrepancy that the rates mentioned do not produce the $340,000,000.

The rates were not imagined by enterprising newspaper reporters. Nor was the $340,000,000. Both were conceived inside the administration and formally given out.

The only advantage of the denials is that the administration is now free to produce an entirely different set of rates, and an entirely different total, and insist that these new figures represent carefully worked out studies of the problem. While the Republicans can never prove that the first figures were official.

Want More Taxes

All of which is only important politically. Actually what is important is that certain trusted and at the moment successful advisers to the President believe the treasury should have $340,000,000 a year more in taxes than are now coming in. Also—this opinion was held prior to the avalanche of decisions against AAA processing taxes.

If you will examine the highest scale of taxes on which Morgenthau reported to the house ways and means committee, and then boost the whole level by about one-fourth, the taxes would represent the treasury judgment on what is needed to make up for (1) the present deficiency in revenue as seen by certain very potent—in influence with the President—brain trusters, and (2) the loss of processing tax revenue.

This is not a prediction that any such rates will be enacted. The President has no idea of going anything like that far. He never did. His original idea was to increase taxes only on very large incomes, and impose levies on very large inheritances and gifts. Also to boost corporation taxes by the sliding scale aimed at bigness.

It is perfectly true that the sliding scale corporation tax is frankly regarded by insiders as just an opening wedge. That the ultimate objective is to make the taxes on large corporations so heavy as to make it advisable for many of them to dissolve, and certainly for no more mergers to be considered.

But at the time of his proposal the President had no idea of irritating as many people as would be hit, and hit hard, by any tax program which would raise the amount of money needed. Not this year, or next!

New Day in Politics

Maybe Business will come to a realization that there is a new day in American politics as well as a New Deal in Washington in time to save itself, but it is about an even bet.

It appeared some months back that the public utilities, long politically the most stupid aggregation of successful men in other fields in America, had learned at least the elemental rules of the new game. But even this demonstration does not seem to have had much effect on other business men.

The immediate case in point is the administration drive against bigness, exemplified in the sliding scale tax on corporation income. If it were just a boost in taxes no one except perhaps the immediate taxpayers would be interested. But its avowed object is a "better social order."

Which means that the sliding scale idea is just the opening wedge—that the present proposed top rate—if the administration has its way—is only the beginning—that the eventual object is to make little ones out of big ones.

And "big ones" does not just mean a few enormous corporations such as United States Steel, General Motors, American Telephone, etc. It includes virtually every corporation big enough to have its stock listed on the New York Stock exchange list. Or on the Curb, for that matter.

The highest proposed rate, 17½ per cent, applies on all corporate income in excess of $20,000,000. But the next lowest rate, 17 per cent, includes all corporations with incomes in excess of $1,000,000. Actually, for all the talk of taxes being reduced on "small" corporations, only those with incomes below $40,000 a year have their taxes reduced. And even that reduction is trifling.

In making this sweeping determination of policy President Roosevelt, though this may be denied officially, ignored the advice of both Treasury Secretary Morgenthau and Brain Truster Moley. It represents a complete triumph for the Brandeis-Frankfurter left wing branch of the New Deal.

Using Wrong Tactics

Whereupon Business, following the tactics of long ago, attempts to fight it through the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, neither of which can scare a representative from a doubtful district, or worry a New York senator.

Just why Business in general does not take a leaf from the amazing success which attended the letter writing campaign of public utility stockholders is hard to figure. Not because this letter writing campaign really did the utilities much good. The final bill is tough enough on the holding companies almost to suit Roosevelt.

The significant fact is that this letter writing campaign resulted in a 110 majority in the house of representatives for precisely what the letter writers demanded. The fact that the letter writers did not demand enough really to save their bacon is not of consequence in this connection. They got what they asked for—from the house.

Enough of them, obviously, can get what they want any time—if they make it clear enough, and in time. A couple of hundred excited stockholders living in one congressman's district can scare him to death. But he pays no attention whatever to the national associations. His only concern is votes in his district.

This was not so important up to the new day. In the days when bosses controlled states, Big Business operated through them.

Why Ickes Worries

"We have only two unemployed persons, and they have been unemployed for 30 years."

That crushing answer, made by the little town of Colebrook, way up in northwestern Connecticut, near the Massachusetts line, is one of the reasons why Harold L. Ickes' gray hair is getting thinner. Why the public works part of his activities seems to be bogging down. Why some administration officials are wondering if it would not have been better—providing, of course, the White House had thought of it first—to let Carter Glass of Virginia, Alva Adams of Colorado and other senators have their way about substituting two billions of doles for four billions of work relief.

But that is not the only problem which is worrying Secretary of the Interior Ickes—and the White House—and which is illustrated by Colebrook.

When the word first got round that Colebrook could have a big grant of federal money for a fine new road there was much excitement round and about the village. The progressive element was all for it. It would mean the spending of money—and prosperity.

But opposition was not slow in showing its head. The handful of merchants might want more customers, but the summer residents did not want a lot of workmen messing the place up. Again the merchants might like the idea of a fine new through road, that would cause many auto tourists to stop off, make purchases, at least buy meals. But the folks who have been the mainstay of the community for a generation, living up there on money made elsewhere, did not want the tourists trouping through, did not want the flavor of the old community "spoiled," in short wanted to keep things just as they were.

But the Progressives did not give up. They kept on fighting. Then suddenly it was discovered that the money so kindly tendered by Mr. Ickes would involve using a new road plan approved by the state highway commission. This would necessitate cutting a corner off the beautiful and historic old church which is the center of the whole Colebrook legend.

Didn't Like It

Even the progressive element didn't like that. But they did not give up. And they might have won their fight at that, and Mr. Ickes might have purred over another "soundly placed" public works project. But there was more trouble to come, the sort of trouble that is always magnified in exactly inverse ratio to the size of a community—the agonized yelps of taxpayers afraid of higher assessments!

For it was suddenly realized by these gentlemen—and ladies, for there are a lot of widows owning property around Colebrook, that Uncle Sam was only giving 45 per cent of the money. Fifty-five per cent would have to be raised by the local taxpayers. In short that there would have to be a bond issue, and they would have to pay the interest and sinking fund for this issue for the next 15 or 20 years. For the rest of their lives, as most of them saw it.

All for what?

To have a new road through their township, which would bring in tourists which only the merchants wanted, that would bring a flock of "aliens" in to work on the road, and destroy the simple pastoral touch of which the community boasts, and finally would chop off a corner of their historic church. And only two unemployed persons in the township, neither of whom, opponents confidently asserted, could be induced to so much as look at a pick or shovel in connection with the new work.

So the town suddenly discovered that Connecticut had a long and prideful history of independence, that it was not becoming for Colebrook, proud of its own and Nutmeg traditions, to accept charity from the federal government. And the proposal was turned down.

"Mossbacks," said the progressives.

"Patriots," said the summer residents.

SOCIAL WAR RAGES AROUND FAVOR OF PRINCE OF WALES

Baltimore Belle Is Ousted as Chief Woman Friend of British Heir.

Paris.—Ever since the assassination of King Ferdinand of Yugoslavia on French soil last year, whenever a European king or prince visits another country, his footsteps are followed by detectives.

If it hadn't been for the detectives dogging the movements of the prince of Wales on his recent trip to Budapest, the world would still be ignorant of the identity of his latest confidante and constant companion, the American-born countess of Carrick, mother of four, and bearer of one of the best and oldest titles in England.

Prefers Americans.

Unlike his famous grandfather, King Edward VII, who went in for Frenchwomen in a big way, Wales prefers females who hail from the land of the Stars and Stripes.

The last three to capture his royal fancy have all been Americans—Viscountess Furness, twin sister of Mrs. Reggie Vanderbilt; Mrs. Ernest ("Wally") Simpson, ex-belle of Baltimore, and last, but not least, the countess of Carrick, who before her marriage in 1930 was plain Marion C. Donaghue of Philadelphia.

The friendships of the prince of Wales have already caused one bitter feminine war—between Lady Furness and Mrs. Wally Simpson. A new one, between the latter and her titled successor, as the prince's favorite dancing partner, is likely to flare into the open any moment—so the continental gossips aver.

Viscountess Furness became No. 1 woman friend in Wales' life about seven years ago. It was rumored he even gave up hunting—and falling off horses—substituting golf as safer, as a result of her entreaties.

During her reign, Thelma's twin sister, Gloria, and many of her New York friends were invited to hob-nob with the prince on terms of intimacy and equality, among them being her childhood pal, Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, married to a retired British army officer.

Always Together.

Thelma returned from a vacation voyage to Bermuda with a beautiful tan, and a song in her heart, to find that the place next the prince at dinner was being given to the former Baltimore belle.

Mrs. Simpson had a grand time while it lasted. Everywhere that Wally went her Wales was sure to go—and vice versa.

She swam with the prince in the "Chambre d'Amour" pool in Biarritz, she had a special seat at the Westminster abbey nuptials of his brother, the duke of Kent, to Princess Marina, last November.

In Budapest she met her Waterloo, in the shape of the comely countess of Carrick, also a member of the royal party.

The secret Hungarian police shadowing the incognito British heir, who was hiding behind one of his many titles, "Earl of Chester," were the first outsiders to realize that David has undergone another change of heart. Wally was the wallflower, the countess, the new No. 1 favorite.

Yeggmen Leave Note of Thanks in Wrecked Safe

Hammond, Ind.—Bandits broke into the George Rogers Clark high school in Robertsdale, shattered the safe and stole $380.

Later R. B. Miller, principal, received a postcard from the robbers.

"Thank you very much," the card read.

The letters in the message had been clipped from newspapers and magazines to conceal the identity of the senders.

Barber Cuts Hair Too Cheaply; Nazis Fine Him

Harburg-on-the-Elbt. — Hein Stower, owner of a barber shop, paid heavily for having cut the hair of his fellow citizens too cheaply. He was fined 500 marks, approximately $200, by a Nazi court of honor of his trade for having charged only 35 pfennigs, or about 14 cents for a hair cut. The court ruled that Hein's cheap prices constituted "unfair competition."

Bride's Dowry Is Gift of Coffin to Bridegroom

Peiping. — Eight professional pall bearers were required to carry the strange dowry of the seventy-seven-year-old bride of an eighty-eight year-old bridegroom. It was a heavy and finely carved coffin and received the praise of the crowds who lined the village streets of Fengjun to watch it pass.

Cat Missing Five Years Returns to Old Home

Delaware, Ohio.—It took a Persian cat five years to learn that there is no place like home—but it did. The feline disappeared from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rosecrans, of Ashley, in 1930. It returned the other day, and by a broken tail was identified.

Sentenced to Spanking

Chester, Pa.—Sentences that they be spanked by parents were meted out to three boys and an eleven-year-old girl when they were arraigned before Magistrate Robert McBride on charges of "borrowing" an automobile.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, now twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to his sisters" consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly by Mrs. Chipps and her guests. At a roadhouse Gail sees a raccoon-coated man helping Ariel into a roadster.

She stopped fiercely, as Gail merely sat, silent. From vague worry and apprehension about Ariel, suddenly the whole fearful danger had sprung upon her. This morning it had been no more than fear; now it was full knowledge.

"You weren't in San Francisco with the Camps, then?"

"Oh, yes, I was! We went down from there."

"Where was Mrs. Camp?"

"She had to go to San Rafael. She left us at the Fairmont."

"Just you two girls? Did she know you went out that night?"

"We didn't tell her—no."

There was a pause. Then Gail said, "Ariel, I can't believe it!"

"You were there," Ariel offered accusingly.

"Oh, I know it!" Gail covered her face with her hands.

For the first time the younger sister seemed a little impressed, and she spoke in a lower tone, a tone that had some hint of huskiness or of apology in it.

"If it makes it any—better, we all thought that was a horrible place and that we'd never go there again!"

"You haven't been there before?"

Ariel could even laugh.

"Oh, goodness, no! We just happened, we happened— Here, I'll tell you how it was!" She leaned forward, locking her hands about her knees. "Mrs. Camp and Dorothy were going in to the city on the ten o'clock yesterday morning, to do some shopping and stay overnight, because Mrs. Camp wanted to hear some one preaching at church this morning. See? So they asked me to go, and Mrs. Camp was going to see her aunt in San Rafael, so she said that Dot and I could have lunch together, and go see a movie. Well, at about five we were back at the hotel cleaning up, and she telephoned and said that her aunt was so sick she was going to stay in San Rafael, and we could get four Orpheum seats and ask two boys to go with us. So we were sort of telephoning around for boys, and we got Buddy Raisch and his roadster. Well, that was about all there was to it! Buddy said we could get a grand shore dinner at Mockerson's about ten, if we went to the movie first. But I didn't realize it was forty miles away, and that it would be so foggy."

The horror that had held Gail in a vise since midnight of the night before began to loosen and fade; she could breathe again.

"So you went back to the Fairmont?"

"Certainly we did!"

"What time did you get there?"

"About one."

Gail reflected a few minutes, the heavy dark Lawrence brows drawn together in a frown.

"Ariel, you're only seventeen. Do you think men respect a girl who goes about with them at all hours of night, unchaperoned, to places like that? Don't you want men to respect you?" she asked.

"I want to have a good time," Ariel said simply. "Men aren't looking for good, pure, womanly women these days, and don't you fool yourself that they are, Gail! Men want girls to run around with them, and not to be afraid of being kissed—"

"Stop, you make me sick!" the older sister said sharply.

"Well, it's true. How many men do you know who are going after girls like Ede—paying calls, discussing ideals? Not one!"

"And you think," Gail began, warming, "you think you can build a lovely, dignified married life on running around to places like Mockerson's?"

"No, I don't," Ariel responded promptly, in the pause. "But I say it's the only way you can have a good time, and I want to live, while I'm young!"

"Just the same, you're not right, Ariel," Gail persisted. "Honor is what—well, what it always was—and dignity and self-control. If we turn ourselves into animals, we only have to work our way back to decency, sooner or later. Gluttony in food isn't any more expensive than—than developing appetities for—for—other things—"

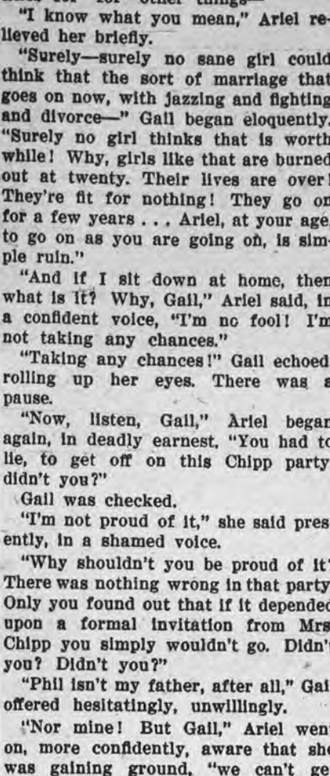
"I know what you mean," Ariel relieved her briefly.

"Surely—surely no sane girl could think that the sort of marriage that goes on now, with jazzing and fighting and divorce—" Gail began eloquently. "Surely no girl thinks that is worth while! Why, girls like that are burned out at twenty. Their lives are over! They're fit for nothing! They go on for a few years . . . Ariel, at your age, to go on as you are going on, is simple ruin."

"And if I sit down at home, then what is it? Why, Gail," Ariel said, in a confident voice, "I'm no fool! I'm not taking any chances."

"Taking any chances!" Gail echoed, rolling up her eyes. There was a pause.

"Now, listen, Gail," Ariel began again, in deadly earnest. "You had to lie, to get off on this Chipp party, didn't you?"



Gail was checked.

"I'm not proud of it," she said presently, in a shamed voice.

"Why shouldn't you be proud of it? There was nothing wrong in that party. Only you found out that if it depended upon a formal invitation from Mrs. Chipp you simply wouldn't go. Didn't you? Didn't you?"

"Phil isn't my father, after all," Gail offered hesitatingly, unwillingly.

"Nor mine! But Gail," Ariel went on, more confidently, aware that she was gaining ground, "we can't get away from it, we can't have any fun here unless we take chances! Nobody could get away with anything in this town! Just as soon as I can I'm going to get out, and I advise you to! Why, what does it matter," she rushed on—"what does it matter what Van Murchison wants—how much he wants to fool around, how young a kid he is?

This Man Was Far From Thoughts of Marriage.

He's rich, he's going to take his wife East, and abroad. What do you care about the rest? You don't want to change him, you want to marry him. Let him be giddy—Phil said he was giddy. Let him be wasteful and frivolous if he wants to be! What is it to you? He gets you out of Clippersville, and away from these gossiping old busy bodies!"

The river of words dazed and terrified Gail. This could not be delicate, ethereal Ariel, pouring out this coarse and dangerous philosophy of life or of death! Ariel, whom they had all thought young, innocent, protected, confessing her determination to grab the first man she could, and escape—escape from Clippersville.

Most terrible of all to Gail was her little sister's easy air of conspiracy, her casual quick assumption that they were both in the same boat. Gail was frantic with alarm. If she told Philip there would be domestic pandemonium, and if she did not, she herself must assume a most appalling responsibility.

Perhaps if she could get Ariel to promise—to swear . . .

In the end there were no reproaches, no threats. She slid to her knees beside Ariel's bed, and locked Ariel's hand in her own and, after a long and solemn talk, they promised each other that there should be no more deceiving, no more clandestine parties, everything open and above board, between the two of them at least.

Gail felt oddly old, exhausted with emotion, tired from the confused impressions of these last brilliant, novel days, weak from the reaction from Ariel's revelations—yet she was strangely, deeply happy, too. Somehow, in the confession of their mutual adventures, the acknowledgment of their mutual desires, and dreams, she seemed to have come very close to Ariel today. The sense of her responsibility as Ariel's senior, of her big-sistership, was solemn upon her. She loved its weight.

"Not one of them—Edith, Gail, Ariel, Sam — is really self-supporting," thought Phil. "And Cass sends Lily nothing; she doesn't even know where he is! Lily and the three kids—Wuffy and Miles and Daniel. If she came here—if we were married—that'd mean there were nine of us here, eating three meals a day. Twenty-seven meals a day—G—d! Gail might raise the roof, too. She might get Edith and Ariel to fight. But what could they do?"

Ariel was not thinking. But her mind was washing idly about among the memories of the last 24 hours, and Buddy Raisch and his nerve, and that horrid, hard kiss that had been plastered against her delicate mouth when she had gotten out of the car at the Fairmont in the drifting, silent fogs of one o'clock this morning. She determined to have nothing more to do with him, roadster or no roadster. But she could not go on living in Clippersville. She hated this jay town and these jay people and this old house with a bitter hatred. There must be a way out!

Edith told herself complacently that all this was very nice. Here was Phil home at a time when he might have been with Lily Cass, which proved that his affair with her was over. Gail was getting on splendidly with her new and wealthy friends, and would undoubtedly marry Van Murchison. Ariel had had a lovely little-girl time with Dorothy. Everything was going beautifully.

"Ariel is smart about boys," Gail was thinking. Her cheek flushed as she remembered what Ariel had said. Gail herself had vaguely observed some lack—some essential thing missing in her friendship with Van. But it had been left for Ariel to put it into merciless words.

Was it true? Well, no, not entirely. There was some truth in it, of course. But if Van Murchison happened to be a light-hearted, unthinking, fun-loving boy, young for his years, and if Gail Lawrence was developed beyond hers, matured by responsibility and experience, that did not mean that they could not fall in love with each other. How could she demand more of him than he naturally gave? What attitude on her part would create in him a soberer, a more dependable mood, on which a woman might base real hopes and plans?

Thinking these thoughts, she did not feel quite the usual thrill when he came into the library a day or two later and stood, as he often did, with an elbow on the high desk, watching her amusedly as she stamped and scribbled in the shabby old books.

"Have you a good reference book on the diseases of hawk parasites?" the ringing voice said joyfully when she was free. There was no change in Gail's manner as she touched his big brown hand, but deep underneath she was conscious of change in herself.

This man was far from thoughts of marriage. By what twist, she wondered, did a girl bring her man from such irresponsible gaiety as this to the definiteness of an engagement?

An engagement began to seem to her an achievement, something quite extraordinary—a triumph. What a thing a girl accomplished when she could simply, complacently tell her friends that she and Tom So-and-so were going to be married!

Van wanted Gail to lunch with him today, and she reached for the telephone extension and told Edith that she would not come home as usual. It meant a pang to Edith, but it could not be helped.

But immediately after this Van suddenly turned scowling and gloomy and said that, no, hang it, he could not lunch with her after all.

"I'll tell you," he said, with his characteristic chuckle. "I promised a man at Beresford that I'd go and look at a puppy!"

Gail did not know quite what to say, feeling as she did a little dashed and perplexed by the sudden change of plan. She tried to feel fondly indulgent; he was only a boy, after all. But she had a sense of futility; there seemed no way of catching the slippery substance of him in her fingers.

"I'm sorry," he said.

"Oh, that's all right!"

"Say, let's go over and have lunch at Santa Cruz some Sunday, and swim? Can you swim?"

"I love it. Yes, we all swim." Mention of Santa Cruz reminded her of Mockerson's, and she wondered what Van would do if she told him her anxieties about Ariel. Would it develop anything new in him, responsibility, gravity? She could not do it now, but she liked to think about it.

He was gone. He was hunting amusement somewhere; that was all he wanted. Van was like a child looking for some one with whom to play.

Her thoughts were following him into the sunshiny June day. What fun to be Mrs. Murchison, white and cool and at leisure, there on the tilted leather seat beside him, and go and have lunch at the country club, and watch tennis, or perhaps play golf.

Anyway — anyway, she reflected, walking home to lunch, she was a good deal nearer to that envied position than any other girl in Clippersville! She had proved herself on that grilling week-end visit to Los Gatos quite the match of the women of Van's set; she had won them, in spite of themselves.

Edith was in the kitchen, ecstatic over Gail's unexpected appearance, and the addition of strawberries to her humble little meal.

They laughed together, gathering the dishes, cups, spoons into the dishpan, brushing crumbs, drawing shades.

"Did you make any date with him, Gail?"

"Nothing definite."

But nothing could be more satisfying outwardly than his pursuit of her, and Gail had to be content with that for awhile.

In a half-hearted, highly unsatisfactory sort of way Mrs. Chipp had asked Gail to Far Niente again, and this time everything had gone gloriously — breathlessly. There had been charades built on the Lawrence formula, there had been a hysterical game of Sardines that left even the grown-ups spent and agonized with laughter; some of these demigods had gone so far as to remember Van's little friend from the library in Clippersville, and had been gracious to her.

SOME years ago I visited the Minnedoka dam on the Snake river in Idaho. As one enters the white-tiled power house with its gigantic wheels turning silently, one wonders from where the power comes. Ushered into a gallery one looks down upon the water of the river, directed over a 40-foot dam dropping with tremendous noise. "Only one-fourth of the water goes over the dam," said our guide. "I'll show you where the rest goes."

Climbing a narrow stairway we stepped out on a balcony and to our surprise beheld a low, broad waterfall about 4 feet in height across the entire river, which was fairly wide at this point. "This," he said, "is the spillway!" An interesting sight it was to come out from that busy rushing water in the power house to this lazy water flowing smoothly over the spillway. "No use is made of this water over the spillway," he said, "its power is lost." Lost, thought I, because it gives no service—it is lazily selfish. Power comes through service, whether found in nature or human nature. If we would have power we must choose between selfishness and service.

He told us the power house generated enough electricity to heat and light all of the Northwest. If all the water of the Snake, including that which went over the spillway, were sent through the power house, he thought enough power could be generated to heat and light most of the states, west of the Mississippi river!

His words "over the spillway the power is lost," kept ringing in my ears. How like human life, I thought, as I stood on the balcony watching that beautiful indolent water glistening in the sunshine, gliding listlessly over the spillway. I wish for all youth that they might catch a vision, as I did in the power house that day, of the potentiality of human energies and their results when directed through the power house of character, education and self-control. Many young men and women would grow strong in leadership if they would voluntarily send all of their physical, emotional and intellectual capacities through the power house, conserving the power that is all too frequently lost over the spillway of indolence, indifference, selfishness and crime, in the growing years of the treacherous teen age.

"Effort is the price of everything" one statesman said. In fact, leadership of any kind comes costly; it is bought with sacrifice.

THREE POWERFUL KEYS

THE largest key I ever saw was the one used by the old custodian when he took me through the centuries-old gate of an old Danish castle. Since then, however, I have found three still more powerful keys, which anyone can possess if he wishes.

It is a known fact that as man creates his work, work in turn re-creates man. A modern essayist tells us that: "The working races of the world have been the victorious races; the non-working, the subject races. Wandering peoples have never developed highly political organizations, literature nor art." So there is more than a monetary comeback to work, and does the same for individuals as for nations.

Drive into your life job, do not drift into it. Carry three keys of power with you; they magically open locked doors, the keys of preparation, perseverance and purpose! From the lack of these, we find, in the human family, the idle, the unhappy, the unprepared, the misfits of the world! The same principles of character underlie all successful work of any kind, whether it be in the field of education, the professions or commerce. Success follows law, not luck—the law of preparation, perseverance, and high purpose. These all lie within ourselves, "effort is the price of everything." This is the most vocational experts can advise. You must do the rest.

The president of a large western university once asked a railroad magnate what special preparation he desired young men to have whom he employed. "I use no questionnaire methods," he said. "Give me the lad who has used his preparation to form superior mental habits, habits that ought to result from his university work, who has trained his mind to think straight, quickly, and we'll do the rest, for he will make good in any job we have."

There is a deeper purpose in life than merely earning a living. "Just good enough is not enough." A high purpose includes service, a contribution to the lives of others.

What a challenge to youth today to try the old world for themselves. If we are willing to prepare ourselves for our maximum capability (the first key), and to think what our job can give to others as well as ourselves, (the third key), our work will yield not only a cultural wage to us but a service to the world.

Try these keys of power—Preparation, Perseverance, and Purpose; they open locked doors!

POULTRY

EMPLOYS FANS TO CHILL WARM EGGS

Ohio Poultryman Finds Plan Is Worth While.

Supplied by the Ohio State University Agricultural Extension Service.

Fans are used by an Ohio poultryman, to cool eggs quickly in order to maintain quality.

The system, to be effective, the poultryman declares, must operate in a very humid room, otherwise the rapid circulation of air over the eggs quickly increases evaporation from the egg and enlarges the air cell.

Here follows a description of the method:

Over a cooling rack surrounded by damp burlap a down draft of cool, humid air is forced. Water for the burlap is supplied by a pan over the rack. In this pan the upper end of the burlap is immersed. The water then follows down the burlap, which acts as a wick.

To prevent growth of molds on the burlap, it is dipped into a solution of two ounces of copper sulfate in one gallon of water. The burlap is then wrung gently and dipped in a solution of eight ounces of washing soda in one gallon of water.

That the method is effective is proved by a report from the Wooster Egg Auction, where the poultryman mentioned sells his eggs. Before the system was installed, his eggs graded 32 per cent U. S. Extras and 68 per cent U. S. Standards. Afterwards his eggs graded 68 per cent U. S. Specials, the highest grade and 32 per cent U. S. Extras. None graded U. S. Standard.

First Eggs Index Size That Pullet Will Yield

The United States Department of Agriculture is authority for the statement that if a pullet's first ten eggs are weighed, the average weight of her future eggs can be determined. The average of the first ten eggs will be almost exactly seven-eighths of the average of the eggs for the year.

This information offers possibilities for poultry flock owners. Those who have neither the time nor the facilities to trapnest throughout the year might be able to arrange to do it for a few weeks during the fall, when the pullets are coming into production.

The research men of the department assure us that this rule is almost invariable, provided the following is true. First, that the pullets are receiving a well balanced and plentiful ration, and, second, that they have had an adequate ration since hatching.

People who are troubled with a lot of pee-wee eggs from their flocks can well afford to consider trapnesting for six weeks or two months.—Wallaces' Farmer.

Quality of Egg Shell

That the texture and strength of egg shell are affected by feed is a well known fact, states a writer in Wallaces' Farmer. The ration of a hen must contain enough mineral matter to supply the body needs as well as to furnish the lime needed for the manufacture of the shell. A laying hen needs a diet in which the lime bears a certain definite relationship to the phosphorus. This relationship need not be exact, but in general lime should constitute from 2 to 4 per cent of the ration, and phosphorus from one-half to 1.2 per cent. One should aim to feed a little more than twice as much lime as phosphorus.

Prevent Early Molting

A wet "fattening" mash is recommended by H. L. Wilcke, Iowa State college, for maintaining the body weight of laying hens, particularly the young pullets which are just coming into production. If the pullets have not become accustomed to eating the proper amount of scratch grain, they will lose weight and go into a partial or complete molt. A mash consisting of equal parts of ground corn and ground oats with skimmilk or buttermilk, fed at the rate of two pounds for each 100 birds, preferably at noon, should keep the young birds in good laying condition.

Laxative for Chicks

Pasting up in chicks is often mistaken for diarrhea when in reality it is the opposite, or constipation, O. J. Weisner, South Dakota poultry specialist, says. This condition can be helped by giving a mild laxative which can be made at small expense from one pint of blackstrap molasses to 16 quarts of water. The crude molasses used for feeding live stock can be used. It dissolves more readily in hot water. Use this mixture in place of water, thus forcing the chicks to drink it.

Preserving Eggs

Water glass is a well-known preservative, chemically designated silicate of soda, and is readily obtainable in either liquid or solid form. It is readily soluble and no special directions for preparing the preservative solution are necessary. Only perfectly fresh eggs should be used for preservation and the eggs should be completely immersed all the time until required for use. In storing, a temperature of 40 to 45 degrees Fahrenheit assists materially in retaining good flavor.

WHO GOT THE HAMS?

Among the many gifts showered on Calvin Coolidge when he was President, nothing seemed to give him more trouble than the big White House hams.

"They worried me most of all," he said to the friend who tells the story in Good Housekeeping Magazine:

"A big one would be brought to the table. Mrs. Coolidge would have a slice, and I'd have one. The butler would take it away, and what happened to it after that I never could find out."

Time Lost is Money Lost

It costs money to be sick. You see it directly if your pay envelope is short. You lose out on some important work if you live on a farm or if you are one of the few who are not docked for lost time. You can't afford to show up on the job unless you are feeling fit. The boss wants results—not excuses.

How many times do Gas on Stomach, Headache, Sour Stomach, "That Tired Feeling," That "Morning After" Feeling, Neuralgic, Rheumatic, Sciatic, Muscular or Periodic Pains keep you at home or interfere with your doing a full day's work?

All these troubles are caused or made worse by too much acid in your body. To correct this condition take

ALKA-SELTZER

The New Pain Relieving, Alkalizing, Effervescent Tablet.

It is called Alka-Seltzer because it makes a sparkling alkaline drink, and as it contains an analgesic (Acetyl-Salicylate) it first relieves the pain of everyday ailments and then by restoring the alkaline balance corrects the cause when due to excess acid. Alka-Seltzer is pleasant to take, harmless, non-laxative.

Why don't you try it? Get a drink at your drug store soda fountain for a nickel. Buy a package for home use.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

"To vacate or not to vacate" seems to be the question now uppermost in the minds of Columbiana residents. Those who have been basking in the Florida sunshine or summering in the mountains of the Carolinas are delighted to be back on Main Street—Tired but happy voyagers. Those of us who have not been fortunate enough to rate a vacation have found recreation right here—and when you think that this little burg is dull in the summer time, you are all wrong. There is something doing every minute if you have time to get around to it.

There is Type Writer Tapping to occupy busy fingers through the day, and at night—swimming parties, and steak frys at Yamakita. Moonlight picnics and fish suppers on old Man Coosa River. Dancing at the Airport, or Picture Show parties in the Wadesonian Theatre in Calera—or the Strand Theatre in Montevallo—diversion a plenty—A few bridge parties intersperse the afternoon hours when "napping" is too hectic. This may be the Pollyanna spirit attempting to "follow through", but it is my story, and I am sticking to it!

Mrs. Purnie Hendricks Misses Ruth Luck, Jane Fowler, Charlie Verne Tinney and Messrs. Rux Carter, Jit Taylor and Harris Milton Gordon, have returned from a weeks vacation spent at Daytona Beach, Florida.

The buyer for a prominent department store in the Magic City writes me it is now time to "buy that fur coat you have long been talking about". It seems that Winter styles are settled in this line, the prices are attractive and a small deposit assures the reserve of your favorite "pelt"—Here is his philosophy regarding the wisdom of the purchase:

"She who buys in Summer
A wrap of regal furs
Will find by time cold weather comes
The coat at last is hers".

Now, maybe the long coveted fur coat with a bunch of Violets on the collar, will yet be Mine.

Motor parties to Panama City formed the week-end diversion for Mayor Harry Gordon and Mr. and Mrs. Homer J. Walton. Baiting the "finny tribe" is the hobby "Homer" likes best—and "they tell me" he usually brings home the catch, or at least an "account" of it.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats made a trip to the Magic City this week, and added several new instruments to their orchestra which they promise to surprise the dancers with on next Saturday night week, August 10th.

This regal aggregation played to a large crowd of devotees of the dance on Saturday night, and as for novel effects, get this one——hearing a rather "off key" sounding note, jarring a keen sense of melody true to tone, we paused a moment beside the orchestra to listen. No detection could be noted from the faces of the players that anything was wrong. The horns continued to blow, the muffled drums continued to beat—so we attempted again to "get the idea". When the dance was over, we very mildly suggested to L. B. Riddle, Jr., that the trumpet did not sound right on that number. This happy-go-lucky-trumpeter replied that he had simply made a little mistake in "numbers". He happened to be playing "Things Might Have Been So Different", and the rest of the men were interpreting "I Couldn't Believe My Eyes". (It was a question of "ears" with me)—However, he admonished me to "go on", stating that "most folks would think it was an "obligato"——And so the merry whirl proceeded. One tune is as good as another anyway, as long as good friends are together—and happy—why let a little "melody" discord upset your step—or, a little thing like "wrong number" worry you?

A Steak Fry at Yamakita on Thursday night brought together 20 congenial couples. Mayor Harry Gordon supervising the "cooking", proved himself peculiarly adaptable to the culinary profession. Better broiled steak has never been "sizzled". Swimming, watermelon cutting, and the picnic spread made the night one long to be remembered. Possibly the most popular member of the party was little Miss Carolyn Nickson, nine months old daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Nickson. She charmed the circle with her ability to entertain, and Personal Mention marvelled at the variety of food she consumed with out even an alarming look from her pretty mater. Carolyn is a town favorite, although he sojourn has been brief. She "gets her man" when those chubby fingers beckon—and there is no hesitancy in their coming. There is no WAITING for them to make up their minds. She makes it up for them, and they "like it".

Mr. and Mrs. Gary Luttrell and daughter, June, of Atlanta, will be the week-end guests of Judge and Mrs. W. W. Wallace.

There will not be a lack of typists in Columbiana when the commercial course is completed by many interested students who are taking advantage of the training now offered by Mrs. Clara Byrd, of Selma, who has opened this long needed school in the Blackerby Hotel. Mrs. Byrd states she is delighted with her work in Columbiana and the personnel of her class.

Circuit Court begins on Monday morning, August 19th.

Miss Delilah Curry, who keeps you "looking beautiful" with those artistic fingers, deftly wielded, in the Louise Thompson Beauty Salon, chalked up another little mile-stone on Saturday, July 27th, and many good wishes winged their way into the shop where this popular young lady greets her friends daily with her inimitable smile and seemingly inexhaustible supply of "good disposition". Few "new-comers" to Main Street have made so many friends and the best part of it all is—she deserves the best they can give her. We are a bit late with our "hearts best wishes" for many "happy returns of the day", but we are none the less sincere in proffering them now.

J. B. Brashier, a former Shelby County resident, spent a few days traversing familiar haunts near Bold Springs, Cahaba Valley, during the past week, motoring back to his boyhood home from Norman, Oklahoma, where he has lived for the past 35 years.

Honoring Mr. Brashier on last Sunday, a family reunion was staged near the romantic spot of his earlier days when many of his happiest years were spent. Over 100 guests were present and kodak pictures, games and various contests furnished the entertainment for friends and relatives. A picnic dinner was served around the old Spring grounds and various reminiscent speeches were made by former class mates and friends of Mr. Brashier.

Those attending from Columbiana included his sister, Mrs. R. F. Cox, Sr.; Miss Lena Cox; Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Cox, Jr.; H. R. Cox and others.

In Mr. Brashier's party from Oklahoma, were Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Brashier, of Okmulga, Okla.; and Mrs. Golda Ward, of Lexington, Okla.

Other members of the Brashier family who enjoyed this unusually happy occasion, were Mr. Harvey and Ruth Brashier, of Spring Creek community, and Mrs. Krider, of Ensley, Alabama.

Miss Mable Peters and her sister, Mrs. Nix, of Deatsville, Alabama, were visitors in Columbiana, Tuesday.

Dr. and Mrs. James Crawford are vacationing in South Alabama with relatives and friends.

Friendships that span the miles are rare. To be travelling through the Golden West and viewing this wonderful country, and yet find time to send a greeting card to "pep up" the dull work hours is something to make the day grow brighter—not only for the Thought, but for the Friend who sent it. Mrs. Esther Christian is now enjoying a well earned vacation, and from Sante Fe, New Mexico, comes the interesting card—One of the oldest and most famous of all Indian Pueblos. We are more determined than ever to some day realize a childish ambition to Travel the trails, view the Canyons, see the Indians, and quit the "old Rockin' Chair" method of just "wishing" it would happen. That New Moon has not granted a single wish lately. There is something wrong with that "man" up there.

George Scott, Jr., prominent young business man of Longview, spent Monday in Columbiana.

Dr. G. F. Cooper, Presiding Elder, will preach on Sunday evening at the Methodist Church, and will also hold the 3rd Quarterly Conference.

Clay Lester, of Birmingham, is spending his vacation in Columbiana with his mother, Mrs. Nora Lester.

Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Polk, of Clanton, former residents of Columbiana, were being cordially welcomed by their many friends in town on Monday.

Tom Tinney is visiting Charles and James Bradshaw in Dadeville, Alabama this week.

Karl Harrison, prominent young business man of Birmingham, and former resident of Columbiana, was a visitor in Columbiana this week. Mr. Harrison is taking a well earned vacation from the responsible duties he has assumed for the past five years in the First National Bank of Birmingham. He now plans to enter his chosen profession—LAW, and will locate in Columbiana where he is so happily remembered and so well and favorably known. Mr. Harrison will move to Columbiana in October. Those who know him best, predict a brilliant future filled with success which will be merited by conscientious attention to his practice.

Mr. and Mrs. John Benton and son, John Jr., of Birmingham, were guests of Mrs. Fay Miles Benton on Sunday.

The question now is—"Have you a little case of appendicitis in your home?", if NOT, you are far from stylish. Fact is, there will be few people walking around Columbiana with an APPENDIX if the malady continues. Mrs. Mason Edwards is recovering from the KNIFE, and we are delighted to report that the two popular matrons who were operated on last Sunday, Mrs. Alvin Bird and Mrs. E. B. Turner, Jr., are convalescing from an appendix removal.

Mrs. D. Dudley, of Tuskegee, Alabama, is the house guest of her niece, Mrs. L. B. Riddle, in Columbiana.

Eddie Watson, successful owner and manager of the Strand Theatre in Montevallo, was a cordially welcomed visitor in the Democrat office on Monday.

Government Competition DIFFERENT and UNFAIR

WHAT Alabama business would not object to unfair and unequal competition from the Government of the United States?

If you—the reader of this advertisement—are in the retail clothing business, you could not object if some store, financed by private capital, were opened opposite to yours. You could and would meet that competition.

But if that other store were financed by your Government, that would be different.

Different because the Government operated store had unlimited funds with which to buy its stock below the price which you would have to pay.

Different because the Government store would not pay taxes equal to your own.

Different because that Government store could send its advertising matter through the mails free of cost.

Different because that store could obtain freight rate reductions on its merchandise.

Different in a hundred other ways which place any Government operated enterprise on an entirely different footing with any private business.

If you were in the retail clothing business and were faced with that competition, you would think it unfair.

The same reasoning applies to the power business just as much as any other business, in fact more so, because the power business is subject to strict State regulations as to rates and operation while the Government power business (TVA) has a free hand.

It is but a short step from Government competition with the power business in Alabama to Government competition with the Alabama milk business, retail clothing business, retail lumber business, retail hardware business, retail drug business or the farming business.

Recognizing the unfairness of Government competition with its own citizens, our Constitution gave to our Government only certain enumerated powers. These powers do not include the right to engage in any private business unrelated to the performance of a public function, whether that business is the sale of electricity, electric refrigerators, shoes, hats, lumber, groceries or farm products.

ANSWER THIS QUESTION FAIRLY:
What would be your attitude if your own business was confronted by the same unfair, and below cost competition of the Government of the United States?

A Tough Old Bird
Five Billions More?
News of Hogs
Submarines Wanted

Amos R. E. Pinchot, who has leisure and thinks, utters profound truth writing to one of the "professors."

Arthur Brisbane

"Capitalism is a tough old bird, that will live a good deal longer than any of us will."

Capitalism, which means government by organized dollars and industry, instead of organized soldiers, will last longer than the present generation, longer than this century. Capitalism is the new financial feudalism that replaced military feudalism. There is no reason why it should not last as long as military feudalism lasted, many centuries.

Senator Borah, one of the senate's able men, predicts that congress will sit until November 1, and that five thousand one hundred and twenty millions more will be appropriated for immediate spending. That would make about an even ten billions in extra appropriation for this year.

Two thousand one hundred and twenty millions of the money would pay the soldiers' bonus in "greenbacks," and three thousand millions would be used to take up mortgages on farms.

"Hogs sell up to $10.10, best price since September, 1930." That comes from Kansas City—ten dollars and ten cents for a hog weighing one hundred pounds. That may not mean much to you; it means much to the farmers that raise hogs. It also has meaning for housekeepers that buy sausages.

For some mysterious reason, when pork prices go up 10 per cent sausage prices go up 100 per cent.

Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., commanding Brooklyn navy yard, says America needs long-range submarines to protect our interests in the Pacific.

Since 1918, when sweet peace returned, wise Japan, according to Admiral Stirling, has built 64 submarines, including 27 of long range, each carrying six torpedo tubes, powerful guns, able to cross the Pacific and return without refueling. Japan has also a special fleet of eight submarines for placing destructive ocean mines, four of them able to operate 5,000 miles from their base. Each could place 45 bombs in the path of enemy shipping.

Newell P. Sherman, choir singer, Boy Scout master, fell in love with a girl sixteen, admits that to make his way clear he upset a canoe, throwing the mother of his two children into the water, kept pushing her away from the boat until she sank and drowned. This young gentleman is 6 feet 4 inches tall, but the electric chair can doubtless be arranged to fit him.

You will hope that no tender-hearted parole board will say, "He ought to have another chance." One chance to drown the mother of your two children seems enough.

Rome reports Fascist excitement because "Japan assumes the role of Abyssinian champion."

Mussolini's press says Japan sets herself up as leader of Asiatic and African peoples, "against the civilization and culture of the white race."

A Fascist newspaper calls Japan "the enemy of Europe and America, dreaming of world conquest." That seems to be a keg of powder with only a spark lacking.

Scientists experimenting with guinea pigs take one or ten or a hundred guinea pigs, never all the guinea pigs at once.

College professors, union labor leaders convinced of their ability to invent a better government, gentlemen who believe in no government at all, and other experimenters, should select a definite number of American guinea pigs for experiment, not practice on the 130,000,000 all at once.

Miss Margaret McDermott, spinster lady of Chicago, left $25,000 for an old spitz dog. Many write to the executors saying they simply "adore animals," especially spitz dogs, and would like to take care of "Pet" in return for the income on $25,000.

That interests men that leave large fortunes to daughters or sons. Fortune hunters from abroad are always ready to spend money left to daughters, and scheming ladies, foreign or native, are ready to help a young gentleman spend his inherited money, as recently illustrated in a certain Ryan case.

Moscow dispatches say the Soviet's north polar flight from Moscow to San Francisco may start any day. If three Russian airmen make that 6,000-mile flight, nonstop, from Moscow to San Francisco successfully, San Francisco will be interested, and Washington, D. C., ought to be interested.

The government might even interest itself in building some long-distance planes.

Four highway surfacing projects estimated to cost $105,000 and five special projects involving an expenditure of $221,291 were announced from Montgomery as part of Alabama's participation in the work relief program.

Three-year-old Harold E. Henderson, son of Charles Henderson, Eutaw, was drowned when he tried to pull up a bucket of water from a well near his home. He lost his balance and fell into the water 40 feet below.

What is believed to be a record in speed was made when an application for a modernization loan was examined, approved and the loan accepted by one of the Birmingham banks all inside of two hours.

Assurance that public health appropriations will be paid in full this year was given a conference of 200 public health workers from over the state by Lawrence Lee, legal adviser to Governor Graves.

Jackson County has been selected as one of the demonstration counties in the Tennessee Valley erosion control program and a CCC camp has been located at Scottsboro to carry on this work.

Jasper has been selected for location of the district office for the rural rehabilitation division of the Resettlement Administration embracing Jefferson, Walker, Blount, Cullman and St. Clair Counties.

Mrs. Lorene Rodgers died in a Montgomery hospital shortly after she was found lying on the bedroom floor of her home, a bullet wound in her head and a pistol grasped in her right hand.

The Alabama Power Company announces that August has been set aside as "Open House Month" for visitors to six of its hydro plants in the vicinity of Clanton, Wetumpka and Tallassee.

Forty new bridges will span rivers and creeks of Pike County, if the plans of Judge Alex Brantley and the Commissioners Court are carried out and all indications point that they will be.

The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company has resumed operations at one of its ore mines on Red Mountain, south of Bessemer, giving employment to approximately 300 men.

Ensley Merchants and Associated Business Men have perfected plans for a good-will tour Aug. 2. A large number of communities adjacent to the Ensley district will be visited.

A gain in tax collections of $1,680,562 was reported by Henry Long, president of the State Tax Commission, in his report for the first six months of the Graves administration.

After the best day's fishing of the entire event, the seventh annual Alabama Deep Sea Rodeo closed July 24 with awards of prizes to winners of various divisions.

Gov. Bibb Graves has appointed W. C. Eppes, of Dayton, as member of the Court of Commissioners of Marengo County from the Southeastern District.

The state Legislature will be asked to authorize an election at Phenix City in September changing the name of Phenix City to that of Phenix Girard, Ala.

Coosa County, under the PWA, has been allotted $6,600 for grading, drainage and surfacing secondary roads.

Crossville entertained several thousand people July 20, when the annual picnic and barbecue was held there.

A number of America's flying aces will be brought to Birmingham Sept. 14 and 15 for the National Air Carnival at Municipal Airport.

During the first 11 months of the 1935 fiscal year, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration expended $9,669,033.12 in Alabama.

W. J. Ponder, principal of the Dallas County High School, has been appointed superintendent of the high school at Gadsden.

The Alabama Merchants Association will hold its annual convention in Birmingham Aug. 21-22.

WITH AN EYE TO COOL SIMPLICITY

PATTERN 9354

The smart girl has one eye on the budget and the other anticipating a rise in temperature—and makes a cool decision to include several summer sports in her wardrobe right now. It took a lot of ingenuity to design that clever yoke-cape-panel in one. It makes sewing so easy, and briefly, that cape is much cooler than a sleeve. Pattern 9354 sports an action pleat back and skirt just to help you "get places." If you find a simple flat neckline becoming, omit the dashing revers (but we like 'em). Very correct for spectator sports, office wear or week-end jaunts. Make it up in washable sport silk or shantung. Try a novel "cork" buckle and buttons.

Pattern 9354 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 yards 36 inch fabric.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

Linen Suit a Midsummer Favorite

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THE present vogue for linen is nothing short of sensational. Whether you go dining, dancing, swimming, flying, motoring, golfing or shopping, or play tennis, there's a linen for every occasion from rustic crashes and peasant weaves and colorful Tahitian prints to alluring novelties in stripes and plaids and in sheer lovely effects for high-style evening wear.

Midsummer days are proving that linen suits, especially in white and natural tones, are of first interest among best dressed women for about-town wear. A linen suit and a wardrobe of blouses and the problem of being smartly appareled during the daytime hours is solved not only for the immediate moment but for well on into the fall, since the very newest linens are in wine shades, in Dubonnet red, in beetroot, purple and orange tones.

Just now, while the weather is warm, it's the white and natural linens that are lending their immaculate and well-groomed appearance to the summer scene. The trio of stunning suits pictured represent the very creme de la creme in linens as now featuring on the style program.

The young woman seated shows that she knows fashion in that with her suit of moygashel linen, in natural color, she is wearing a dark blouse, the same being brown with white polka dots. You are doing the right thing this season if to wear with your white and natural linens you choose dark accessories. The coat is single breasted with buttons all the way up to the collarless neckline. A novel idea is introduced in the placement of deep large pockets above the belt line. Raglan sleeves add a final touch of smartness to this linen classic.

The other two suits are also of moygashel linen. It is rather interesting to know in this connection that King George sends the flax grown on his royal estate at Sandringham, England (supposed to be the finest flax in the world) to Moygashel, Ireland, there to be woven, because the workmanship is so fine—quite a royal pedigree for these linens.

The two-piece centered in the group has a tight-fitting basque coat with no belt to disturb the natural line. It is of white linen with navy buttons and tie. The double binding to the coat which gives a vestee effect is new and smart. The sports flap pockets are chic, too.

Handstitching around the notched collar and the pockets gives a distinctive touch to the white linen suit to the right. The stitching and the belt are in matched coloring. The coat is double-breasted, and a polka dot shirt is worn under it.

A very fashionable thing to do is wear a bright colored linen coat or jacket with your white linen skirt. Lilac colored linens for these coats are the rage with beetroot or Dubonnet red close seconds.

Then, too, novelty linens with nubby surface or loose porous weave are in good style for suits and for coats. These heavier suits are mostly in oyster white. Very "nifty" ones are shadow-checked in gray and some stunning weaves are in herringbone patterning flecked with brown.

There are lovely embroidered linens shown for dressier wear and sheer striped linens are made up into fascinating evening gowns, as formally as if they were stately silks. With the new fall tweed suits designers are creating clever blouses of fine handkerchief linens in colorings related to the costume entire.

SMART BEACHWEAR

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This beach ensemble is out of the ordinary. It is fashioned of purple fishnet lace over a linen foundation. Which again proves that lace goes everywhere this season. The ensemble consists of a pair of shorts and blouse with a wrap-around skirt. The large hat is of purple straw.

SHOE COMFORT IS MOST IMPORTANT

To be footloose and free during the season of pleasant week ends and after-dark breathing spaces, one must have foot comfort.

Cool shoes with flexible construction are a likely way of getting this comfort, with preference given lightweight numbers, and those that are ventilated by perforations, lattice and cut-outs.

Novelties in shoes are always at their peak in the summer season, and they are usually far more moderately priced than the novelties thought up for evening shoes to complement formal winter costumes.

Sandals of printed linen or crash, slippers covered with gay flowered chiffon, oxfords of splendid supporting strength, perforated into lacy prettiness, plain cotton or linen shoes of any color you can name, plaid linen in natural tones, checked gingham in kitchen apron designs, lightweight suede in any pastel hue or any flag hue and crocheted string shoes are just a few of the kinds you can choose from in the shops.

Oriental Influence Seen in Evening Clothes Styles

The Hindu influence, inspired by the Maharanee of India, has initiated a definite swing away from fitted, bias lines to softly draped designs in evening clothes. Allied influences, such as Persian, Arabian, and a new version of Grecian folds, contribute to the same effect. These flattering, age-old drapery details are difficult to make and hence are not easily copied, a point being stressed now in high style circles.

Alix, the Parisian couturiere, has turned out a thrilling array of Oriental formal gowns. Most of them are topped with seductive saris, those long, scarf-like affairs which start out by wrapping around the body and then proceed to cover the head in the manner of a monk's hood.

Lesson for August 4

JOSIAH

LESSON TEXT—II Kings 22:1-5, 21-23.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.—Matthew 4:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When a King Read the Bible.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When a King Used the Bible.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Things That Keep God Out.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Our Religion Owes to Reformers.

I. Josiah, a Godly Young King (II Kings 22:1, 2).

"He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left." About one hundred years elapsed between the reformation under Hezekiah and that of Josiah. Sometime during this period the Book of God's Law had been lost. Two wicked kings had reigned in this interval. It was incumbent upon the king to have the Law of God at his command and faithfully to read it. A country's highest well-being can only be attained when it has godly rulers, and rulers and people not only read the Bible, but order their lives and conduct according to its teachings. Not until rulers and people return to God and conform their lives to the standard of his Word can we hope for return of permanent prosperity.

II. The Book of the Law Found (II Kings 22:3-10).

1. The occasion (vv. 3-8). It was while restoring the temple during Josiah's administration that the Law was found. In clearing out the dark corners to make repairs and to find a place to store the subscriptions made by the people, many lost things were found.

2. The Book read before the king (vv. 9, 10). Upon making a report of the work to the king, Shaphan informed him of the finding of the Book of the Law of the Lord, and he read the Book before the king.

III. The Effect of the Reading of the Law Upon the King (II Kings 22:11-20).

1. He rent his clothes (v. 11). As the Law was read before him he was led to realize the awful extent of the nation's departure from God. The rending of the royal robes indicated the king's penitence and sorrow.

2. The king sent a deputation to make inquiry of the Lord (vv. 12-20). He included himself in the guilt before God (v. 13). His sense of sin was so keen that he sent to inquire of the Lord as to whether there was any means of diverting the divine judgments.

3. The message of Huldah the prophetess (vv. 15-20).

a. Confirmation of what the Law said (vv. 15-17). She said that all the curses written in the Law must fall, for the sins had been so flagrant that God's wrath could not be restrained. It was not too late, upon repenting, to obtain mercy from God, but outward consequences of sin must be realized.

b. Acceptance of Josiah's repentance (vv. 18-20). Because of his tenderness of heart and deep penitence, the Lord said he was to be gathered to his grave in peace and should thus escape all the evil brought on Jerusalem and its people. What Huldah said was true, even though Josiah died in battle (II Chron. 35:22-25).

IV. The Reformation Instituted by Josiah (II Kings 23:1-25).

1. The king read the Law (vv. 1, 2). He gathered together the inhabitants of Jerusalem, including the priests, Levites, and elders and read unto them the Law. What a happy scene it would be if the President of the United States would call the representatives of the people together to hear God's law read.

2. The king made a covenant before the Lord (v. 3). In this covenant he pledged himself:

a. To walk before the Lord. This meant that he would get personally right with God.

b. To keep God's commandments, his testimonies and his statutes. This obedience was to be a heart obedience.

c. To perform the words of covenant which were written in this Book. The king not only entered into this sincerely but caused all who were present to "stand to" it.

3. The king took away the abominations (vv. 4-20). He not only broke down the places of idolatrous worship, but slew the priests who officiated at the altar.

4. The Passover kept (vv. 21-23). So fully and heartily did they enter into this reformation that this Passover was unlike any that had been held since the days of the judges.

5. Workers of the occult driven out (vv. 24, 25). All the days of the king they departed not from following after the Lord.

Payment

The universe pays every man in his own coin; if you smile, it smiles upon you in return; if you sing, you will be invited into gay company; if you think, you will be entertained by thinkers; and if you love the world and earnestly seek for the good that is therein, it will pour into your lap the treasures of the earth.—Elmer R. Murphey.

Mulligan Does His Duty

By FRANK EVANS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

"TIM, old timer, what's the matter? You haven't been acting like yourself for weeks. Sick?"

"Spring fever, mebbe, lieutenant. Besides, I'm gettin' old."

The men gathered in groups about the police station looked up and laughed. Lieutenant Murphy, at the desk, shook his head.

"You old, Tim? Never! Just as young as the day you joined the force—31 years ago . . . a bridegroom of two days."

"'N' Molly 'n' me didn't take a honeymoon for eight years . . . when the little tad was just a year old."

He sat down heavily and refused a proffered tin of tobacco. As Mulligan was about to leave, Lieutenant Murphy called to him:

"Better see a doctor, Tim. We can't afford to lose Tim Mulligan after 31 years of duty. You want to think about Molly too, and the little tad."

Tim Mulligan smiled and swung his night club jauntily.

"Just you quit your worryin' about me, Faith, and I'm younger than all the rest o' you. 'Night."

Murphy laid down his pen and strolled over to a group of officers.

"I say, fellows, have you noticed anything wrong with Mulligan? He's been actin' queer lately."

"We noticed it—but he won't talk about it. Says he's all right. I met Molly in the grocery store yesterday and she looked as if she had been cryin'. But when I told her she looked younger than she did 20 years ago, she said I'd been kissing the blarney stone. A fine woman, Molly Mulligan."

"What's the kid doing now?" asked Koesting as he bent over and tied his shoe. "Hope he makes them proud of him. They sacrificed a lot to give him an education. Tim said one thing that boy must have was learnin'! He certainly was proud of those report cards . . ."

"I'm told he isn't all Tim and Molly would have him be," said Jones over his evening paper. "Don't keep jobs . . . regular sheik and dance hound . . . and Tim wanted him to be a real man! But the kid is young, not twenty-five yet. He should turn out all right with folks like Tim and Molly."

The night lengthened. One by one the men left headquarters. Two detectives drowsed in an adjoining office, chairs tipped back against the wall. Outside, Cohen, the driver, whistled softly as he sprawled on the front seat of the patrol wagon. Then came the harsh ring of the bell, and everyone was galvanized into action. Cohen came to the door and awaited orders.

"Mulligan calling," announced Lieutenant Murphy swiftly. "Fairview Oil station; Fairview and Edgemont . . . holdup . . . one got away . . . attendant injured . . ."

It was scarcely ten minutes before the reverberating clang of the bell announced the return of the patrol wagon. The men grouped themselves about the desk as the prisoner was brought in, Cohen on one side, Mulligan, strangely old and white-faced, on the other.

He was scarcely more than a boy—the prisoner—dressed in clothes of the latest mode, a tweed cap pulled at a rakish angle over his ear, a cigarette between his fingers. They stationed him before the desk.

"Take off that hat!" snapped Tim Mulligan. The young man looked up quickly and obeyed.

"One got away," said Mulligan shortly. "I was patrolling Fairview when the machine ran into the oil station. I heard the attendant call out once, as this one," with a jerk of his thumb towards the prisoner, "got out. They were there last week, y' know. He plugged him . . . through the leg . . . hospital." He was speaking jerkily. "The fellow in the car . . . yelled as I ran up . . . then drove off. This one turned . . . 'n' I beat him to the draw. He . . . he . . ." Tim Mulligan leaned heavily against the desk, his hands fumbling at the buttons of his coat.

The boy had been watching him closely, twisting the dapper tweed cap between his hands. Koesting brought a glass of water but Mulligan refused it.

"I've been layin' for these fellows. Knew I'd get 'em sooner or later. This one is a bad one . . . he don't care . . . for nobody . . . but himself. He'd kill his . . . own folks . . . to get away . . ."

He turned and walked slowly to the detectives' office and let himself down into an arm chair.

Lieutenant Murphy opened the book on the desk, and picked up his pen.

"Well, Tim," he said slowly, "anything to say for yourself? I've been on the force many years but this is the hardest thing I have ever done . . . to put Tim Mulligan's little tad behind the bars. You have killed something tonight. You have killed the spirit in your father's heart. His little tad . . ."

"Make it snappy, lieutenant. I've got it comin', I guess, but I didn't think the old man would take me in. I swear I didn't . . ."

"Tim Mulligan has never flinched at doing his duty . . . for 31 years . . . and he never will as long as he's on the force . . ."

"NEW" APPLE NO LONGER SOUGHT

Farm Thrill of Other Days Forgotten.

Our wild apple years are over. The produce of well-conducted orchards is uniform and shapely, and every autumn our markets show the same varieties—Jonathan, Winesap, Wealthy, Gravenstein, McIntosh, Baldwin and Ben Davis, of course; fewer and fewer Spys. There is no uncertainty about the kinds, only about the crop. Excitement in fruits comes from far lands nowadays, with pinanonas and zapotes arriving by air and the Orient sending jujbes and satiny persimmons. But throughout the century before this one, unforeseen apples lent a thrill to every harvest time. The air of the orchard tingled with surprises.

It was the hope of most farm lads then to discover or develop an apple so excellent that it should make father's fortune. Along the always mysterious edges of fallow fields, up among the cedars in the woodlot there might be growing a little wild or strayed apple, delicious beyond imagination, unknown to the world and waiting to be named and glorify the finder. The end of the Eighteenth century and the beginning of the Nineteenth were the apple's age of discovery and invention. The monuments to the Northern Spy, the Baldwin, the McIntosh, the Wealthy, the "marvelous primate apple—God's earth is full of love to man"—all date from those adventurous years. Nothing seemed too wonderful for the young orchards, which already had been blessed by so many lucky wildings whose fruit had multiplied as in a Scriptural miracle by grafting. How rose that spontaneous variation, the solitary first tree destined to bear millions of offspring to be called by its name? The tree whose like you yourself might come upon tomorrow as good as gold—another Tompkins King, or Smokehouse, or Esopus Spitzenberg! An unknown Rome Beauty or Delicious! In that rich period of experiment farmers gleefully bought acres of many named saplings, and winter cellars were not big enough to hold the latest thing in barrels. To adorn the evening fruit dish one had choice of dozens of inviting smells and names.

The adventure became the business. The age of apple discovery ended. The orchard settled down. No boys wandered off on secret quests for fame and the Wild Rose Sweeting, which would probably prove "uncommercial" anyway. Farmers set out few varieties and those best sellers—a more sensible plan. Only in old, untended orchards will you find fifty trees, all different, bearing frostbitten fruit unknown to the trade but with a flavor that piques memory.—New York Herald Tribune.

VENOM FOR RHEUMATISM

An old-fashioned cure for rheumatism and arthritis was to allow the patient to be stung by bees. The same principle has now been adapted scientifically. In a German factory scores of girls, protected by masks and overalls, are employed in the work of squeezing the venom from the stingers of live bees.

PARDON MY SOLITUDE

By BILL SIMS

Recently when the great philanthropist, John D. Rockerfellow, passed his ninety-sixth year on this old world, he deemed it necessary to trot off to his Lakewood mansion. Their he remains in his solitude. If by chance he should get lonesome he could scoot across his backyard and lo and behold he would be in Johnnie Jr's castle with all its twenty-five servants. Now when a dizzy guy like myself starts writing in a newspaper he may last several weeks and then "presto" he has nothing to write about. Of course some of you lads and lassies, after judging my column, say I still have nothing to write about. Well all great writers have to contend with glory and opposition, to those of you who don't like my blabberings, "Nuts to youse".

The lovers adage of "three's a crowd" was enlarged a week ago when seven natives took a joy ride to Daytona Beach in one of Knox Wooleys new Fords. The new adage we believe will become "seven is a mass of humanity". This column would now like to print for the benefit of local passers-byers and curb loafers that if you glance up and see a round red object lumbering down the thoroughfare. it isn't the No. 8 ball on a pool table. But it is the glisting, slightly red, top mast of Mayor Gordon. If you would like to know what caused the calamity, well he didn't meet a bear, it is only the aftermath of the ever shining Florida sun. It will always give me a laugh to see some of our potential gad abouts the day after they return from that deep sea fishing expidition. If one will notice closely, they will see said fishermen standing with his back to the wall measuring arm's length the big 'uns he caught. The why and whatfor of the back to the wall position is due to the fact that they are afraid some fran will walk up and slap that blistered back. Hmmm!

It is being rumored that another invitation dance will be launched at some early date. Those who attended the last "private whirl" had a most enjoyable evening. The program cards got a big hand, as each boy was certain of his next dance, because the gal had to sign on the dotted line.

Maybe you would like to know about all the people you see walking around all stooped over and looking like a ripe tomato in its ripest stage —they didn't get that way from lack of food, but they are ex-appendicitus patients on the two month road to recovery. A special sentence to Birmingham surgeons—"You have us Columbianians ten down and the rest of the population to go. Luck to ya".

Now with loads of love I leave you your solitude scribler personified, who just wants to remind you that there is a baseball game today. The fighters haven't been named yet but if tradition upholds itself, we guarantee a ten round bout.

—Bill Sims.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

There have been many requests for the return of the column, "Under The Courthouse Dome", which ran for months in the Democrat. It would seem from the number of inquiries received, that the people of Shelby County are vitally concerned about Court proceedings, the officials, and the every day grind in and around the "Temple of Justice"—so, the writer again toured the corridors of the "Marble Palace", and will attempt to give you the "low down" on the "high ups".

"Coming events cast their shadows before", and a note of activity pervades the atmosphere as Circuit Court begins on Monday, August 19, and will continue for two weeks, Judge W. W. Wallace, presiding. The Grand Jury will also assemble and be in charge of Circuit Solicitor Arthur L. Hardegree and Paul O. Luck.

The hectic August weather continues to make more emphatic the cry from the official family of the Courthouse, for a "bit of iced water" to cool their "parched toungues". Lazarus-like, they PLEAD for it, but so far there has been no answer in the affirmative from the "LYON'S DEN". It seems that this commodity is not included, as heretofore, in the Budget for the new regime. Probate Judge. Len C. Walker, has solved his individual problem, and was seen wagging a Thermos Jug filled with the desired liquid into his office.

We noted Calvin Weldon, Circuit Clerk, busily engaged in signing documents for Court. He stated he was feeling "fairly well", but was bothered with "signers trouble". Not even the humidity of the atmosphere disturbs his genial disposition—nor dims his keen sense of humor.

L. C. Abbott has moved his desk out in the corridor. He states he is "coming up for air"! Mrs. Shealy has moved her desk nearer the window, and both continue to juggle "facts and figures" getting the necessary data ready for publication next week. The Delinquent Tax list will appear in our next issue of the Democrat.

Myra Hamner Miles, clerking by proxy for Oliver Miles, official Clerk of the Board of Revenue, who continues ill at his home in Columbiana, was totally occupied with the voluminous semi-annual report of the Board of Revenue, which will be published shortly. State Examiners Reynolds and Ledyard were in the office, but had "nothing to say, as per usual". Silent as the Egyptian Sphinx! If, as the old adage goes "Silence is golden", they should be worth a million dollars each by this time—but after all, most people talk too much, anyway.

After the Board of Revenue meeting on August 4th, Henry Naish, Treasurer, was found dispensing Warrants as fast as he could. We had a little check from this emporium—but it was not big enough to TALK. It just "whispered" for a little while, then went the way of all "cash" that ever finds its way into this print shop—to the other fellow! We are adepts at "passing the bucks".

Frank Head, newly appointed Register for Shelby County Circuit Clerk, states DIVORCE proceedings have occupied most of his new official duties. Even the little Love God could not "take it" this hectic season. Mr. Head will continue his active practice of law and Miss Nina Fay Rinehardt will hold the position of Secretary in his office.

Mrs. Esther Christian is continuing her pilgrimage in the Golden West. Cecil Duke says "his day is coming"! Well, surely a "DUKE" should rate a day. No more popular official graces the courtly circle than Cecil.

L. H. Ellis, shrewd, resourceful and successful disciple of Blackstone, almost collided with me in the corridor. He travels at about 90 miles per hour on pedal extremities. Had we met in our respective autos on Davis' corner, there would have been nothing left of little old ME. A new gray belted model adorned the well groomed attorney, but the coat tail was having to exceed the speed limit to keep in touch with the chasis it was intended to adorn. Sure, the 'papers' were safely tucked under his left arm, and the ever present cigar was perched at exactly the right angle. You guessed it, he was "in a hurry". He had to go "coon hunting" that night, and the case had to be tried that day. He probably won his case and caught the coon! Wotta man!

Fred Koenig, prominent attorney of Birmingham, and Mr. Beddow, of Birmingham, were seen in the Courthouse, Saturday, transacting legal business in the Register's office.

The regular meeting of the Board of Revenue was held on Tuesday with all members present.

Judge Len C. Walker held the regular monthly term of the County Court on Monday, and a number of cases were disposed of during the day.

GINNING TAX TO BE MORE STRICT THIS YEAR THAN IN 1934

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The U. S. Internal Revenue Bureau here has issued a statement warning farmers the recent District Court decision in Texas will in no way hamper Alabama collection of ginning taxes imposed by the AAA and enforcement of regulations will be stricter than ever this year.

The Federal Court decision in Texas affects only those gins supporting the suit and have been required to post bond pending disposition of the case by the United States Supreme Court, which will rule on constitutionality of the AAA.

Under regulations in the Bankhead Cotton Control Act, bales of cotton which have not been tagged cannot be transported to a warehouse as was done last year under special arrangement.

The rate of tax on non-exempt cotton under the Bankhead law will be 6 cents a lint pound. Last year the tax was 5 cents.

The ginner must collect the tax—either by a Bankhead exemption certificate or cash—at the time the cotton is ginned or place a lien card on the bale.

The exemption certificates were issued farmers under various allotments set up for cotton raising states, the number being based on the amount of cotton grown in past years and agreed reductions.

EXAMINATIONS TO BE HELD FOR U. S. GOVERNMENT JOBS

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The United States Civil Service Commission has announced open competitive examinations as follows:

Engineering draftsmen, various grades, $1,440 to $2,300 a year. The following-named optional branches are provided for all grades except the junior: Architectural, civil, electrical, mechanical and structural.

Principal horticulturist (bulb and floricultural investigations), $5,600 a year, Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture.

All states except South Dakota, Iowa, Vermont, Virginia and Maryland, and the District of Columbia, have received less than their quota of appointments in the apportioned departmental service at Washington, D. C.

Full information may be obtained from the Secretary of the United States Civil Service Board of Examiners at the post office or customhouse in any which has a post office of the first or the second class, or from the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

No 4-H Club Boys Or Girls Are On Relief

AUBURN, Ala. — The United States Department of Agriculture revorts that not a single 4-H club boy or girl has been found on relief rolls nor a single family of these club members received relief.

"Few facts could better illustrate the economic soundness of 4-H club activities than that," said T. A. Sims, boys' 4-H club leader in Alabama, in calling farm boys' attention to the importance of the work.

Authorities To Discuss Screw Worm Control, Here, Aug. 14

Dr. W. E. Dove, of the U. S. Bureau of Entomology; Dr. T. F. McGehee, State Supervisor; and Dr. W. E. White, Assistant State Supervisor of Screw Worm Control, will hold a meeting at the Courthouse on Wednesday, August 14, at 2:30 o'clock, to instruct all persons interested in prevention and treatment of infected animals.

Everyone who owns any livestock of any kind should take advantage of this afternoon of instruction. The screw worm makes quick work of its hosts, and it will be profitable to get the instruction these men are prepared to give you. August and September are the months that screw worms are abundant, so let me urge you and your neighbors to come to this meeting.

500 FERA TRAINING SCHOOL STUDENTS SEND THANKS WIRE

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — The more than 500 teachers attending the FERA training school for teachers at Alabama College, have wired Director Hopkins, whose department allotted funds for this training course, an expression of appreciation, and adopted resolutions thanking Alabama College faculty and authorities for the courtesies shown them.

The school entered the third of its four-week course Monday. These teachers are being trained in connection with the adult education program providing special classes for adults in vocational, illiteracy and academic subjects. The teachers taking this training are being paid by the government, which is also bearing all costs except that of room and board. This latter is being provided at a minimum charge by the college.

The training school for adult teachers is under direction of Dr. M. L. Orr, of the faculty of Alabama College, and Judson Snead, general director of FERA schools in Alabama.

Similar classes for adult Negro teachers is being held at Montgomery. Each county is reported as having sent its full quota of teachers for this training. More than 25 courses are being offered at Alabama College.

ALA. FARM BUREAU IS IN FAVOR OF 12 CENT COTTON LOAN

AUBURN, Ala. — The Alabama Farm Bureau Federation is on record favoring a 12-cent loan on the 1935-36 cotton crop, a test of the constitutionality of the protective tariff, and a constitutional amendment if necessary to continue Agricultural Adjustment Act, Bankhead cotton act, and the processing tax.

"We endorse and request a 12-cent government loan on cotton for the 1935-36 season," said a resolution passed at the annual meeting of the organization held here the past week.

"We authorize our officers to join in any reasonable movement to bring a test case to the courts on the constitutionality of the protective tariff," says another resolution.

After stating that "these measures have been instrumental in greatly increasing our income, bringing us out of the bottomless pit of depression into the road to recovery and a better standard of living," another resolution said:

We respectfully request our Congressmen and Senators to give their unqualified support to the continuation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, including the processing tax, and the Bankhead cotton control act, and,

"Be it further resolved, that if a constitutional amendment is necessary for such continuation, we hereby unqualifiedly endorse such an amendment, and

"Be it further resolved, that the farm people are most appreciative of the great service which is being rendered the State by Senator Hugo Black, Senator John H. Bankhead, and other members of the Alabama delegation in Congress."

SMITH - BATSON

Of cordial interest to a large circle of friends in Shelby County and in Alabama comes the announcement of the approaching marriage of Miss Elizabeth Smith to James Lucian Batson, Jr.

Both Miss Smith and Mr. Batson are well known, and prominent in the social life of the County.

Miss Smith is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. T. O. Smith, of Wilsonville, Alabama, a graduate of Shelby County High School and of Alabama College, and one of the most popular young ladies in the County.

Mr. Batson is the son of Mrs. John Batson and the late Dr. Batson who formerly resided in Shelby County. Mr. Batson holds a responsible position with the Long-Lewis Hardware Co., in Bessemer, in which town they will make their future home.

The wedding will be quietly solemnized during the month of August in Wilsonville, Alabama.

Heart Drifts

(The entire feature column "Heart Drifts" this week is dedicated to "Cheerful Cherub", the most adorably happy little poetic figure we know anything about.)

CRIMES.
Of all the many crimes
My wicked past bestrewing
I most regret the ones
That some one caught me doing.

HUMANE THOUGHTS.
Be kind to all dumb animals
And give small birds a crumb.
Be kind to human beings too—
They're sometimes pretty dumb.

NEW LOVE.
Some new love should take the place
Of every love departed—
For sorrow cannot fill your heart
Unless you're hollow-hearted.

DUTY.
Now DUTY is a horrid word,
Right doing should be glad—
If you do good because you SHOULD
You might as well be bad.

HIDDEN LIFE.
I love to tell my secrets
I do it all unbidden.
My hidden life's so thrilling
I cannot keep it hidden.

KISS.
I made the nicest kiss I could
And blew it to the moon so far,
And then I watched the empty sky
And pop—out came a little star!

MOSQUITOES.
God made the star-hung skies for us,
And singing trees and hills and lakes.
Of course He made Mosquitoes too—
But everybody makes mistakes.

DISGRACE.
I'd rather be the lowly soul
Who suffers every deep disgrace
Than wear that sly rejoicing look
That sometimes lights a righteous face.

FISH.
A fish seems very sad to me—
No matter what its trouble
It opens up its mouth to moan
And just emits a bubble.

DISCOVERY.
I found a way to cure today
That foolish mood of hurry—
I simply stopped the clock and then
I didn't have to worry.

A. F. B. F. FAVORS U. S. CONSTITUTION CHANGE IF NEEDED

Register In Chancery 7-b-36

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama farmers want the United States Constitution amended if such an amendment is necessary for continuation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Bankhead Cotton Control Act, and the processing tax, says a resolution passed at the fourteenth meeting of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation held here the past week.

The farm bureau is also on record favoring a "12-cent government loan on cotton for the 1935-36 season." It has also authorized its officials to join in "any movement to bring a test case to the courts on the constitutionality of the protective tariff."

"The farmers of Alabama pledge their whole-hearted support and cooperation to the Governor and the Legislature in working out a reasonable and fair revenue program for the operation of the necessary and vital functions of the State, including education," said another resolution.

The farm bureau members also pledged "to do our part in promoting continued cooperation between agriculture and industry, and expressed their appreciation to Dr. L. N. Duncan, president, Alabama Polytechnic Institute and director of the State Extension Service, and Ashton B. Collins, manager or the Alabama Associated Industries, on the work they have done and are doing in bringing about closer cooperation between agriculture and industry.

ALA. POWER CO. TO BUILD MORE LINES IN RURAL SECTIONS

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — By taking advantage of new construction standards which have been perfected for single phase (2-wire) lines the Alabama Power Company announces that it now believes it possible to expand the extension of electric service to rural customers. While the Company has for eleven years been active in the extension of rural electric service and now operates 2,159 miles of rural line, 40 of which were built this year, and serves 28,000 rural customers at city rates and only 8,700 at rural rates, it recently petitioned the Alabama Public Service Commission to liberalize the rural rates and rural line contract requirements so as to make possible a wider use of electric service among existing rural customers and to enable it to consider the construction of additional rural lines.

The Commission acted favorably on the petition August 1. Under the adjusted rate schedule, 5,500 or about 60% of the rural customers being served at rural rates will enjoy immediate reductions amounting to $28,500 annually. Customers in Group B of the old classification E-1 have had their minimum bills reduced from $2.00 to $1.25. Customers served under the E-4 classification may now use 15 kilowatt hours for the minimum bill. The rate adjustment results in either a reduction or more electricity for less money for all customers served at rural rates.

A 25% reduction in the capacity required to be contracted for per mile of line is also included in the revision. Alabama Power Company officials state that all requests for extension of rural service are considered in as liberal a light as possible, but that each case must, of course, be determined on its individual merits.

CLARK - BARNETT

The marriage of Miss Eva Clark, of Pleasant Hill, and Mr. Hill Barnett, of Columbiana, was solemnized at the Pleasant Hill Baptist Church, on Tuesday morning, July 23rd, at 11 o'clock, Rev. J. P. Maxwell officiating.

The church was made beautiful by a profusion of greens, with floor baskets of white dahlias and tube roses at the altar. Candles were lighted by Misses Louise and Mary Elizabeth Clark, young sisters of the bride. Miss Margaret Clark, the maid of honor, wore an ice blue frock with accessories of pink, and carried sweetheart roses. Miss Clark, attractively gowned in navy blue and white, and carrying sweetheart roses, entered with her father by whom she was given in marriage. The groom had as his best man, Mr. Oakley Vincent, of Birmingham.

Mrs. Barnett is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Foster L. Clark, of Pleasant Hill. She is a graduate of Howard College and a member of the Alpha Delta Theta social fraternity. For the past few years she has been a teacher in the Jones Valley High School in Birmingham.

After a short wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Barnett will make their home in Columbiana where Mr. Barnett is in business.

Statesmen in Geneva Struggle to Prevent Italo-Ethiopian War — Progress of the New Deal Measures in Congress.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

CAPT. ANTHONY EDEN, British minister for League of Nations affairs, was exceedingly busy in Geneva trying to find a way to avert the war between Italy and Ethiopia. He was aided and abetted by Premier Laval of France and together they evolved a plan for procedure by the league council which appeared promising, until it was communicated to Premier Mussolini. Then Baron Aloisi, Italian delegate, announced the Eden-Laval formula was "entirely unacceptable." However, hope was not abandoned for there was a chance that modifications could be made that would satisfy the demands of the Italians.

Anthony Eden

Unofficially, it was said the British-French formula dealt with these points:

1. Conciliation and arbitration is to continue.

2. Neither Italy nor Ethiopia is to resort to war measures in the meantime.

3. Appointment of a fifth arbitrator to the deadlocked Italo-Ethiopian conciliation commission.

4. Signatories of the 1906 treaty—Great Britain, France, and Italy—will lend their good offices to obtain a general broad solution of the conflict.

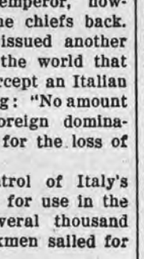
Italy was expected to protest against time limits fixed in the draft of the projected peace formula.

One deadline was set for September 1, by which time the arbitrators on the Italo-Ethiopian conciliation commission, who would resume their work, would be required to report to the league council.

Another time limit was set for September 4, when the three powers and Ethiopia would be required to report their findings to the league council.

In any event the council would be scheduled to meet September 4.

One important concession was made to Italy in the formula. It was agreed that the ownership of Ualual, scene of the frontier conflict involved, should not be discussed. The Ethiopian contention has been that responsibility for the border clash could not be established without the ownership of the locality being first determined.



Emperor Haile Selassie met his chieftains in council at Addis Ababa and they told him it might be now too late to prevent war for their tens of thousands of fighters were eager for hostilities to begin and could hardly be restrained. The emperor, however, sought to hold the chiefs back. At the same time he issued another defiant note informing the world that Ethiopia never would accept an Italian or other mandate, adding: "No amount of prosperity under foreign domination would compensate for the loss of independence."

Mussolini seized control of Italy's metal and fuel imports for use in the expected war, and several thousand more soldiers and workmen sailed for Africa.

LED by George Huddleston of Alabama, the members of the house who opposed the "death sentence" in the utilities bill scored another victory over the supporters of that plan of the New Dealers. Sam Rayburn's motion that the house agree to the senate action on the bill was defeated, 210 to 155. Rayburn argued, pleaded and threatened, but to no avail. He warned the representatives that those who voted against his motion would be incurring the wrath of the administration, and at the last moment had read testimony before the senate lobbying committee to the effect that a New Jersey man had suggested the utilities companies start a whispering campaign regarding the sanity of the New Deal leaders. Still the big majority in the house insisted on rejecting the Rayburn motion.

Then the house, by a vote of 183 to 172, adopted a resolution which virtually called for the exclusion of Ben Cohen, administration lobbyist, from future conferences on the bill.

DEMOCRATIC congressmen started the week briskly determined to push through the President's "soak the rich" tax bill at this session. Opposing them with equal determination were a number of the hardest fighting Republicans who insist that consideration of taxation be postponed until next winter and that meantime the question be studied carefully in connection with the budget for the next fiscal year. These Republicans are urgently calling for an early adjournment of congress. Senator Hastings of Delaware has introduced a resolution setting August 10 as the day for quitting and was trying to have it brought up for consideration before passage of the tax measure.

Senator Vandenberg

Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, often mentioned as a Presidential possibility, also demanded postponement of the tax legislation until January, and he gave out a statement denouncing the administration's plan as a "sterile political gesture" which would raise "only a little extra pocket change" and declared that "we chatter of taxes in millions to offset known deficits in billions."

"The pending tax bill, as it is being developed," said Senator Vandenberg, "will not produce appreciable revenue for Uncle Sam. It will not pay the President's deficit even for the period while the bill is under consideration. As a contribution to the public credit, it is as grim a hoax as was ever perpetrated on the country. As a 'distributor of wealth' it is a mere vagrant flirtation with this left wing idea."

Nevertheless, it appeared probable that the tax measure would be enacted before adjournment, for the administration leaders had promised this to Senator La Follette and other "liberals," and besides that, they have no desire to pass a taxation bill in a Presidential election year. As produced by the house ways and means committee after great travail the measure embodies an 87 per cent confiscation of large fortunes and increased levies on the rich which would produce perhaps $250,000,000 of additional annual revenue.

CONGRESS has passed and the President has signed a bill which assures promotion in the near future for about 5,000 army officers. It accelerates the advancement of commissioned officers below the grade of colonel and takes effect September 1.

The act increases the number of colonels by 158, the number of lieutenant colonels by 364, and the number of majors by 890. More than 1,000 second lieutenants will be advanced immediately to the rank of first lieutenant and 1,769 first lieutenants will become captains. In all, 4,918 officers will receive immediate promotion.

SENATE and house committees investigating the activities of lobbyists went their separate ways, neither thinking very well of what the other was doing. Senator Black's quiz occupied itself much with the doing of representatives of the Associated Gas and Electric corporation. An executive order from the White House directed the secretary of the treasury to make available to the senate committee all incomes, excess profit, and capital stock tax returns to the extent necessary in the investigation with the so-called "holding company bill or any other matter or proposal affecting legislation." Simultaneously President Roosevelt approved a new treasury regulation authorizing the release of this information to the committee.

Representative Patton of Texas went before the house committee again and satisfactorily explained how he had been able to buy $3,000 worth of bonds out of his savings. As to the cigar box he carried away from the hotel room of John W. Carpenter, president of the Texas Power and Light corporation, it contained nothing but cigars, Patton said.

"The fact is, you have been done a very great wrong," commented Representative E. E. Cox of Georgia.

SENATOR GLASS scored perhaps the greatest victory in his long public career when the senate, without a record vote, passed his draft of the 1935 banking act, rejecting the central bank features urged by Gov. Marriner S. Eccles of the federal reserve board and favored by the administration. The doughty Virginian, who was once secretary of the treasury, had fought desperately against the Eccles scheme and his triumph was decisive. There was no demand for a roll call on the final vote, for the fate met by the proposers of various amendments showed this procedure would be futile. Senator La Follette sought to strike out a provision permitting commercial banks to underwrite securities and his proposal was beaten, 39 to 22. Senator Gerald Nye of North Dakota, another radical Republican, offered the central bank plan of Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, radio priest, which would set up a government owned and wholly dominated system. It was voted down, 59 to 10.

FROM the Communist Internationale in Moscow comes the word that the reds are planning a strike "of unprecedented scope" by seamen and dock workers on the Pacific coast of the United States, beginning in September. Sam Darcy of San Francisco, an American delegate told about it. He repeated what had already been said by Earl Browder, general scretary of the Communist party in the United States, that Communists were responsible for the seamen's and dock workers' strikes last year.

PASSAGE of the bill to restore $46,000,000 of Spanish war veterans' pensions was completed when the senate accepted the house measure, the only opposing vote being cast by Senator Hastings of Delaware. This nullifies the various adjustments made by the President for the purpose of economy to carry out the party pledge of a reduction of at least 25 per cent in the cost of administration of the federal government.

FREDERICK H. GILLETT, who represented Massachusetts in the house for many years, for six years was speaker, and thereafter served as United States senator, died in Springfield, Mass., at the age of eighty-three. Able, dignified and unfailingly courteous, Mr. Gillett was highly esteemed by his fellow congressmen, whatever their party affiliation. In his home town he was known as a politician who said little and did much.

JAPAN will probably have another cause for complaint against the United States. Secretary of the Navy Swanson has announced that strongly fortified naval bases will be established in the Pacific ocean upon the expiration of the naval limitation treaties on January 1, 1937. He said he considered the creation of naval stepping stones in the Pacific an inevitable result of the treaties' expiration. He revealed that the navy long has given consideration to Pacific fortification problems and that impetus had been given to the study since Japan's abrogation of the naval treaties.

Sec'y Swanson

The necessity for adequate bases in the Pacific was demonstrated forcibly last May during the annual fleet maneuvers off Hawaii and the Aleutian islands. According to reports, the navy high command in a report of the lessons learned in the exercises strongly recommended an Aleutian islands base.

The United States naval bases are few and far between as against those of Japan and Great Britain, which lie along the principal courses of English and Japanese traffic lines. The American bases are relatively obsolete.

GERMANY'S diplomatic note concerning the Communist attack on the liner Bremen in the port of New York took the form of a request that the offenders be punished but asked for no apology. Acting Secretary of State William Phillips, in his reply handed to the German charge d'Affaires, Dr. Rudolf Leitner, told briefly the efforts of the New York police to guard the vessel and to subdue the mob, and pointed out that some of those who took part in the attack were arrested. The German note said the incident constituted an insult to Germany.

In his press conference President Roosevelt declined to comment on the affair. Asked about the protest of Jewish organizations against the German government's religious attitude, the President intimated that the administration's view was fully expressed by Mr. Phillips' reply in which he expressed sympathy for anyone who was denied religious liberty.

Representative Dickstein of New York told the house that no apology was due to Germany for the Bremen incident and that neither the federal nor the local authorities were to blame for it. He asserted the attack was made possible by "a selfish desire on the part of the skipper of the Bremen, who would not take police advice to halt visiting to the ship and lose the revenue of visitors."

Over in Germany the saner men in authority recognized that the Nazis were going too far and were probably headed for a fall if not restrained. Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank and economic dictator of the reich, uttered a solemn warning to the anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic forces, declaring that the great task which the German people must fulfill to comply with the wishes of Hitler cannot be fulfilled unless "all disturbances are ended, be they in the intellectual or economic field."

Among developments in the current campaign against the Steel Helmets, the World War Veterans' organization, the Schutzstaffel or "black corps" formed to protect the person of Hitler, gave out a warning that it must be reckoned with in the event of a showdown against "state enemies," and asserting its complete loyalty to der fuehrer. The proclamation closed with these ominous words:

"For many reasons it would be deeply regretted if the Steel Helmets, by their own fault, should come to a dishonorable end."

MORE disasters in the Far East. Antung, an important city in Manchukuo, was engulfed by a terrific flood; a thousand persons were drowned and practically the entire population of 110,000 was rendered homeless. Formosa was ravaged by another typhoon which took many lives and did vast damage. Along the Han and Yangtse rivers the surviving Chinese were striving to keep alive and at the same time to bury the tens of thousands who died in the floods there.

ALONG the line of providing help for white collar workers, Harry L. Hopkins appointed four technical assistants to direct the employment of painters, musicians, writers and actors. They are: Nikolai Sokoloff for music, Hallie Flanagan for the theater, Holger Cahill for painters and sculptors, and Henry G. Alseberg for writers.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Most of the talk about the possibility of defeating Franklin D. Roosevelt next year, which still seems a most unlikely event, but is being discussed wherever politicians congregate, seems to hinge on the possibility of either a conservative Democratic bolt, or of a fusion ticket—a combination of Republicans with conservative Democrats.

Anything can happen, but third tickets are very difficult to start, and fusions next to impossible to get along. Of the two, the fusion would seem to have the most promise of success, but by the same token is less likely to happen.

More effective than either is simply a wholesale but unofficial bolt of party leaders. That is what happened to the Democrats when Alfred E. Smith was nominated in 1928, and when prohibition and the religious issue resulted in a considerable fraction of the Democracy of many states either staying home on election day, or going all the way and voting the Republican ticket.

Contrasted with the La Follette third party four years earlier, this was tremendous in its effects. But for the present purposes it is interesting to look back at how the La Follette third party in 1924 worked inversely to any conceivable hopes of its backers.

It will be recalled that La Follette carried one state, Wisconsin. That is all his party figured, so far as the electoral vote tabulation showed. But the fact that the La Follette party was in the race changed a great many electoral votes. The point worth considering is that in every case the effect was to drive electoral votes to the Republican nominee, instead of to the Democratic nominee.

This was because the country was prosperous, and was afraid of any element of uncertainty being injected. Widespread polls taken by various independent agencies, particularly the Literary Digest, showed, early in the campaign, that there was a possibility La Follette might carry a number of states. For example, this poll showed in September that La Follette was very close to Coolidge in California.

Scared Democrats

This resulted in frightening a great many Democrats into voting for Coolidge. They preferred Coolidge to a period of uncertainty, with the house of representatives fighting to elect some one President.

If present convictions are not changed, a great many conservative Democrats next year will prefer almost any situation which might develop to the re-election of Roosevelt. Just as a great many progressive Republicans will prefer Roosevelt's re-election to the success of any Republican candidate.

Hence the situation promises to be much more like that of 1896, when the Palmer and Buckner ticket was put up by the gold Democrats, not with any thought of really electing Palmer, but with the frank object of giving Democrats who would not vote for any Republican some place to go. The object, therefore, was really to elect McKinley, and it succeeded tremendously, especially in such border states as Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri.

It is rather curious that the most difficult method of attempting to defeat Roosevelt—by a fusion ticket—offers such possibilities this time. There is no strong Republican in sight for the nomination, but there is a whole flock of conservative Democrats who would fit well in the picture for a fusion nomination. For example, Senator Byrd of Virginia, Ex-Governor Ely of Massachusetts, Senator Tydings or Ex-Governor Ritchie of Maryland, Senator Donahey of Ohio.

There are those who think, however, that a Republican like Governor Landon of Kansas, or Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, might be all the stronger because they are not so well known nationally—on the theory that fewer people would vote against them.

Santa Claus in Politics

Seldom has the power of Santa Claus in politics been so forcibly demonstrated as by the recent senate vote on the AAA amendments, one of the chief purposes of which was to freeze the processing taxes beyond the probability of being upset by the Supreme court.

But this danger is not past, and for a most interesting reason. Expectancy here is that the present processing taxes will be held unconstitutional by the high court. Legal opinion here is divided as to whether the next taxes will pass the test or not. But legal opinion is virtually united that if it had not been for two factors, the high court would uphold the next taxes.

One of these points would have been met if congress, in fixing the taxes, had left out the formula for changing them. This formula has to do with prices paid the farmers for commodities. It provides for a change in the processing taxes if and when such prices reach "parity," or the amount considered by New Dealers as essentially fair for the farmer.

The other would have been met if congress had levied the taxes in one bill, and put all the other agricultural provisions in another.

These two changes would have made the processing taxes, in the opinion of some able lawyers here, strictly excise levies, and thus well within the clearly defined right of congress to raise money. When the language of a statute is perfectly clear, the Supreme court has held in decision after decision, it is not up to the court to delve into the reasons for the passage of the act—to read the debates and reports of committee hearings, etc.

But the fact that the taxes are included in an agricultural bill, plus the fact that a formula for changing the taxes in the event that farm prices of the commodities affected change, brings the processing taxes in the new bill close to the border line. It opens the door to the Supreme court to look into the motives for imposing the tax. It proves what every one of course knows, that the tax is not levied for general revenue purposes, but to play a part in bringing about a price change—or to improve the estate of a definite fraction of the population—the farmers.

Doubtful Situation

This would have been just as true if congress had left out the formula for changing the taxes, and if it had passed the taxes in a separate bill. But in that case the court would have been almost obliged to follow its normal course, and examine merely the text of the bill attached. In all probability it would not have gone into the allegation, which will be made when the present bill is attacked, that the tax is unconstitutional because it is not levied strictly for revenue, but to bring about a specific reform, and in favor of a particular class.

But congress did not dare use this simple device for insuring constitutionality of the AAA amendments. Because if there had been a separate tax bill, the sales tax nature of the measure would have been too glaring. The levies would have stood out as taxing the poor man's necessities—food and clothing.

This is not a predication that the court will hold the new law unconstitutional. No one knows that. As a matter of fact, it is an open question, about which there is sharp division of opinion. It may be that the high court will decide that the processing tax on wheat, or corn and hogs, or cotton, is on all fours, so far as constitutional authority is concerned, with the six cents a package federal tax on cigarettes. Also, that it will ignore the formula for changing the amount of the tax.

No one knows, but the fact remains that the whole situation is doubtful.

Golf Parallel

Golfing senators and representatives often chuckle about the misfortune of a long hitting player who drove the difficult green of a hole on a local course, and then putted out of bounds. It sounds incredible, but it is absolutely true. There were a number of witnesses.

That, in the judgment of keen observers in Washington, is what the utility magnates did in their telegraphing campaign to prevent passage of the "death sentence." They have come pretty near to nullifying all the effects of a remarkable demonstration of the wide spread of the shareholders in public utilities—a demonstration which caused the house of representatives to vote against the President by a majority of 111. And all because they overdid the last touches.

They putted out of bounds!

It is just another chapter in the long story of stupidity piled on blunder that has been the record of the public relations of one of this country's great and successful industries.

As a great statesman once remarked: "It was worse than a crime—it was a blunder."

For it was unnecessary! The effect on the national legislators had already been accomplished by the letter writing campaign from security holders when this wholesale pouring in of telegrams signed by names taken from city directories, now exposed by the investigating committee, was undertaken.

Apparently Genuine

In fact, there was a great deal of quiet checking up on writers of these protesting letters and telegrams by the senators and representatives. And in the early stages most of the letters and wires apparently were genuine. Often the writers did not know anything at all about the merits of the controversy. They wrote because the officers of the corporations in which they held stock asked them to—because the officers told them the "death sentence" would affect the value of their securities.

In this last question the legislators were not so much interested. If a number of their constituents believed, rightly or wrongly, that a vote for the "death sentence" was a vote which would take money out of their pockets, that vote might be highly dangerous when election day rolled around. Particularly if the "death sentence" passed, and the value of the stocks in constituents' hands did decline.

The constituent might never find out the truth about the matter, but he would hold his senator or member of the house responsible, and be very apt to vote against him, both in primaries and elections.

Log Cabin Effect in Crocheted Rug

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Log cabins are always picturesque, and the many antiques usually found about the place add much to complete the picture.

We can't all live in cabins, but we can satisfy our antique cravings by giving these ideas some space in our homes.

This "Log Cabin" crocheted rug was developed from the old "Log Cabin" quilt which is known to many of our readers. This model measures 28x42 inches and requires about 4 pounds of rag rug material.

The inner square of 4 triangles is made first. Four elongated pieces of same size form the first row around center, two short and two long pieces form the next or second rew. Four pieces of same size from the third row. Four same size triangles fit in corners. Slip-stitch sections together in black and single crochet all around in black. Color scheme may be all brown in light and dark shades or mixed colors. Alternate panels in light and dark shades to give contrast to rows. Measure each section as the work progresses and fit sections into spaces. Rag rug material may vary in weights.

Grandmother Clark's Rug Book No. 24 contains full directions for making this rug, and many others that will interest you. All illustrations in colors. Postpaid, 15c.

SYNOPSIS

The luck that brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, now twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly by Mrs. Chipps and her guests. At a roadhouse Gail sees a raccoon-coated man helping Ariel into a roadster. Ariel admits she was at the place, at night, and displays no remorse. Gail is gloomy as she considers the family's outlook.

Best of all had been the morning after a dance, when, waking in the big hotel on the hilltop, Gail had breakfasted in pajamas—the silk pajamas Edith had won when she won the Hope Chest at the Catholic fair last year.

After breakfast the party had split and scattered. Gail going off with Van in the roadster.

They had gone to the Cliff house and apostrophized the seals that were barking harshly on the rocks behind the drifts of fog; they had had tintypes taken on the board walk, and had tried all the swings and chutes. They had come downtown again and lunched on a roof above old Chinatown; hearing the cars honking in the streets below and the fishmen crying their wares. They had bought ginger and li-chee nuts, had lingered long at the theater doorway, studying the cheap little photographs, bursting into fresh laughter as they pretended to translate the hieroglyphics to one another.

An idiot—yes, but Van was a most lovable idiot, the ideal idiot with whom to spend a silly day like this, when one's senses were still dreamy and dulled with the excitement of a gala night, and when one had him to oneself—not showing off, not given any chance to be drawn away, innocently to hurt one's feelings. This day in Chinatown was one to be marked with a white stone for Gail.

At four they had known they must start for home. It would take almost two hours to drive to Clippersville; Gail had not dared prolong the fun too far. Van had landed her safely at her own gate at six o'clock, and she had gone into the dim old brooding house, that was close and dark tonight, with a sudden realization of the limitations of the place—the stupidness of home.

"I've had the best time I ever had in my life!" she could tell them over and over again, exhausted by sheer felicity. She told them the jokes, the situations, the events, in an inconsequential jumble. Edith had listened eagerly, sympathetically; Phil was not at home. Ariel had listened, too, but with a difference.

"Ariel had an experience last night. She went out for a casual drive with the Camps after the movie," Edith had said, "and they broke a spring, and it was nearly midnight when she got in! Phil and I were terribly frightened."

Gail's eyes and Ariel's had flashed together. But even when they were alone Ariel had not been communicative.

"You run your affairs and let me run mine!" she had said, not rudely, very simply.

"But it wasn't a broken spring, Ariel?"

"I say it was."

Gail had been too anxious to get back to her own dreams and memories to worry, even about Ariel.

The day had had its marvelous moment. It had come at four o'clock, when she and Van, laughing over the purchase of dragons, bowls, candlesticks, and charms in the sandal-scented, opium-scented interior of a dark little Chinatown shop, had been reluctantly forced to a consideration of the flying time.

"Yep, that's so, we can't stay in town—we ain't married yet!" Van had said, with his wild laugh.

It wasn't much. But it was enough for her to remember happily now; it showed that he did think of it, that it was in his mind.

"We ain't married yet!" It would have been a little better if he had not put it in the vernacular. Still . . . it was sweet.

She went to sleep dreaming of the newspapers of a few years hence. Her heart was very tender toward Van tonight. He had been a charming companion today, this big tweed-clad man with the well-filled wallet and the shining open car. Gail liked the memory of his smiling lean face grinning at her. She liked his clothes, his speech; she liked his references to places and things that belonged to a world of leisure and luxury that she did not know.

Almost every week-end was spent at the ranch in Los Gatos now, and between the Mondays and Fridays Gail lived in but a dreamy half-consciousness of what went on at home. The women of Van's set had taken her up, and when the Chipps were back at home, as they frequently were in midweek, Mary Spence or Lucia would come to Clippersville to stay with Lenore, and they would all straggle into the library during the dull forenoons to report their shopping expeditions, or to try to coax Gail to come off with them to a country club luncheon.

Life, at this accelerated pace, fairly burned her up. The new pleasures enchanted her, but never satisfied, leaving her always straining for more; which indeed was the position of them all—Lenore, Mary, Van, Fred, to say nothing of their elders. They went everywhere, anywhere, they did anything and everything that might promise fun. Breakfast on the Macleishes' yacht, for example; life on the Macleishes' yacht had nothing to do with sailing or the water. The yacht might as well have been moored ten feet underground in a coal mine, for all its gay party ever saw of the sea. Yet there was something distinguished about being asked to spend a week-end on a real yacht!

The glory spread far ahead of it, and far behind it. Gail saw her name in the Clippersville Challenge more than once during this amazing summer, listed among the guests at affairs whose distinction a few months back was beyond her wildest dreams.

She had a feverish feeling sometimes of having lost Edith, lost Phil and Sam and Ariel, lost touch with her work at the library and her duties at home—one could not live two lives, after all, and Van's very exactions were a delight, an answer to her wild young ardent prayers of last spring. Nothing mattered but that she should please him, should keep close to him. She grew wittier, quicker, gayer as the weeks went by; their talk together was merely a quick cross-fire of repartee.

One night in late August she and Van walked home from a movie in Clippersville. The night was insufferably hot, and the audience was glad enough to straggle out into the black darkness of the Calle, where the air was some degrees cooler.

"Whew! That was frightful," Gail breathed, turning her bared head up to the stars, shaking back her tawny mane.

He Might Easily Have Put His Arm About Her.

"This is a snorter!" Van commented. "Los Gatos tomorrow, hey? And into the pool."

The moon had not yet risen, but there was an odd light in the world, at nine o'clock; whitewashed surfaces and the adobe walls of the oldest buildings wore an odd pale glimmer of white. The upper branches of the great trees over the Calle rustled wearily in a hot wind.

"Maybe we'll go over to the beach Sunday," Van said.

"I wish we were there now!"

"Take you in a minute!" he offered eagerly. The girl laughed.

"A hundred miles," she said drily. "And we'd get so hot going over, and be so tired coming back, that we wouldn't gain much."

"Ice cream at Dobbins'?" he suggested.

"Kind of mussy." But she turned toward the drug store none the less; the opportunity to be seen by all the town, having soda at Dobbins' with Van Murchison, must not be overlooked.

All Clippersville came in and out of Dobbins' on a hot summer evening, and she kept wheeling about on her high stool to greet library acquaintances and neighbors and friends.

"How-do, Miss Lawrence." "Hello, Gail." "How-do, Gail." "Good evening, Miss Lawrence!"

They all saw that she was with Van Murchison.

Ariel came in and put her slim arms about Gail from behind and kissed the bright wave of tawny hair over Gail's ear.

"Take our places," Gail said, getting down. "We're done!"

She walked along beside Van silently in the street. The man kept up his regular stream of chatter for a minute; somehow it jarred tonight. Gail broke across it suddenly.

"The reason I wanted to come away was—my brother Phil was in Dobbins', there."

"Your brother Phil was!"

"Yes. 'Way over in the corner, in one of the twosomes."

"Why didn't we yell at him?" Van asked simply.

She had to have sympathy; she had to test him. With a sudden letting down of the bars she said, "Because his girl was with him."

"And don't you like her?" Van demanded, with his delighted air of discovering something amusing.

"I despise her!" Gail answered somberly.

"Not really!" he exclaimed ecstatically. "What? Phil's girl?"

"She's not a girl, really, and it's very serious," Gail said, determined to sober him. "She's a divorced woman, and she has three little boys about three and two and one—"

"Oh, I love it!" Van said with relish. "Phil! Old sober-sides! I adore it! I'm crazy about it!"

"Van, how can you say so!" Gail reproached him, hurt. "She's a terrible girl; she comes from Thomas Street Hill; she was one of the Wibsers."

"Oh, I think it's perfectly grand!" Van said, with his raw, joyous laugh. "Think of the trouble and expense saved—his family all ready-made!"

But suddenly perceiving that she was not amused, and that a genuine mood of anger and disappointment was keeping her silent, he changed his tone and said rallyingly, lightly:

"Why, what do you care who your brother marries! You don't have to marry her! It's his funeral."

"I suppose so," Gail conceded after a moment, wearily.

"Want to jump into the car and rush off somewhere and get cool?"

"It would take too long, and I'm too tired, and I promised Edith to be home early. She gets nervous."

The car was parked a hundred feet from the Lawrence gate. Gail went to the fence that had once been their meadow fence, and leaned on the bars and stared into the night that was now lighted by the moon.

"Phil's marrying would simply wreck our home," she said, reverting to the topic deliberately, desperately.

"Oh, forget it! He won't marry her," Van assured her easily.

"I think," she began, a little thickly—"I think what worries me is Ariel. She's proud, she's so sensitive—"

"Shucks! She isn't any prouder or more sensitive than you are!" Van said unsympathetically. He hated to be serious, Gail knew. He was hating it now.

"The thing about Ariel is," Gail pursued resolutely, "that she is running around with that Buddy Raisch crowd—of course they may be a perfectly decent crowd underneath—"

"Why, she's nothing but a school child!" Van said, in distaste and displeasure.

"Well, she's not such a school child but what she lets Buddy Raisch take her out in his roadster—"

"Oh, I love it! I think it's priceless!" Van exclaimed, laughing, as Gail's troubled voice fell still.

"I don't know what to do about it," Gail began again. "I was wondering," she added timidly, "what you would think I ought to do, Van?"

He was interested now, but in an annoyed, reluctant sort of way. He said quickly:

"I? For heaven's sake, what should I know about it? It seems to me if she's such a fool she likes to run 'round with a bounder like that, why, let her do it!"

"But you don't understand, Van," Gail said patiently. "She's only seventeen—she won't be eighteen until next Christmas."

"That wasn't no hindrance to the late Miss Juliet Capulet!" Van reminded her joyously.

Gail laughed faintly, and was silent.

"I'll come for you early tomorrow," Van presently said. "How's nine o'clock? That gets us to the ranch at noon, easy."

The girl felt cold, unresponsive, heavy.

They were standing close together at the old fence rail; he might easily have put his arm about her. But he never attempted that sort of thing; Gail wondered sometimes if it were some queer lack in her that prevented him, or some missing quality in him.

Going into the house she determined that she would not go down to Los Gatos at all tomorrow, and felt a great relief in the thought. If they wanted her they could make a special overture next week.

She wandered away to her own room, returned in pajamas, brushing her thick mop of tawny-gold hair.

"Phil was at Dobbins' tonight," she said suddenly, "with Lily."

Edith opened her lips to speak, made no sound. They stared at each other.

"He wasn't!" Edith whispered after awhile.

"He was."

"At Dobbins!"

"In one of the twosomes—the alcoves."

"Oh, Gail!" Edith wailed.

"I know. It's awful."

"He's crazy," the younger sister said darkly. They brooded upon it in silence.

Gail felt tired and blue; discouraged about Phil, about Ariel, about her own hopes and plans concerning Van. A sense of futility, of helplessness, was heavy upon her as she went slowly downstairs and slowly moved about the kitchen, pressing her white linen, freshening her printed chiffon.

A MODERN DUODECIMO OF HEALTH

OF EVERY 100 persons that are now alive, 36 will die from preventable diseases before they reach sixty-five years of age. If you want to be one of the sixty-four who reaches the age of sixty-five, follow these rules, part of which are Dr. Thomas D. Woods' creed of keeping fit:

1. Eat less, chew more.
2. Smoke less, breathe more.
3. Ride less, walk more.
4. Bundle less, bathe more.
5. Worry less, work more.
6. Hurry less, read more.
7. Idle less, play more.
8. Talk less, think more.
9. Go less, sleep more.
10. Waste less, give more.
11. Scold less, laugh more.
12. Preach less, practice more.

Scold less and laugh more, for there are far too few "morning faces" seen today in our thoroughfares, instead there is a worried, tired look as though people had forgotten how to smile. The depression has taken much cheer out of the world. Stocks and bonds can go, but the radiance must not go from our every day living! Let us not forget the healthful exercise of laughter. Some one has said it takes fewer muscles to smile than frown. This radiance should not pass with childhood. Childhood has many traits for us to emulate in middle age.

Childhood loves laughter and life. Children exercise. They are always moving and growing. They are happily busy and busily happy. This is why they live abundantly. We who are growing towards forty automatically cease doing these things and unwittingly court old age.

Health is the greatest asset of the human race. Daily are we beginning to wake up to the fact that physicians are for the purpose of keeping us well rather than getting us well. Not only is individual health kept constantly before the public mind with its health column in the newspapers, cautioning over-eaters, the radio answering diet questions, outdoor summer camps for younger children, and health books and magazines, but community health is being brought to the laity also through cities' safe water and milk supply, cleanliness of streets and new methods of sewerage disposals.

Health at its best means resistance to disease, relaxation from mental tension, calm from anxiety, regularity at all times, recreative power through play, temperate living and thinking, spiritual enthusiasm for one's work. Health brings a radiance in our living and gives us and others life abundant.

CAN you relax? To relax means to slacken, and relaxation does just that to human beings, it slackens them. Some individuals grow more tense as the day grows, rushing hither and yon, tremendously busy with tremendous trifles. Seven days a week is this program enacted until haste becomes a habit.

Tension is a foe to modern living. Business folk often start the day tensely by trying to do two things at once—reading the morning paper while eating breakfast. The whole goal of American living seems to be to save time. We eat faster, we drive faster, we work faster, which means we really live faster, all to save time, and what do we do with it after it is saved?

Much of the work of the world becomes an endurance test in seeing how long we can hold on, because of tenseness and rigidity that comes of gaining it, and the arch enemy of the human race appears on our horizon, horns, hoof and tail, in the shape of FATIGUE. Normal fatigue is nature's way of calling one's attention to the speed limit as a protective measure from driving too fast. She takes this way to assert her own rights. If this sign is unheeded she sends a danger signal which one cannot ignore, in the shape of OVER FATIGUE.

Over fatigue claims a tremendous toll from the human race in the form of health efficiency and joy, and leaves in their places strained nerves, poor or half-done work, worry and irritability.

Physicians tell us that ten minutes daily, complete relaxation, mind blank, body limp, on couch, with or without sleep, preferably after lunch, recreates body and soul with renewed energy and outlook on life for the other half of the day. It is an art, however, and how to do it successfully must be learned like learning to play a violin. Relaxation of this sort should be planned in a day's regular schedule like meals are planned, for it is of equal importance to mind and body. If ignored, accumulative fatigue comes sneaking up behind us and insidiously undermines us at our daily tasks. Unaware of its harmful influence we keep on, keeping on until some day, we fail to appear at our accustomed place and the physician says sadly, "Too bad, too late, this is a nervous breakdown." Think this over in time, and daily for ten minutes rest, repose, renew, revivify and rejoice, through relaxation.

POULTRY

CORN IDEAL FEED AS FAT PRODUCER

Quality Poultry Important, Expert Points Out.

By H. H. Alp, Poultry Husbandry Extension Specialist, University of Illinois. WNU Service.

While farmers may not be in a position to compete with the commercial egg-producing areas, a plentiful supply of corn offers them the opportunity of becoming leaders in the production of market poultry.

Corn, the major grain crop of the state, has been found to be the ideal feed for producing high-quality poultry. The fat produced by corn is distributed through the meat in a way similar to "marbling" in beef. Wheat produces the poorest quality poultry, it has been shown by experiments in Canada. Both oats and barley are less satisfactory than corn. Corn not only made the best flavored poultry meat but also, when supplemented with 6 per cent animal protein, produced the best gains.

In addition to the needed corn, recent good prices offer further incentive to farmers to excel in the production of quality market poultry.

With good prices being paid for quality birds and the all-important feed available in the state's corn crop, the future looks bright for the poultryman who feeds for the poultry market.

Too often all the emphasis in poultry husbandry is placed upon egg production, with little attention being given to the production of quality meat and its sale in an appetizing manner. It is true that eggs are usually responsible for the main part of the poultryman's income, but this is not surprising when eggs have been the chief objective on most poultry farms.

Green Sod Near Brooder Induces Goslings to Eat

When the goslings are ready for feeding it is a good practice to place a green sod near the nest or brooder and let the young birds pull the tender shoots themselves. This will induce them to start feeding, observes a writer in the Montreal Herald.

For the first few days goslings should be fed on bread crumbs moistened with milk. When the young birds are about a week old they may be given a mash composed of equal parts by weight of corn meal, barley meal, bran and shorts. This should be made moist but not sloppy. The birds should be fed three or four times daily for about two weeks. When the weather is fine they should be given their liberty but they should be protected from cold rains and confined at night.

Give the goslings a good start and they may then be turned out on good pasture and the feeding of mash discontinued. Make sure that the goslings have plenty of shade and a liberal supply of fresh drinking water before them at all times.

Bloody Droppings

It is said that a dog's nose is his thermometer; if you want to test his health, put your hand against the tip of his nose which is always cold if he is well, and warm if he is sick. Poultry, too, have a thermometer—it is their droppings. If you want to gauge the health of your poultry flock, take a look at their droppings each morning while they are still fresh. They tell you the story, and sometimes it is a sad one. In your baby chick droppings, look for bloody droppings and if you find them, the chances are one of three things is the matter with them—worms, crowding, or coccidiosis. —Missouri Farmer.

Care in Vaccination

An important point to remember in vaccinating against bronchitis is to examine the birds on the fifth day to make certain that each shows a "take" or inflammation of the cloaca. If there is no evidence of this, the bird should be revaccinated, according to a poultryman. If there is any doubt concerning the identity of a previous outbreak resembling bronchitis, the poultryman should consult a pathologist or veterinarian.

Poultry Notes

After being cooled, eggs should be held at 60 degrees.

If birds are properly sorted, even the cull birds may bring a surprisingly good price.

Chickens cannot do their best when mites and lice are taking their toll.

The best way to condition birds for market is to keep them in good flesh at all times.

Chicks put into a house that is thoroughly clean and then kept away from older birds seldom are troubled with lice.

The poultry brooder house should be cleaned before it is moved to new ground.

The best home-grown bedding for poultry consists of wheat, oat, and barley straw. Second comes dry, clean, shredded corn stalks; and third, dry, clean, coarse ground corn cobs.

Housewife's Idea Box

A Time Saver

Did you every try sifting flour onto a piece of waxed paper or a large paper napkin? Try it the next time you bake. You will find it easier to handle than when sifted into a bowl. Besides, the paper can be thrown away and there is no bowl to wash and replace. You will find it an economy of time and flour.

Children's Hobbies

It is wise to allow children to choose their own hobbies, as hobbies that are forced upon them often turn out failures. If the mother can arrange it, she should provide a definite place in which the children can exercise their hobbies. If the hobby is the rearing of animals or birds, the mother should impress on the children that their pets are not toys or playthings, and that they must be loved and cared for. There is a greater likelihod of a hobby turning out a success if the mother gives the child to understand that the success or failure of the hobby depends entirely upon the child.

Rash on Baby Caused Constant Irritation

Relieved by Cuticura

"About three months after my baby was born, eczema broke out all over her body. It came out in a rash and was very red. It caused constant irritation and loss of sleep so that I had to put gloves on her hands to prevent scratching. I could not bathe her.

"For nearly two years this eruption lasted. Then I read about Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and sent for a free sample. I bought more, and after using two boxes of Ointment with the Soap she was relieved completely of the itching." (Signed) Mrs. Raymond Parks, 1469 Massachusetts Ave., North Adams, Mass.

WILTON NEWS

Many evidences can be seen and heard of the valuable service rendered by the Boy Scouts of our town, directed by their Master, Hoye Splawn. By repairing the Methodist Church bell, they made it possible for its clear sweet tones to again call the worshipers to service. Of inestimable value was their aid in gathering donations for the Orphans Home at the close of our Revival meeting. Dr. J. O. Colley, Supt. of the Orphanage at Troy, very highly praised this group for the service and their director's influence, for good in their lives. On Friday a special parent's night service was rendered by this group to a large audience.

The Baptist W. M. S. held their program meeting with Mrs. A. B. Canant, Friday afternoon. Miss Mary Sanders was leader for the evening. The subject of the program was "Lifting the Banner of the Cross in Africa". Those who took part on the program were: Mesdames Ada Pruett, who conducted the devotional; B. B. Curry; W. M. Whetstone, A. B. Canant; C. O. Arant; J. W. Ward and Miss Alice Nolen. The R. A. business meeting was held with the Ladies preceding their program. There were two boys present with their leader, Mrs. A. B. Canant. After the conclusion of all business, Mrs. Canant served delicious sliced watermelon to the group.

Mrs. Sarah Nabors and Floyd Nabors have returned from a visit with relatives in Birmingham and North Alabama.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Kanaday and Estelle Kanaday, of Steppville, Ala., visited Mrs. Kanaday's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Spradlin last week.

Mrs. Alec Gilmore, of Birmingham, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Adams this week.

Miss Alice Beasley and A. B. Beasley are spending this week in Pensacola with relatives and friends.

Henry Lewley and Delton Rhodes are sight-seeing on the Mississippi Delta this week.

WILSONVILLE

A very interesting event this weekend was the house party given by Mr. Walter Riddle, of Wilsonville, at Lokey's Camp, Mardis Ferry.

Those enjoying the hospitality of the occasion were: Miss Carolyn McCluskin, of Birmingham; William Arthur Taylor; Miss Dorothy Davis, of Birmingham; Walter Riddle; Miss Mallye Smith; Stinson Hill; Miss Sarah Louise Weldon; Stewart Jones, of Thomasville; Miss Mary John Weldon; Mansel Wolf; Miss Mary Lokey; Frank Jackson; Miss Virginia Lokey, of Birmingham; L. B. Riddle, Jr., of Columbiana; Misses Ida Mae Gwin, of Leary, Ga.; and Elizabeth Weldon. Joining the party Sunday afternoon were Messrs. J. D. Riddle and Clifford Hearn, of Talladega.

Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Lokey were chaperons. The guests were entertained with swimming, boating and dancing.

Miss Elizabeth Weldon gave a picnic, Monday night, at Mardis Ferry, honoring Miss Clarice Evans, formerly of Wilsonville. The guests participated in swimming and active games, under the direction of Miss Mamie Hill.

Mr. Speer Kytle visited his sister, Mrs. E. B. Lindsey, and Mr. Lindsey this week-end.

Mr. Archer is visiting his daughter, Mrs. C. T. Weldon, this week.

Mr. Jesse Weldon has returned from a trip to Hot Springs, Ark.

Miss Mary Lokey and her guest, Miss Doris Davis, of Hattiesburg, Miss., were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Lokey, of Columbiana, last Tuesday night. A party including the Rhythm 'Ristocrats and their dates was given in their honor.

DOGWOOD NEWS

The revival services closed Saturday night at Rines Crossing. The Rev. Sam Henderson goes to Boothton where he will conduct a revival.

Mr. Otis Williams is working at Alabama College for a few days.

The Underwood Baptist Church is conducting their revival this week with the Rev. Johnson, of Siluria helping. Everyone is urged to come out and take part.

Miss Leslie Faulkner spent the week-end in Birmingham.

The many friends extend sympathy to Mrs. Fred Bunn in the loss of her mother. Also Miss Burnett and Mrs. Vanderslice in losing their mother last week.

Mr. H. L. Hicks is attending summer school at Alabama College.

Miss Margie Lovelady was the guest of her sister last Saturday.

Gertrude Lee Kirkley is spending this week at home attending the revival. She has spent the summe in Birmingham studying violin.

Mrs. Holly Henderson has been quite ill, but is improving now.

OPEN HOUSE MONTH

FOR ALABAMA POWER COMPANY CUSTOMERS AND THEIR FAMILIES

Pack Up A Picnic Lunch, Bring the Family and Neighbors With You and Enjoy Yourself

ALTHOUGH visitors are welcome to our power plants at any time, we have set the month of August aside as "Open House Month", and especially invite you and your friends to spend an enjoyable day at one of our many electric power generating plants. Plenty of refreshing drinking water is available and the shade of many trees makes a pleasant place to eat a picnic lunch.

FOREMOST IN POWER DEVELOPMENT

The power plants of this Company are among the outstanding ones of the Country. Mitchell Dam near Verbena, Ala., is the only one of its kind in existence. Martin Dam at Cherokee Bluffs on the Tallapoosa River backs up one of the largest artificial bodies of water in the United States, making a lake with a shore line of approximately 700 miles. The Gorgas Steam Plant, in the heart of the Alabama coal fields, was built to augment the hydro plants in seasons of drought, so that electric service could always be dependable. Lay Dam is the original large power development in Alabama and one of the first in the South. Jordan Dam, Thurlow Dam and Upper Tallassee all have features of great interest.

VISIT ONE OR MORE OF THESE POWER PLANTS

Your visit will be not only instructive, but you will be impressed with the manner in which electricity is made and will have a better idea of the great part this Company has played in the development of the natural resources of Alabama and the care it takes to keep your electric service dependable.

Any of our stores will give you directions to help you find the dam sites easily. See one or all of them. You will receive a cordial welcome.

Other Points of Interest

Altho not as spectacular as the hydro-electric plants, but fully as interesting, are the substations from which electricity is "directed" to the various towns and communities over the State. On your way to or from the dams, you may want to stop at one of the following substations, to which any filling station in the towns where they are located can direct you.

PERSONAL MENTION

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

SHALL WE COOPERATE WITH THE STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION FOR ROAD CONSTRUCTION IN SHELBY COUNTY?

Citizens of Shelby County will have to cooperate with the State Highway Commission in their plans for road building, if roads are to be improved and new highways constructed thru Shelby County, according to Gaston B. Scott, President of the State Highway Commission, who spent Friday in Columbiana.

Mr. Scott stated that the Tax Commission had requested the full cooperation of the Board of Commissioners in each County, and asked that no sum of money be paid an individual owner of property, thru which the State Highway Commission would construct or improve roads. In other words, the property consisting of a 25-foot right of way requested, will have to be donated by the individual thru whose property the road will run, or the route will be changed to a community whose citizens are patriotic and far-sighted enough to aid the state to this extent in the construction of improved highways.

If Shelby County is to benefit from the extensive road projects now being mapped out by the members of the Highway Commission, they will be requested to comply with the demands necessary to procure this lasting improvement for the promotion of future permanent road development.

Mr. Scott spent several hours in Columbiana, Friday, paid a call to the Democrat office, and interestingly discussed proposed plans for Shelby County Road Construction. It is up to the INDIVIDUAL OWNER of the property, and to each citizen of the County to fall in step with the Forward March movement now current in the State.

If the Road Construction program is carried out, and the necessary 25-foot right of way procured from the owner of the property, thru which the road will run, the individual donating such right of way, will not only benefit his property, his business and living conditions, but he will be better prepared for serving the patrons who buy needed supplies when travelling in the ever increasing popular mode of travel—Automobiles! If the proposed road does not come thru Columbiana and other points in Shelby County, it will be a regrettable and a costly loss to Shelby County, and one which will retard progression in the County with other towns in the State which will take advantage of the Administration's plan for this much needed improvement.

The Road Program is a challenge to the patriotism and good business judgment of the individual owner of the property through which the proposed Road Improvement and Construction of Highways will run. Good Roads are essential to further development of Shelby County! Shall we not wholeheartedly offer complete cooperation?

Miss Clarice Evans, who will soon complete the Nurse's training course at South Highland Infirmary in Birmingham, spent her vacation with her mother Mrs. James Evans, and her sister, Mrs. W. T. Taylor. During her stay in Columbiana, Miss Evans was the inspiration of many social courtesies given in her honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Gary Luttrell, June and Doris Luttrell, of Atlanta, were week-end guests of Judge and Mrs. Wales W. Wallace.

Mr. and Mrs. James R. White are spending their vacation in Atlanta, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gary Luttrell.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Davis are visiting relatives in Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Christian spent the week-end in Birmingham, and while there were entertained by their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Ehney Camp.

Charles Benton, who holds a responsible position with the Lincoln Life Insurance Co., in Birmingham, is spending several days with his mother, Mrs. Fay Miles Benton.

Dr. D. S. Lightcap is having a taste of "single blessedness (?)" this week, as "Lady" is vacationing in South Alabama and being extensively entertained in Greenville, her former home. "Doc" does not look any too happy over the situation, but he is making the best of it by dining at Curlee's every day, and we constantly remind him as the days go by—"It won't be as long as it has been"—and that's something to be glad about! As far as that goes, who doesn't miss "Lady"?

Miss Martha Gallatin, popular Secretary in the Relief Administration office, has received a lucrative promotion and left for Ashland, Alabama, Sunday, where she will continue her successful stenographic career.

Mr. and Mrs. Terrell Jackson and young daughter, Jean, of Gadsden, have been the guests of their parents, Judge and Mrs. L. B. Riddle, in Columbiana.

Miss Elizabeth Smith, of Wilsonville, and John Batson, of Bessemer, two favorite friends of the writers, were cordially welcomed guests in Columbiana on Sunday afternoon. These two "sweethearts-since-school-days" will soon take the long march to Hymen's Altar to the tune that "Mendelsohn wrote" for such a journey, and we shall happily sing them on their way, with the personal wish that their lives may be:

"Two volumes bound as one complete
A thrilling story, old but sweet,
No title needs the cover fair,
Two golden hearts are blended there".

Miss Hazel Ruth Swann is touring South Alabama, the guest of her aunt, Miss Ethel Swann, in Pritchard, Alabama. From there this popular little Miss will visit Mobile and other points before returning to Columbiana in time for school activities.

Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Luther, of Calera, will sail from Mobile on August 31, for an extended tour of Europe. Mrs. Luther is a native of London, England, and will remain six months on vacation. She has kindly promised to send back some interesting articles from "across the pond", and we eagerly await her first message. She also asked that the Democrat follow her to the foreign clime, and can we wait to get started on that journey? Thru the columns of this paper is about the only way we shall ever get to England—but it will be lots of fun travelling the journalistic route, and greeting old friends from Shelby County during their stay abroad. We wish for Mr. and Mrs. Luther a happy and successful "bon voyage".

Miss Lucy Norwood, of Calera, was a visitor in the Democrat office on Monday. We proffer thanks for her continued loyalty to the Democrat, and enjoyed her bright and breezy chatter while here.

Alvin Richards, popular salesman with the Marshall-Bruce Company, in Nashville, Tenn., spent Monday in Columbiana transacting business.

Mayor Harry Gordon is spending a few days in Biloxi and Gulfport, Mississippi.

Misses Nell Faulkner and Larraine Cerfoot, of Oxford, Alabama, are the guests of Miss Eloise Lester.

Sam A. Lokey, popular Legionaire and prominent attorney of Columbiana, has returned from a meeting of the Executive Committee of the State Legion organization, held in Montgomery, Alabama.

Listen folks, the thermometer in front of Cole's Drug Store is at this very minute 101 in the shade! My brain could not stand those figures. It is dissolved. Scrambled! Immediately after reading this startling fact, my Banker came by to discuss a "Principal" in which it seems I have lost "Interest". Like Cheerful Cherub again, it seems:

"I cannot keep my check book straight—
I find to be quite frank
I'm much too lavish with myself
And stingy with the BANK".

The ORDER just received is to "Call and settle same"—so, as much as I hate to leave you—Would YOU DARE not go to this emporium when summoned? I HOPE to be with you next Thursday! Until then, I am VACATING!

Versatility Here, and Also Comfort

Pattern 2240

No one has ever designed anything to equal the chic and comfort of the "Wrap-around" for efficient performance of household duties. And in our crowded lives today, Efficiency plays an important part. Perhaps that's why a house frock that could "go to market" to prove its versatility has been conceived. Don't those big square buttons conform beautifully with the unique cut of the front?—and joys of joys, the wrap is deep enough to keep from popping out at the wrong time. Confidentially, freedom isn't the only virtue of those sleeves—they're so easy to make.

Pattern 2240 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 16 takes 4 yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department 243 West Seventeenth street, New York.

EQUALITY

"Women are advising equal rights for men in matters of alimony," remarked the hostess.

"We might go even further," said Miss Cayenne, "and insist on a Blue Eagle code for gigolos."

That Was All

Judge—Now, just what passed between you and the complainant?

Defendant—Well, your honor, there were two pairs of fists, one turnip, seven bricks, a dozen assorted bad names and a lump of coal.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Knew Her Men

"Bill's girl has dropped him; he's broke?"

"As usual when girls drop things, eh?"

"Not exactly; she broke him before she dropped him."—Exchange.

"What would you say, Jackie, if I married your mother and became your daddy?"

"Don't do it, Mr. Smith."—Leipzig Der Lustige Sachse.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

In the house-to-house canvasses being conducted all over the state by better housing committees, organized by the Federal Housing Administration, more than 137,000 home owners and tenants have been visited and more than $500,000 of modernization work has been pledged.

Vouching for the story with a straight face, an Athens editor tells the story of a subscriber who brought a living four-legged chicken into his office. The editor said the chicken, almost full grown, walked on two of the legs, while the others stood out behind.

With a shout from Gov. Bibb Graves, "we're on our way—the first in the nation," a creosoted power line pole slid into place on the outskirts of Elba to inaugurate a rural electrification project that will carry the magic power of electricity to 45 farm families.

Harry Maring, vice-president, Selma Chamber of Commerce, and chairman of the industrial committee, has gone to New York to confer with officials of the Manhattan Shirt Company over prospect of getting one of the company's factories located there.

The romance and adventure of his two-year expedition into the Antarctic will be described by Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd when he speaks at Birmingham Municipal Auditorium Nov. 7 under auspices of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Adoption by the Alabama Agricultural Department of the national poultry improvement plan sponsored by the United States Department of Agriculture's bureau of animal industry has been announced by R. B. Jones, state poultry inspector.

The Alabama Public Service Commission has granted the petition of the Alabama Power Company to revise its suburban electric rates and announced that the revised rates would result in an annual savings to customers of $28,500.

Offices have been established in the Gadsden National Bank Building for District No. 2 of the Alabama Federal Resettlement Administration. Officials of this agency will purchase small farms for worthy families on a long-term credit basis.

More than 500 members of the Mosley family paid tribute to Mrs. Mary S. Mosley, 85-year-old widow of a Confederate veteran, when five generations of Mosleys gathered at a reunion at the old family homestead near Morris.

Although rates were reduced 45 per cent, the municipal light plant of the city of Athens, the first city in Alabama to use power furnished by the Tennessee Valley Authority, ended its fiscal year May 31 with a net profit of $6,501.93.

The Alabama Oyster Commission, recently created by legislative act, has tentatively decided to request $250,000 in federal funds for the replanting and general improvement of oyster beds in Mobile and Baldwin Counties.

Her ear bitten by a mule, Donna Jean Coffman, three-year-old Athens girls was under observance at an Athens hospital. Physicians expressed concern for the child after the mule died for fear it may have had rabies.

Price Williams, 55, veteran probate judge of Mobile County, was found shot to death in his auto parked on a lonely road seven miles west of the city. Coroner H. S. J. Walker returned a verdict of suicide.

Grady Brown has been returned to the State Insane Asylum at Tuscaloosa forestalling trial on charges of assault with intent to murder in connection with the brutal attacks on four Anniston children July 20.

The Morgan County Farmers Federation and county home demonstration clubs will sponsor a county-wide picnic at the tabernacle near Hartselle Aug. 16, when 3,000 farmers are expected to attend.

The Colbert County Fair will begin Sept. 30. James DiRago, chairman of the American Legion Fair Assn., has made arrangements for a free air circus and auto show among the events.

W. L. Bruce, of Catherine, and a group of West Dallas merchants and capitalists plan to extend electric power to serve Orville, Safford, Alberta, Gastonburg, and Catherine.

A gala program, celebrating the opening of the Piedmont-Cedartown Highway will be held at Piedmont Aug. 21, under the sponsorship of the Kiwanis Clubs of the two towns.

Miss Elizabeth McNeil, senior at Howard College, has been awarded a $400 scholarship at Barnard College, undergraduate school for women at Columbia University, New York.

A 13-rattler snake, killed by C. O. Miller and W. B. Lee near Luverne, has been skinned and stuffed and is on display at the Elba Motor Club.

Addison Milligan has confessed he slew Mrs. Lorena Daniel, ending the mystery surrounding the killing on the banks of Shoals Creek near Hartselle on July 8.

Marion Suttle, 10, tossed her 6-year-old sister, Ann, from a railroad trestle to safety near Centerville and died a second later below the wheels of a locomotive.

Dallas County's first bale of 1935 cotton was sold at auction in Selma for 28 cents a pound, or about 16 cents above the day's quotation for middling.

Two Birthdays
Mussolini Waiting?
Italy's Gold in London
Match This, Mr. Swope

Two important human beings celebrated their birthdays recently. Henry Ford was seventy-two. If you saw him going upstairs two steps at a time and guessed his age, you would say, at most, fifty-five.

Arthur Brisbane

Mussolini has just celebrated his fifty-second birthday. You may spend a profitable three minutes contrasting those two leaders of men in your imagination's eye.

Henry Ford has made millions of people independent of the law of gravitation.

History will tell exactly what Mussolini has done. His test lies in the future.

The London Times and Universal Service announce a clash between Ethiopians and Italians, 20 Ethiopians and 40 Italians, killed, a stream supplying the Italian camp turned in a new direction and the Italians compelled to retreat.

"Rome " has no information" on this incident.

Perhaps Mussolini, who knows that war should supply only good news, is waiting to add something such as: "Air bombardment of Addis Ababa has inflicted swift retribution for the killing of 40 Italians."

Italy has $100,000,000 in gold stored in London and can't get it. Why cannot Italy get that gold? England says to Italy, "When you pay the money you borrowed in the war, you can have your gold."

Britons are practical. When they lent money to Italy they said, "Send along your gold; not that we question your honor, but as a mere formality."

Too bad this simple-minded country didn't think of that when it shipped $10,000,000,000 abroad. Perhaps we shall think of it next time, more probably not.

The General Electric company has developed, electrically, a temperature of 13,000 degrees Fahrenheit, announced as "hotter than the sun's 9,000 degrees."

But 9,000 is only the sun's external temperature.

Go to some distance into the sun's interior, where atoms are throwing off electrons to supply us and other planets with heat and light, and you would find a temperature of 40,000,000,000 degrees centigrade. When will Gerard Swope develop that temperature artificially?

Thomas E. Dewey, chosen to fight racketeering in New York, says in a broadcast:

"The criminal underworld plays no favorites. It preys on the public, on industry and on labor alike. Organized labor has been one of its most recent and most tragic victims. Many originally honest and sound labor unions have been slowly but surely infected with the virus of organized crime. Today certain corruptive leaders operate as extortionists both upon industry and upon members of their own unions.

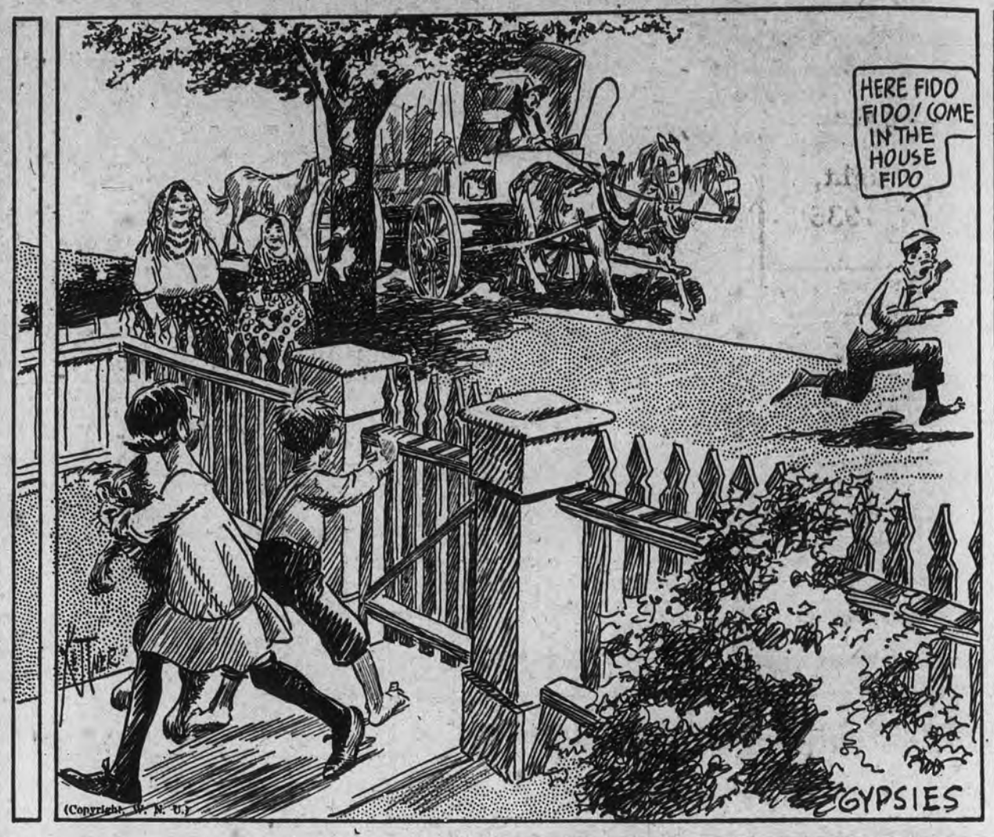
An intelligent group of motorists announce a "safe driving campaign for August," urging automobile drivers to consider safety, particularly in their own cars.

The safest thing would be to send tens of thousands of cars now running to the junk pile, get new cars and live longer. Modern tires give miraculous mileage, but often they look "good for ten thousand miles more" when they have reached the danger point.

In Yugoslavia 20 years ago Alexander Bogar, now living in Minneapolis, Minn., killed a friend in a fight. Wishing to make amends, he offered to marry the widow. That could not be done. He has saved $15,000, working in mines, and now offers the money to the twenty-two-year-old daughter of the man he killed. She is poor and will accept.

Atonement by payment is almost as old as murder. There are still countries in which crime may be paid for in cash, the amount depending on the rank of the person murdered.

George, former king of Greece will take the crown if 60 per cent of Greeks vote in his favor. He thinks 60 per cent enough. Once crowned, George might be surprised to find what 40 per cent of Greeks could do.



George Bernard Shaw, in a dispatch to Editor Walter Howey, remarks that both Irish and Jews are not easy to deal with when they are uncomfortable. That applies also to Greeks.

The British forbade shipment of arms from England to Abyssinia, also shipments from England to Italy. Annoyed, the emperor of Ethiopia declines to provide special guards for the British legation at Addis Ababa. The British will send their own guards. They have a way of protecting their nationals.

Glamorous Midsummer Silk Prints

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MIDSUMMER prints are simply gorgeous. Adjectives, no matter how extravagant, how eloquent or picturesque, fall short of describing them. It is impossible to capture their beauty of color and design and release it via mere words. Like the full blown rose that reaches perfection of bloom in midsummer, the lovely prints now worn, especially the sumptuous evening prints, have reached to such heights of glamorous beauty one's very being thrills at the sight of them.

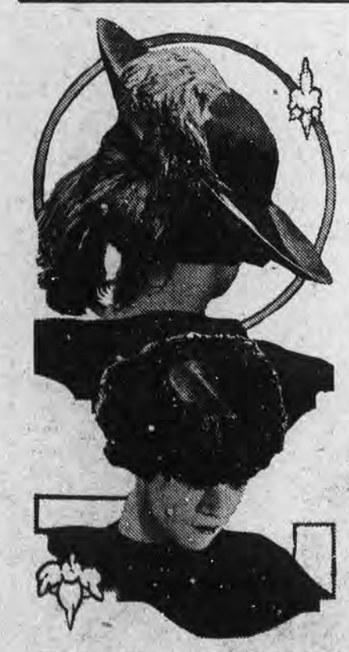
The enchanting gowns here pictured are self-explanatory as to why women continue to adore prints. The superlative loveliness of the stately model to the left in the group carries the message that no happier choice can be made in the way of a summery evening gown than a filmy, vaporous printed chiffon which silhouettes huge white waterlilies touched with pink and green shadows against a misty black background. The scarflike arrangement which falls across the shoulders, floating in summer airiness at every move, is typical of current styling.

Then there is a frock of perfectly beautiful flower-printed silk fantasy crepe which the lady seated is wearing. To mar the perfection of this glorified print with a superfluous trimming touch would be an unforgivable gesture. Which is why the designer fashioned this superb print along absolutely simple lines. This print is vivid with splashes and dashes of warm tropical colors—as gay, as gorgeous as a bird of brilliant exotic plumage.

The lovely dress with a cape centered in the picture has a story of fascinating interest to tell. It is of violet-gray mousseline de soie. Huge flower appliques, cutouts from a silk poppy print, are festooned on the cape forming a garland about the shoulders, also spiraling around the skirt in double file. The soft sash is of chartreuse green silk taffeta.

This gown is especially significant in that it demonstrates the use of cutout florals from printed fabric as a trimming feature. Designers are doing very clever things along this line of thought. One striking effect is the lei or garland which is worn about the shoulders like a boa or necklace, or is used to finish low-cut necklines, that is made entirely of cutout flowers taken from gay printed chiffons or crepes or whatever the silken material may be. Boutonnieres made of the same print as the frocks with which they are worn are also smartly in vogue.

Perhaps one of the most unique and charming adapations of cutout print florals is seen in sleeves which are formed of the flower motifs which are caught in the center only, the petals fluttering out as if they were real flowers. These flower sleeves contrast a monotone frock. By the way, advance news in regard to fall fashions places special emphasis on the approaching vogue of contrasting sleeves, such as lace or silk print or embroidered sleeves used with monotone silk or velvet or wool for the frock.



Again, speaking of the use of cutout print motifs, cunning collar and cuff sets are formed in the manner described above. The theme is one that may be handsomely worked out for bridesmaids' hat and muff sets.

The flair for beautiful prints also expresses itself in that several dressmakers are making up plain chiffon over printed satin slips. The effect is entrancing. A timely hint for your next party dress.

FALL FORECAST

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The dramatic sweep of ostrich feathers on fall hats forecasts the return to elegance in fashion. Ostrich feathers straight, curled, jaunty or flowing are being worn on all types of hats from sports to evening. The picturesque afternoon hat in the illustration is in bright green velour. Its crown is cut sharply in half by a beautiful black and white plume which emerges underneath the brim, curling softly down over the neck. The other hat is a type which milliners are showing for wear with dinner dresses. The body of the hat is sheerest net—serves as a foundation for the luxuriant feather which constitutes the brim and trim.

FLOWERS CURRENT THEME OF STYLISTS

"Flowers for Madame" is the current theme song of the stylists.

Fresh flowers are being used as a definite part of current costume ensembles, used in new and unusual ways.

There is, in case you didn't know it, a "tailored corsage" of orchids, for wear with tailored daytime costumes. The stems are wound with velbet ribbon, in a color to harmonize with the ensemble, and are pinned against the collar of the frock or jacket.

For evening gay young things are wearing a spray of small pink orchids across the back of the head, tiara fashion.

Flowers in the hair are all the rage just now. Reminiscent of Carmen are the sprays of red camellias worn by dashing brunets these nights on their dark curls, just behind the right ear.

Another new idea is that of attaching a single orchid to your jeweled bracelet.

New Silk Patent Leather Belts for Daytime Wear

Like soft, crushed girdles are the new silk patent leather belts for daytime dresses. They fit snugly around the waist, and are just a bit wider than the belts you've been wearing. The colors match or contrast with all your new summer dresses—bright red, dark red, pink, lilac, yellow and black. They give a smart touch that adds so much to your costume and proves that it pays to be up-to-date even in details!

Gilt Bead Jabots

Jabots are not always of organdie or lace. The silver and gilt bead variety is modernistic and combines the role of dress jewelry with that of a jabot.

Lesson for August 11

DANIEL

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1:8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God?—I. Corinthians 6:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Daniel Grew Strong.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Ten Times Strong.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Obeying the Laws of Health.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Motives for Total Abstinence.

The lesson committee has designated this lesson, "Temperance and Health." In the use of this as a temperance lesson it must be borne in mind that it is temperance in the sense of self-mastery, rather than having to do with indulgence in intoxicating liquors. Daniel's self-mastery was due to his right relation and loyalty to his God. It is utterly futile to hope to enforce a program of temperance upon those who are in rebellion against God.

I. Daniel in Captivity in Babylon (vv. 1-4).

Daniel with his companions were carried away to Babylon in the first seige of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. At the command of the king, certain choice young men were carried away because they were "skillful in wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science," that they might be trained to stand in the king's palace.

II. Daniel's Trials (vv. 5-7).

1. Conscience tested (v. 5). By the appointment of the king, a daily provision was arranged of the king's meat and wine for Daniel and his companions. This was contrary to the custom among the godly Jews. Being contrary to the Jewish customs they could not conscientiously partake of them.

2. The change of name (vv. 6, 7). Among the Hebrews names were given to children which were most significant. Daniel means "God is my Judge." The significance of this name is that all the problems of life were submitted to God for a decision. God was made the arbitrator of his life. His name was changed to Belteshazzar, which means "Bel's prince." It meant, therefore, one whom the chief god of the Babylonians favors. Hananiah means "gift or beloved of Jehovah." His name was changed to Shadrach, which signified "illumined by the sun god, Rach." Mishael means "who is as God?" His name was changed to Meshach, which means "who is like the goddess, Sheshach, the gentle one?" Azariah means "Jehovah is our help." This was changed to Abednego, which means "the servant of Nego." Back of the change of names was the attempt of Satan to wipe out the name of the true God.

III. Daniel's Courtesy (vv. 8-13).

Daniel seems to have been the spokesman for the company. Although his heart was fixed, he did not forget to be a gentleman. He requested to be excused from this meat and drink in order that he be not defiled. We should learn from this that in times even of great trials we should be courteous. When Daniel asked that a test be made as to the effect of the food upon the countenance of himself and companions, gracious consideration was given to them.

IV. Daniel's Triumph (vv. 14-21).

1. As to physical health (vv. 14-16). A test was made for ten days, and it was shown that Daniel and his companions were fairer in countenance and fatter in flesh than those who indulged in the eating of the king's meat. This meat and wine would have been pleasant to the palate, but would have meant a compromise of the conscience. It is obligatory upon God's children today to abstain from that which is contrary to his law.

2. Spiritual insight (v. 17). Because of Daniel's loyalty to God, Nebuchadnezzar's dream was revealed to him (2:31-45), and he was given visions sketching the whole history of the world.

3. Mental growth (vv. 17-20). Daniel and his companions were found to be ten times superior in matters of wisdom and understanding to their comrades. Those who abstain from indulgence in the use of strong drinks have clearer minds and are thus better equipped mentally for their work than those who indulge therein.

4. Their social and political preference (v. 19). They stood before the king. No higher position of influence and honor could have been given them.

5. Their temporal influence (v. 21). They were all advanced to positions of influence, and Daniel became president of the college of wise men, and the prime minister of the nation. This position he continued to hold during several dynasties.

Good Actions

Do you act as if you had ten thousand years to throw away. Death stands at your elbow. Be good for something, while you live and it is in your power. What remains but to live easy and cheerful, and crowd one good action so close to another that there may be the least empty space between them.

Habit

Habit is the magistrate of our lives; and, therefore, we should see that we have good habits.—Lord Bacon.

Simple Rules for Guidance of Those Fond of Sponge Cake and Angel Food; Bake in Slow Oven

Sponge cake and angel food are in a class by themselves, and although they are called cakes, they are made so differently from other cakes that they need a column to themselves.

Every kind of sponge cake has eggs as its basis, and in large proportion. It also has sugar and flour in small proportion. Usually it has, besides, a little acid—vinegar, lemon juice or cream of tartar—to help stiffen the beaten eggs which lighten the mixture.

Quick or cheap sponge cakes which economize on eggs have a small amount of baking powder to help raise them. This type of cake may not have the fine texture of real sponge cake, but it is so easy to make, so certain to turn out consistently, and so good with ice cream, whipped cream or crushed fruit, that it is a standby in many households.

I am giving you my grandmother's recipe today, says a culinary expert. It was the first dish I was allowed to help with when I was a little girl. Tradition made it necessary to beat the eggs and sugar together for ten minutes with a silver fork, and I loved to relieve a tired arm for a moment or two. In later years I found that a wheel egg beater reduced the time for beating at least half.

This is still my favorite sponge cake because it has more flavor than the more expensive cakes with their finer texture.

The success of any sponge cake depends first upon using fine granulated sugar, well sifted (several times) flour, and preferably cake flour, and upon the baking. A tube pan is the best for this purpose and a slow oven (about 320 F.) gives best results. This allows the cake to rise slowly and form a crust evenly. This means baking for a long time—about an hour for a large cake in a tube pan.

When the cake comes out of the oven, turn it upside down on a cake cooler and let it come out of the pan, as it shrinks slightly with cooling. If it does not come out of itself, after it is cool, loosen carefully around the edge.

Grandmother's Sponge Cake.

3 eggs
1 cup sugar
1 cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 tablespoon lemon juice, or 1 teaspoon vanilla

Beat the eggs and sugar together five minutes. Sift flour, salt and baking powder together and fold into the other mixture. Flavor and bake in a long bread pan or in muffin pans 25 to 30 minutes in a slow oven (320 F.).

Angel Food Cake.

1 cup sifted pastry or cake flour
1 cup egg whites
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon cream of tartar
¼ teaspoon almond extract
1 cup sifted granulated sugar

Sift flour once, measure, and sift flour four more times. Beat egg whites and salt with egg beater. When foamy add cream of tartar. Continue beating until the eggs are stiff but not dry. Fold in sugar, a little at a time. Add flavoring. Fold in flour the same way. Pour batter into angel food pan and bake in a slow oven (325 degrees F.) for one hour. Remove from oven and invert pan.

Inexpensive Sponge Cake.

3 eggs
1 cup sugar
1 cup cake flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
Salt
¼ cup cold water

Break the eggs into a bowl, add the sugar and beat together ten minutes. Add the dry ingredients, which have been sifted together, alternately with the water. Bake in cake pan in slow oven, 325 degrees F., for about one hour.

Biblical Spots Little Changed by "Progress"

The rapid modernization of Palestine and the Near East has given many an erroneous impression that the spots associated with the Bible have been disturbed and changed. Biblical Palestine remains as isolated and detached from progress as in the days of Abraham.

The eight old olive trees in the Garden of Gethsemane are believed to be the same trees under which Christ prayed. The rock on which Peter, James and John slept in the garden shows no alteration. It was a few yards from this stone that Judas betrayed Christ with a kiss.

The Golden Gate through which Jesus entered Jerusalem in triumph is now walled up, but the little building in which King Solomon died is still standing. One of the most interesting spots, the Wailing Wall, is a fragment of the temple destroyed by Titus in 70 A. D.

Just six miles from Jerusalem lies Bethlehem, where Constantine's basilica stands upon the spot which is believed to be the site of the stable in which Mary and Joseph took refuge and where 15 silver lamps burn ceaselessly above the place where Jesus was born.

All through the holy land, along the rambling roads where characters straight out of the Bible work and carry water from the wells, at the Sea of Galilee and the River Jordan, travelers refresh their Biblical memories.

A Question to the Taxpayers and School Patrons of
SHELBY COUNTY
Your county (including its municipalities) receives annually in taxes from electric utilities approximately $15,000*
Of which amount approximately $9,000
Goes Directly to Public Schools
TVA pays no County taxes and no other taxes from which your County will receive any share.
If TVA takes over all electric operations in the State of Alabama, are you prepared, as tax-payers, to make up this huge loss? Are you prepared, as school patrons, to accept this reduction in school revenues?
*Includes County and City Ad Valorem Taxes and Licenses; also State 3 Mill School Ad Valorem Taxes; State Kilowatt Hour Taxes and State Franchise Taxes allocated to Counties. From reports for 1933, viz., State Auditor's Report, State Tax Commission's Report, State Comptroller's Report; and information obtained from State Department of Education and State Tax Commission.

What is the yardstick for a cigarette...
Take mildness for one thing—how does it measure up for mildness?
Chesterfields are milder—not flat or insipid, of course, but with a pleasing flavor.
Then take taste for another thing—does it have plenty of taste?
Chesterfields taste better—not strong but just right.
In other words, They Satisfy—that's my yardstick for a cigarette.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

Circuit Court will open Monday morning, August 19th. Civil cases are set for the first week during which time the Grand Jury will also convene. The criminal docket will be tried during the week of August 26.

Senator Harry Riddle has introduced a bill in the Legislature providing for the purpose of ICE to be used for cooling drinking water used in the County offices. This should be encouraging news for "thirsty officials" of Shelby County.

President John Lyon is traversing the County Highways in an endeavor to obtain right of ways required for the permanent construction of the highways contemplated by the State Highway Commission, to be routed through Shelby County. President Lyon states he has found the citizens, through whose property the new Highways will run, to be very cooperative and they are falling in line with the plan for further future developement of their County.

Miss Agnes Wingard, Secretary in Department of Education office, is vacationing. Superintendent J. L. Appleton is still on the job, and is busily engaged in whipping his educational program in shape, and in searching for satisfactory and efficient teachers for the schools of Shelby County which will open early in September.

Mrs. Edna Roberts, efficient Clerk in the Probate office, had a narrow escape last week when an automobile in which she was riding collided with another machine near Sylacauga, Alabama. Mrs. Roberts suffered severe bruises, but is able to be at her desk in the Probate office today.

1,000 F.F.A. Boys of State Elect Officers

AUBURN, Ala.—The 1,000 Alabama farm boys who attended the seventh annual meeting of the Alabama Association of Future Farmers of America here this year elected five outstanding farm boys and two educational leaders to direct the activities of the association during the present year.

A. C. Allen, Jr., Holtville, Elmore County, was elected president; William Crawford, Marion, vice-president; Neil Martin, Wetumpka, secretary; Cecil Cubia, Cedar Bluff, treasurer; and Joe Camp, Atmore, reporter. R. E. Cammack, supervisor of agricultural education in Alabama, and P. C. Brook, assistant supervisor, were chosen as advisor and assistant advisor for the year.

Speakers at the annual conference who urged the boys to continue their educational efforts include Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute and director of the state extension service; Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education; Dr. J. D. Hobdy, director of vocational education; H. O. Sargent, Washington, national director in vocational education; R. D. Maltby, Washington, regional agent in agricultural education; and others.

The boys made a tour of the state experiment station and observed the latest experiments in agriculture. A watermelon cutting, baseball game, and a parade through the streets of Auburn were other features of the program.

Thousands At Work On $35,000,000 Dam

MUSCLE SHOALS, Ala.—Employment at Wheeler Dam, $35,000,000 project being built on the Tennessee River, 15 miles east of here, is now at tis peak with 4600 men at work on the dam proper and 2500 additional being engaged in reservoir clearance work above the dam.

Beginning about September 1 a large number of additional men will be employed from Lauderdale and Colbert Counties in reservoir clearance work in the Pickwick Landing Dam Basin, which project is now rapidly taking shape, Tennessee Valley Authority officials said.

GRAVES TO SPEAK TO MERCHANTS AT 19TH CONVENTION

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama will deliver "A Message to The Merchants of Alabama" at the closing session of the Alabama Merchants Association nineteenth annual convention on the night of August 22, at the Municipal Auditorium, promising to be of special interest at this time.

What is termed an "entertainment extraordinary" will be presented preceding the Governor's address by Rebecca Webb and her chorus of 25 dancing girls, and other specialty actors, promising a brilliant close to this convention, which it is estimated will be attended by more than 6,000 merchants from over the state and adjoining sections.

Beginning with registration at 8 a. m. on August 21, in the vestibule of the Municipal Auditorium, every detail of the program for the entertainment of this convention has been verfected, it is announced by James C. Lee, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Wholesale Merchants and Manufacturers Division of the Chamber of Commerce, "hosts" to the convention, and M. J. Roberson and George Bellsnyder, Chairman and Co-Chairman respectively, of the committees on arrangements for the convention.

The first business session at 11 a. m. on August 21, in the Terrace Ball Room of the Tutwiler Hotel, with J. Ed Wallis, of Sylacauga, President of the Association, presiding, has many interesting talks scheduled, followed at 12:30 p. m. by a "Dutch" luncheon at the Tutwiler Hotel Ballroom.

A ball game between Birmingham and Chattanooga at Rickwood Park on the afternoon of the first day is one of the attractions, and at night the annual grand Ball at the Municipal Auditorium will be also featured by an "all star" floor show, with Coleman Sachs and his orchestra, and the 1935 Miles Dance Revue, augmented by six vaudeville stars and specialty acts.

A spectacular air show at 3 p. m. will be a feature of the second day's entertainment, through the courtesy of the Birmingham Aero Club, presented at the Municipal Airport.

Cows Need Plenty Clean, Pure Water

AUBURN, Ala.—Cows will give more milk, and costs will be lowered when the cows are given enough water to drink along with plenty of fresh air and direct sunlight, says F. W. Burns, extension live-stock specialist.

"Milk is about eighty-seven percent water, and large amounts are needed, both in feed and liquid form, for a heavy production of milk. A cow will not drink all the water she needs unless she can get it frequently.

Hogs Grow Fast Grazing Soybeans

AUBURN, Ala.—Farmers may expect good results from grazing hogs on soybeans before the pods are ripe, announces Prof. J. C. Grimes, head of the animal husbandry department of the state experiment station, who emphasizes that hogs grazed on beans before the pods are formed will need some dry feed such as corn and tankage.

Prof. Grimes states that hogs on the Alabama experiment station have already been turned on soybean fields this year. Hogs grazed on soybeans in the past have been profitable.

Carrier Pigeon Visits Power Company Dam

WETUMPKA, Ala.—A few days ago the attention of the attendants and visitors at Alabama Power Company's Jordan Dam was attracted by an object fluttering on the lawn near the power plant. The object proved to be an exhausted pigeon. Maxfield Field and other points were called to learn the bird's homing point, but no one was able to identify the bird from the band on its leg which bore the number 81. The pigeon was given water and food, and after resting for the day, it took off, heading east. Some of the people at the dam wondered if the pigeon had "accepted" the Power Company's invitation to visit the pioneer large-power developments in the State during "Open House Month."

AUGUST 20 IS DATE FOR START OF M. E. ADULT ASSEMBLY

Beginning at noon Tuesday, August 20, the third annual Adult Assembly of the North Alabama Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be held at Alabama College, Montevallo. The sessions of the assembly will continue through Friday, August 23. Meetings will be held mornnig, afternoon, and evening. The assembly will be under the direction of the Division of Adult Work of the General Board of Christian Education and the North Alabama Conference Board of Christian Education.

Outstanding leaders of the North Alabama Conference will appear on the program. A representative of the General Board of Christian Education will be present to lead the assembly group in discussions of problems of vital interest to the Church.

The theme of the assembly will be, "With Christ and My Neighbor". Sub-topics to be discussed under the general theme will deal with industrial and race relations, world peace, temperance education, local communities and local Church work. Inspirational addresses and sermons will be delivered.

Representatives from each Church in the Conference are expected to attend the assembly.

Mrs. K. R. McLean Dies In Fort Worth

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—Word was received here Monday of the death at Fort Worth, Texas of Mrs. Kate Rogan McLean, sister of S. W. Rogan of Montevallo. The funeral services were held at Fort Worth Tuesday.

Mrs. McLean was formerly a resident of Montevallo. Her husband was the late Dr. J. D. McLean, widely known in Texas where he was a Presbyterian minister.

Heart Drifts

Cheerful Cherub Clippings:

FACES.

We'd find each face was beautiful,
However plain it seems,
If, looking past the dull outside,
We saw the wistful dreams.

BLESSINGS.

They say our hardships help us grow
And make us strong and wise,
But if there's one thing I dislike
It's BLESSINGS in disguise.

LIGHT WORDS.

Words fall as lightly as snow,
They're easily, thoughtlessly said—
Yet hard words can enter the heart
And lie there as heavy as lead.

MEALS.

The meals that stretch all down my life
Appall me when I look ahead — ·
The lakes of soup and hills of meat
I'll have to eat before I'm dead.

REGRET.

Through fear of taking risks in life
I've missed a lot of fun—
The only things that I regret
Are those I haven't done.

GENERATIONS.

Oh, do you remember, a few years ago
That young generation that worried us so?
Well, now they are aging and settled, poor things—
Be calm worried critics, for TIME clips all wings.

CHANGE.

If you feel you need a change
I know a simple thing to do—
Shut your eyes, then open them
And take a different point of view.

CONSCIENCE.

Sometimes at night my conscience wakes
With pangs it seems that naught can lull.
If I could always feel like this
How good I'd be, and, oh, how DULL.

ME.

I feel so thrillingly alive
And filled with vim and glee
It's strange to think that years ago
There wasn't any ME.

BUTTERFLY.

The butterfly just floats through life
As careless as a bubble.
I walk a stern and moral path—
A soul is lots of trouble.

CONFESSION.

Although I'm often foolish
And ly life is full of breaks
I make a sort of virtue
Of admitting my mistakes.

APOLOGY.

If this cheerfulness annoys you
On the days you're feeling blue
Please forgive me, gentle reader—
Often it annoys me too.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR OLIVER MILES HELD AUGUST 14TH

Oliver Miles, age 60 years, passed away at his home in Columbiana on Tuesday morning, August 13, 1935.

Mr. Miles came to Columbiana in 1908, and since that time has been prominently identified with the social, religious, and political life of Shelby County. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and has been Clerk of the Board of Revenue for over 20 years. For a number of years he was Chief Clerk in the Circuit Clerk's office and also served as Clerk of the Board of Revenue, capably and efficiently filling both responsible positions. Mr. Miles was a Spanish War Veteran, and a member of the Jefferson Volunteers.

Funeral services were conducted from the residence at 10:00 o'clock on Wednesday morning, the Rev. D. Z. Wooley, Pastor of the Baptist Church, officiating.

Pall Bearers included members of the Shelby County Board of Revenue: President J. M. Lyon, Solon E. McGraw, C. R. Tinney, Sam Tatum and Tom Naish, and Tom Taylor, Jr.

Honorary Pall Bearers were members of the Jefferson Volunteers. Company G, and Solon E. Jacobs, of Birmingham.

Surviving Mr. Miles are his widow, Myra Hamner Miles; his mother, Mrs. Emma Miles; and two sisters, Mrs. Fay Miles Benton and Miss Myrtle Miles, of Columbiana.

Farmers Are Keeping More Farm Records

AUBURN, Ala.—More and better farm records are being kept by farmers and farm boys than ever before in the history of farming.

Records show that in 1934 4-H club members throughout the country completed a total of 1,170,307 projects and kept records which showed the financial success of the projects, as well as the methods used in completing them. Over 10 000 club members also completed farm management records either of one enterprise on the farm or of the whole farm business.

County agents report more than a million farmers kept records of their farm business last year. Much of this record keeping has been brought about by AAA program.

Favorable Outlook For Poultry Farmers

AUBURN, Ala.—A "favorable outlook" for poultry producers the remainder of this year is seen by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics in its summer poultry and egg outlook report recently released.

Egg and poultry prices are likely to continue at higher levels than last year, says the Bureau. The supply of fresh eggs is expected to be a little larger than last year, but the supply of shell eggs in storage is much smaller than a year ago and will offer less competition to the fresh-egg supply.

Increased production per hen and a small increase in number of layers are expected to result in increased production of eggs during the early months of 1936 as compared with the small output in the corresponding months of 1935. Supplies of poultry next fall and winter are expected to be slightly smaller than last fall and winter.

Cemetery Cleaning Set For August 21st

All persons interested are asked to be present at the Heaton Cemetery, August 21st, for the purpose of cleaning its grounds. Come early and bring your own tools.

F. F. A. BOYS PLAN FOR EDUCATIONAL TOUR THIS MONTH

This Educational Tour will start from Columbiana, Sunday, August 25th, and their first stop will be at Auburn. Here they will spend the night, and the next morning the entire group will visit the experiment station for Alabama Farmers. This station is doing work on crops and fertilizers, plant breeding, animal breeding and feeding, garden crops and fertilization, disease and insect control, soil erosion and building of soils, reforestation of barren marginal lands and many other things that will be of interest to farm boys.

From Auburn they plan to visit the Tuskegee Institute for negroes, one of the largest and most modern educational plants in the country. They plan at Tuskegee to visit some of the trades buildings and the agricultural department of the school.

The second day they expect to spend the night at Midland City with the Future Farmers of that town. The next morning they will drive over to Headland, and visit one of the substations of the experiment station of Auburn. Here demonstrations of the experimental work that has been proven at Auburn, is carried out on the sandy soils of this section. This station is conducted as a model farm should be conducted in this section of Alabama.

From Headland they plan to drive into Panama City, Florida where they will spend three days fishing and swimming. While in Panama City they expect to go through the paper mill located there.

On their return trip they hope to visit Montgomery and the capitol of Alabama, visiting with the Governor and the Superintendent of Education, Dr. Keller. While in Montgomery they hope to have time to visit the state prison. Here they will see one of the finest herds of quernsey cattle in Alabama. They also hope to visit Maxwell field and see Uncle Sam's boys at home.

State Farmers Plant More Acres To Crops

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama farmers have 11,000 more acres planted to field crops this year than they did last year, reports F. W. Gist, state and federal agricultural statistician, who estimates the present crop at 7,031,410 acres compared with 7,020,250 acres last year.

More acres are planted to cotton, hay, peanuts, soybeans, and sugarcane, and less acres in corn, oats, cowpeas, potatoes, sweet potatoes, and sorghum for syrup this year than last, says Mr. Gist in announcing the acreage planted to various crops this season, as follows:

Corn, 3,254,000 acres; cotton, 2,337,000; oats, 90,000; hay, 660,000; peanuts, 335,000; cowpeas, 79,000; soybeans, 80,000; potatoes, 35,000; sweet potatoes, 77,000; sugar cane, 35,000; sorghum, 37,000; and truck crops, 12,410.

Alabama Farms Are Increasing Rapidly

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama has 17,607 more farms at present than five years ago, reports F. W. Gist, state and federal agricultural statistician, in announcing that "the total number found this year was 275,004 compared with 257,395 in 1930.

"Seventeen counties show a decrease in the number of farms, while all the remaining counties show an increase," says Mr. Gist.

Fewer Screw Worms Found In Alabama

AUBURN, Ala. — Fewer screw worms have been reported in Alabama and Mississippi to date this year than to the same date last year, according to the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine which reports that through June 22 Alabama had only 86 screw worm cases and Mississippi 116.

Florida has had the worst screw worm outbreak so far this year, however, comparatively few animals have died from screw worm attack this season.

Livestock growers are warned that now is a critical period for many animals subject to screw worm attack.

Victory in Rhode Island Election Elates the Republicans—Guffey Coal Bill Undergoes Changes—Black's Probers Enrage Hurley.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

REPUBLICAN leaders throughout the country were immensely heartened—probably too much so—by the result of the by-election in the First district of Rhode Island. Charles F. Risk, Republican and determined opponent of the New Deal, defeated Antonio Prince, Democrat, by nearly 13,000 votes, capturing the seat in congress which Francis B. Condon, Democrat, resigned to go on the State Supreme court. The reversal was so decisive that the Republicans hailed it as a clear indication that President Roosevelt would be defeated for re-election next year.

Chas. F. Risk

Representative B. H. Snell of New York, minority leader, made a speech about it in the house in which he said:

"This is the first time the people of any part of the country have had an opportunity to pass on the reckless and extravagant expenditures of the administration. They have passed upon it in a very decisive manner. The election shows the people are beginning to think. The handwriting is on the wall. From now on we will witness similar rejections by the citizenry of the New Deal program."

Other Republican congressmen spoke in similar vein, but John J. O'Connor, New York Tammany Democrat, countered with the assertion that there was a split in the Democratic party in the Rhode Island district; while Tom Blanton of Texas shouted shame on Rhode Island because it had asked more federal aid than almost any other state. Anti-New Deal Democratic senators, like Gerry, Byrd and Tydings, agreed the election was significant, but from the White House there was no comment.

Former Senator Fess of Ohio with surprising frankness expressed the belief that the G. O. P. would have to wait until 1940 to elect a President. Voicing the opinion of many, the veteran campaigner said: "I don't see how the strongest Republican without all that money next year can beat the weakest Democrat with nearly $5,000,000,000 at his disposal."

REPUBLICANS of the ten Midwestern states that participated in the Grass Roots conference in Springfield, Ill., have made the Grass Roots' movement a permanent auxiliary of the party. Harrison E. Spengler of Iowa is its chairman, Mrs. Leslie Wheeler of Illinois the vice chairman, and Jo Ferguson of Oklahoma, the secretary. Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky, not represented at the Springfield meeting, have been invited to join in the movement.

SENATOR HUGO BLACK of Alabama may bring out a lot of facts in his inquiry into lobbying, but his way of conducting the investigation is not winning him any credit. The house has all along felt that he was trying to bully it into accepting the utilities bill "death sentence" clause and has been correspondingly resentful. Various witnesses before the senate committee have felt, seemingly with reason, that they were being treated unfairly.

P. J. Hurley

One of these witnesses who complained bitterly was Patrick J. Hurley, secretary of war in the Hoover administration. He testified that he had received $100,000 from the Associated Gas and Electric system in the last three years, but insisted he was paid for legal advice only and had done no lobbying. Hurley was not permitted to read a prepared statement, and Black's interjections and questions so angered the witness that he rose to his feet and shouted: "Everyone knows all you gentlemen are good prosecutors! Of course, you don't know what it is to be fair or just. You try to put words into a witness' mouth. Your questions are all on the type of the 'Why don't you stop beating your wife?' query."

Joseph P. Tumulty, who was secretary to President Wilson, also was put on the stand and was not treated so roughly. He, too, admitted receiving considerable sums from utility concerns, and like Hurley he denied that he had done any lobbying. Tumulty testified that he paid former Senator George H. Moses (Rep.), N. H., $5,000 and would pay another $2,500 to John Walsh, a brother of the late Senator Thomas J. Walsh (Dem.), Mont. Moses and Walsh, Tumulty said, are attorneys and aided in work done for the utility clients.

THERE were strong indications that the house ways and means committee would produce an entirely new measure to replace the Guffey bituminous coal bill. Chairman Doughton revealed that the committee had adopted a number of amendments designed to bring the measure within constitutional limits and to meet objections that it would discriminate against some coal districts. The committee still stood 14 to 11 against the bill, however. The President was said to have informed the Democratic members that he was agreeable to any changes they might wish to make provided the main objectives of the measure were maintained.

According to current report, the changes agreed upon in the committee included:

Elimination of the section forbidding the Interstate Commerce commission to issue certificates of convenience and necessity for operation of railroads to bituminous mines without prior approval by the bituminous coal commission.

Establishment of a consumers' counsel to safeguard the interests of consumers.

Addition of a provision for hearings to determine whether the method of fixing prices was working to the detriment of any coal producing district.

Reduction from nine to five in the number of commission members, and the addition of a stipulation that none shall have any outside connections.

Reduction from 25 to 15 per cent in the amount of the tax assessed against mine operators.

Reduction from 99 to 90 per cent in the amount of credit allowed the producers who abide by the code.

VIOLENTLY attacked from all sides and nowhere defended with enthusiasm, the President's new share-the-wealth tax bill nevertheless was put through the house because of the great administration majority and also because the congressmen are tired out and eager to go home. Representative Treadway, Republican, of Massachusetts, made a last effort against the measure with a resolution to send it back to committee, but this was easily defeated.

Sen. Barbour

As passed by the house, the bill is not quite what the President asked for. Briefly summarized, it increases taxes on individual incomes over $50,000, substitutes a graduated corporation-income tax for the present flat levy, puts new taxes on inheritances and gifts in addition to those already borne by estates and gifts, imposes new taxes of 5 to 20 per cent on "excess" profits of corporations.

It is designed to raise revenue estimated at between $250,000,000 and $270,000,000. Its warmest friends couldn't explain how this would do much in the way of bringing about what the President calls "wider distribution of wealth," or in the way of balancing the budget.

The measure was handed on to the senate with dubious prospects. It was expected the senate finance committee would study it for about a week, and in the meanwhile the conservative Republicans and not a few Democrats were preparing to fight it. Senator W. W. Barbour of New Jersey, Republican, fired an opening gun with a statement in which he said: "Votes, and votes alone, are the objective of this half-baked measure."

Declaring the bill "has no relation to making income meet outgo, but is intended to accomplish some weird social objective," Barbour continued:

"What this bill actually attempts is to climb upon that hard-ridden steed, "Share-the-Wealth," and ride him away while the demagogues who have pressed him sorely in the past are looking in the other direction.

"The bill should be laid away until the next session of congress when the budget for the ensuing year will be presented. Then, in the light of carefully appropriated federal moneys, we can determine how much revenue will be needed to operate.

"Taxes can be levied deliberately as a true revenue measure. Any other program is not good business and is not good government."

One change made by the house against the President's wishes involved corporations' gifts to charities. Mr. Roosevelt was firmly against letting corporations deduct from their taxable income any gifts to charity. Just as firmly the house voted to let them deduct up to 5 per cent of their incomes.

WITH some reluctance the senate began consideration of the Walsh bill giving the President power to require minimum wage and maximum hour standards of all firms bidding for government contracts. That measure has been added to the administration's "must" list. The Republicans were preparing to fight the bill as another government plan for regulation of private industry. They point out that it hits about every industry in the country, since it not only applies to corporations selling to the government but extends also to state and local projects wholly or partly financed by federal funds.

NOT to be dismayed by the death of NRA, Senator J. C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming thinks the objectives of that contraption, high labor standards and fair competition, can be realized, and for that purpose he has drawn up a measure for the regulation of all national commerce by licensing business.

The bill creates a licensing system for businesses engaged in commerce among the states and provides a national incorporation law.

The federal trade commission, the government's business policeman in the days before NRA and the agency to which the New Deal turned after NRA codes were outlawed, would be the keystone of the new plan. O'Mahoney's bill would increase its membership from five to nine, with three commissioners representing employees, three employers, and three the general public.

NOTWITHSTANDING warnings by Dr. Hjalmar Schacht and other sane Germans, some of the Nazi leaders insist on pushing to further extremes the war on Jews and Catholics. For instance, Paul Joseph Goebbels, minister of propaganda, in a speech at Essen announced drastic action against all "enemies" of the Nazi state—Jews, Catholics, the foreign press and the Stahlheim war veterans. He predicted these important developments:

Paul Goebbels

1. Suppression of the Catholic press and intensification of the Nazi campaign against all Catholic opponents of the third reich.

2. Nationwide dissolution of the Stahlheim.

3. An official ban in near future on marriages between Jews and Aryans.

ENGLAND and France were still trying to find the way to avert war between Italy and Ethiopia, but Premier Mussolini of Italy was so skeptical that he ordered 75,000 more men to the colors. By the first of October he will have about a million men in uniform. Haile Selassie, the Ethiopian emperor, was reported to have sanctioned the concentration of 60,000 of his troops on Italy's east African frontiers. The chiefs, it is said, are finding it increasingly difficult to restrain their warriors from overt acts that would surely precipitate warfare.

ANANDA, the eleven-year-old king of Siam, nearly lost his throne the other day. A widespread plot was formed under the leadership of noncommissioned officers of the regular army to overthrow the government. But loyalists uncovered it and effectually smashed it. The plotters intended to seize and kill their superior officers and oust the regency council that rules the country.

SUDDEN death put an end to the career of Nathan P. Bryan of Jacksonville, Fla., presiding judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Judicial circuit. Judge Bryan, who was sixty-three years old, was formerly United States senator from Florida.

Frank H. Hitchcock, publisher of the Daily Citizen of Tucson, Ariz., succumbed to pneumonia after several months of ill health. Prominent in Republican party politics all his mature life, Mr. Hitchcock managed Taft's Presidential campaign in 1908 both before and after the convention and was postmaster general in the Taft cabinet. For years he was actively interested in the progress of aviation.

JOE LOUIS, negro pugilist of Detroit who hopes some day to be the heavyweight champion of the world, advanced another step toward that goal by defeating "King" Levinsky in the first round of a scheduled ten round bout in Chicago. Levinsky was knocked down four times in little more than two minutes, and the referee then gave the fight to Joe on a technical knockout. Louis and Max Baer, former champion, have signed for a battle in September.

SAMUEL INSULL'S annual pension of $21,000 has been restored by vote of the directors of the Chicago utility companies which he formerly headed, and he also receives about $33,250 to cover payments accruing since the beginning of last year when payments were suspended by the companies. Insull previously announced he had made no effort to regain his pensions. Agitation to restore the payments was begun after Insull had been freed in the federal and state courts of all criminal charges growing out of his management of his former properties.

WAGE cuts decreed by the French government led to strikes and violent demonstrations. Especially riotous were naval shipyards workers at Brest, steamship employees at various ports and bus and gas plant workers in Paris. The sailing of several large liners was delayed. Finally the government issued new decrees lowering the cost of living, and the strikers were somewhat mollified. The Communists were blamed for the violence.

NEARLY $8,000,000—$7,784,000, to be exact—has been allotted from the works-relief funds by President Roosevelt for a census of American business. The census bureau asked and received this after it had been allotted $293,000 for a survey of retail trade. The business work is to begin at once, and the canvass will start on January 2.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Down in South Carolina, where cotton benefit payments abound and which is so regular in its Democracy that even the Bishop Cannon movement did not affect it in 1928, there are said to be rumblings against the New Deal.

There are enough rumblings to decide Col. William C. Harllee, retired, of the Marine corps, to throw his hat in the ring for the senate. And against none other than Senator James F. Byrnes, generally regarded as the closest follower President Roosevelt has in the senate, if not in congress. So close, in fact, that until Joe Robinson simply turned himself into a White House rubber stamp there was very serious talk of making Byrnes leader in his place.

Colonel Harllee, who is a graduate of West Point but chose the marines instead of the army and has seen service in nearly every martial theater in which the devil dogs burned powder, thinks Byrnes is too New Dealish to suit the South Carolina folks. And judging from some newspaper clippings which have come to Washington there are at least a few editors in the Palmetto state who agree.

Professor Tugwell seems to be the colonel's chief target, but he insists that he is not a John Raskob Democrat either—just a plain, old-fashioned, Jeffersonian, nullificationist, pro-Calhoun and anti-Jackson, states' rights, low tariff, Democrat.

In fact, he is not for any tariff at all, sticking strongly by the old nullificationist doctrine, when South Carolina held that the federal government at Washington had no right to rear tariff barriers which would keep foreign goods out of her ports.

Some very shrewd observers think that Colonel Harllee just might make a lot of trouble for the administration's fair-haired senator. They say that the people who put the money up for Byrnes' campaigns in the past are very disappointed in him. Particularly on his sticking by the administration on the processing taxes, and on his fight for the death sentence in the public utility holding bill.

Now They Doubt

It just so happens that many of the interests that supported Byrnes in his several races were of the conservative variety. They liked Byrnes, all right, but what they were really anxious to do was to defeat Cole Blease. Now some of them are wondering if Blease would not have voted more often in their interests, as they see them.

"What do you think of Senators Byrd and Glass of Virginia?" the writer asked Colonel Harllee. "Especially of the way they have opposed the administration on a number of important measures?"

"I wish you would tell your readers that I will out-Byrd Harry and out-Glass Carter," grinned the colonel.

"A great many of our people are getting tired of this relief thing. They want to get people to work, and find them on relief, buying cheap new cars on time with the relief money, and just stepping on the gas. I think Washington is going to be surprised at some of the primaries and elections to come, if the feeling in South Carolina is any indication."

It promises to be rather warm in South Carolina next spring and summer!

The Ethiopian Mess

Italy will have no difficulty in defeating the Abyssinians in whatever battles may occur in the approaching war, in the opinion of high military experts both in our own War department and in various embassies here. The trouble will come after that, they believe, as they fully expect there will be a constant guerrilla warfare for years during Italian efforts at colonization.

Hence it is expected that the Ethiopian mess, which the rest of the world is so anxious to avert, but Italy is so determined to push, will prove highly costly to the Italian treasury for many a long day to come. Experts here figure that Italy will have to garrison the country, so to speak, with strong forces at strategic points, and this, of course, will prove expensive.

Confidentially, for no officer dares speak on such a situation for publication, our army officers are comparing the situation to that which existed for a time after the Spanish-American war in the Philippines. They expect Italy to have more trouble than the United States did for several reasons.

For example, some of them say, it is not likely that any Abyssinian leader would walk into any such trap as clamped Aguinaldo in American custody. Incidentally, there is no great pride, even to this day, in our army over that episode. It smacked a little too much of bad faith. Of treachery.

Then, too, our military experts do not believe that any one man in Abyssinia means as much to the fighters of that land as Aguinaldo did to the Filipinos in their desperate fight.

Are Good Fighters

But the most important distinction of all, no army officer would dare whisper, save on the deepest pledge of secrecy. But the truth is that our army officers do not believe the Filipinos are in the same class with the Abyssinians as fighters. Either physically, morally or mentally. Opinion here is that the followers of the King of Kings are pretty fine specimens, capable of great hardships and valor, and that in addition they are, at least, approaching the fanatic class. Which makes them very difficult to handle. And which promises little in the direction of their submitting to the inevitable after a few spectacular Italian victories.

That there will be these spectacular Italian victories no one here doubts very much. Opinion is that no such force as that of the Abyssinians, no matter how brave or how well directed, could possibly be a match for the well drilled, well equipped army the Italians will send against them. Especially as Mussolini is apparently taking no chances. He is not sending out the forlorn hope type of expedition. He is pouring men to the vicinity of the Abyssinian border in numbers that have amazed the military experts of the remainder of the world.

Meanwhile the answer to why nothing happens is simply one thing—water. The Italians are waiting for the rainy season.

Shaves Hoary Legend

Just when the public, for the first time in a generation, had a chance to get a liberal education on the value of seniority in congress—just why the multi-service-striped boys always run the machine—Cactus Jack Garner comes along and shaves the hoary whiskered legend!

He is appointing conferees on important controversies between the house and senate to suit himself! Or more accurately, to reflect what he regards as the majority view of the senate. There has been no particular protest about this, for in every instance his appointees represented the majority view. Had it been otherwise, in any instance, a mere motion would have resulted in the senate's naming the conferees by vote. Which explains why the senate takes this upsetting of an old tradition lying down.

Seldom before has the country had such a vivid picture of how legislation is really settled—not on the floor of the house or senate—not even in the house or senate committees prior to bringing the measures on the floor—but in the conference between the two houses. After the conferees get through, assuming they ever agree—and the probability is that conferees will agree on all bills this time) there is nothing much for the mere memberships of the house and senate to do except take it or leave it. And generally, it has always been take it. Will be this time.

Which brings us to the time-honored rule, now somewhat lacerated. Technically the speaker of the house appoints five members of the house, and the Vice President five members of the senate, to confer and adjust the differences in texts and ideas in the measure which the two houses have just passed. Sometimes it is only three. In very important measures, particularly tax bills, it is seven. Always the majority party has one more conferee from each house than the minority.

Normally in the past no discretion has been exercised by the presiding officers in making the selections. Appointments have almost invariably been made of the ranking members of the committees that handled the bill.

Absurd Rule

Vice President Garner had an early illustration of the absurdities this rule sometimes effects. For instance, when he was naming conferees on the pink slip income tax publicity repeal bill, he named the three ranking Democrats of the senate finance committee, Harrison, King and George. Also the two ranking Republicans, Couzens and Keyes. So far strictly according to Hoyle.

But Couzens didn't like the senate's position—was not in sympathy with the repeal, as a matter of fact. So he announced his resignation from the floor. Garner at once appointed the next ranking Republican, La Follette. The Wisconsin man shared Couzens' views—also resigned. So Garner appointed the next ranking Republican, Metcalf.

Still according to Hoyle. But there was the idea, and Garner announced he would exercise his own discretion in future.

Contrary to some newspaper accounts, he has not tried to use this power to impose White House will. It seemed so in the death sentence of the public utility holding company bill. But the senate had voted for the death sentence, even if only by a majority of one. So Garner threw seniority to the winds. He appointed Wheeler, the chairman, skipped Smith of South Carolina and Wagner of New York, to pick administration wheel horse Barkley, and then skipped Neely, Dieterich, Lonergan and Long, to pick Brown of New Hampshire.

On the minority side he skipped ranking members Couzens, Metcalf and Hastings, and picked White. Then he ignored Davis and picked Shipstead, who is not a Republican at all.

On the TVA bill Garner took the list of conferees from George Norris, daddy of Muscle Shoals. But on the banking bill he permitted Carter Glass to name the conferees.

BRITISH EMPIRE'S SCHEME IS UPSET BY DIVORCE SUIT

Plan to Put Head of 100 Million Moslems on Throne Is Balked.

London.—The divorce suit instituted by Hon. Loel Guinness against his lovely wife has thrown a monkey-wrench into British diplomatic dealings with the spiritual head of 100,000,000 Moslems and placed the government in an awkward position.

For months a way has been sought to realize the desire of the Aga Khan, powerful No. 1 Mohammedan of the world, to either become the temporal head of a state or have his son installed on a throne. Britain has not been blind to the advantages of an arrangement which would place the spiritual head of all Moslems under its protection, and the list of eastern principalities under the British flag has been gone over endlessly for an opening.

Now, in naming the Aga Khan's son, Prince Ali, as co-respondent in a divorce suit, Hon. Loel has made it difficult for the government to continue its maneuverings in behalf of Prince Ali without outraging British moralists. Also, Moslems themselves are in a state of indignation over the way the prince's name is being dragged through the mire of a British divorce scandal.

Mayfair Scandalized.

To the half-American M. P. and heir to the Guinness brewing millions, the prince was just another home-wrecker, and he said as much when he brought suit against his wife, the former Joan Barbara Yarde-Buller, eldest sister of Baron Churston. No defense has been offered by Prince Ali, man-about-town and gentleman-jockey, whose horse Bahram recently won the Derby.

The divorce has scandalized Mayfair as violently as Guinness' marriage in 1927 titillated it. Before the war Guinness, the son of the fabulously wealthy Benjamin Guinness, lived in New York and took a prominent part in the artistic life of Greenwich Village. During the war he served in the Irish Guards. His marriage to Lady Yarde-Buller was celebrated in Westminster Abbey in circumstances usually enjoyed only by royalty and members of high nobility. A son was born, and for seven years the couple were generally thought to be ideally happy. Then Lady Yarde-Buller met the handsome young Indian and, according to her husband's charges, succumbed to his oriental love-making.

The prince is blessed with fabulous wealth and no official duties, for his father is a Khan (king) without a country.

Wed to European.

Although he is worshiped as a god in India the Aga Khan has neither visited India in many years nor upheld its traditions. His first wife and the prince's mother was a European, an Italian noblewoman, Signore Theresa Magliano. She died a few years after the marriage. In 1930 the Aga Khan, with disregard for snobbish standards, bestowed his title upon the daughter of a French innkeeper, Mlle. Marcelle Carron.

Prolonged absence from his own country has been no privation to the Aga Khan. He has taken to occidental life with relish and is today no different save in the darkness of his complexion than any other European sportsman and millionaire. But no Moslem visitor to the West dares approach him with anything but the deepest reverence. This exalted position will pass to his erring son unless the divorce scandal finally affects the dynasty.

400 Pet Dogs Are Buried in New Reading Cemetery

Reading, Pa.—The love of man for his dog is represented in a new cemetery established near here.

Dr. Earl E. Romberger, of the Reading Veterinary hospital, had a "cemetery" on the Philadelphia pike for many years, but found that it was inadequate. Another tract was obtained.

The bodies of more than 400 dogs, cats, a canary and a duck buried in the original cemetery were disinterred and moved to the new plot. Headstones for the most part are uniform in size and arranged in neat rows. A few owners purchased fairly large stones. Each has the pet's name, year of birth and death.

Black Walnut Log Sale Brings $1,000 to Dealer

Wheatland, Ind.—Jordan Brothers have shipped a carload of black walnut logs and rootwads to Cincinnati, the approximate value of the load being $1,000.

This fine hardwood timber, once so common in Indiana that it was in the way of pioneer farmers, and millions of feet were burned in efforts to get their land ready for the plow, now is almost gone. Whenever one is sold the stump is carefully excavated in order that no part is wasted.

Old Spanish Doubloons Found in Swimming Pool

Media, Pa.—Ancient Spanish doubloons, Roman galley coins, 2 and 3-cent United States pieces, Danish kronen and Dutch guilders were discovered on the bottom of a swimming pool here when it was emptied.

The thirty-two coins apparently were tossed there in haste some time last summer. They were scattered around at widely separated places.

James Tucker Moylan, the finder, will take them to a numismatist to determine the value of his "treasure."

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, now twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. Gail again accompanies Van to Los Gatos for a week-end visit.

"I may be engaged to be married this time tomorrow night," she thought, when she was in bed, reading. "There's a moment when one isn't, and then suddenly—one is. That's all there is to it. Girls do get engaged; almost every girl gets engaged."

She thought of the Fosters and the Delahantys. Three, busy, homely unmarried sisters in each family. Two in the post office, two teaching school, one in the library, one a stenographer. Gail's heart failed her.

It was not fair that some girls should travel, go places, do fascinating things, and that other girls should drudge away at the library, year after year, while hope died and youth faded and enthusiasms were spent—like the Fosters' and the Delahantys' enthusiasms—upon church fairs and preserving fruit.

"It's not right," Gail said solemnly to the shabby old silent room, through whose windows the hot smell of pear trees and burned grass was penetrating from the dark night outside. "There's nothing in character, if it only gets you what the Fosters and the Delahantys have got!

"I'm not sure," she decided darkly, "but what Ariel's in the right! I'll bet she gets to London before I do!"

CHAPTER VI

The next day she rose unrefreshed and dissatisfied, and dragged heavily through her preparations to go to Los Gatos, as if the prospect were anything but inviting.

It would have filled her with ecstasy a year ago; she felt dull and doubtful about it now.

Ariel, all helpful sympathy, came out to the gate when Van parked there, honking wildly, at ten oclock.

"Here," he said, leaping out, "I'll take that!" He stowed Gail's suitcase in the rumble. The three stood smiling and gossiping in the soft foggy morning.

"I wish I were going with you!" Ariel said frankly.

"Well, why don't you come!" Van exclaimed, suddenly fired.

"Oh, no, I couldn't. I've got a date with the crowd tonight," Ariel protested, "and I couldn't anyway, I'm not dressed! And I couldn't anyway."

For an instant the matter hung fire, and Gail did not know whether or not in that instant Ariel sent her a glance of wild hope. Immediately the younger girl settled the matter, and was running back into the house shouting, "Have a good time!"

Despite her sister's protests, Gail felt like a murderer as Van's car shot away across the long bare road, away from dusty, dull Clippersville into the beauty and shade and coolness of Far Niente. The thought of that quick, hopeful glance of Ariel's—that glance that might not ever even have been sent or been thought of—haunted her.

Not that Ariel could have come, no. Obviously that would have been a mistake.

But Gail kept wishing that she, Gail, had urged it, had impulsively, ridiculously, pressed it. It would have made no difference in the outcome, for even little Ariel knew that she mustn't expect to go places just because Gail did. She wouldn't have come. She would know that they might snub her.

And yet the memory of the little flying pink figure and the shouted "Have a good time!" in Ariel's oddly deep voice would not let her be at peace. She was gnawed by hunger for Ariel, incessant and deep.

Van's mother proved to be a thin, dark, smart woman in a beautiful transparent gown of orange and black. She greeted her son with a fretful "Van, I suppose you know your father's furious at you, and making life simply wretched for me?" and gave to Gail only an abstracted frown.

"I think you were in school with my mother, Editha Petrie, in San Francisco?" Gail said, trying to seem at ease.

"I was in school with nobody's mother, and I won't be incriminated, and I am praying the Lord to grant me a long and prosperous thirty-one!" Mrs. Murchison said, to the company at large rather than to Gail.

"She'll never forgive you that as long as you live, Gail!" Van exclaimed in the laughter that followed. Gail laughed, too, but she felt hot and uncomfortable.

In all it was an uncomfortable visit; the least happy she had ever had at Far Niente, even including the first, with its nervousness and shyness. Three men Gail had never seen before were absorbed in the topic of the golf tournament at Del Monte, and for a little while on Saturday afternoon Gail was excited by the possibility of their all going down to Monterey to try a day's preliminary playing.

But in the end it was decided that the three men and Van should leave before breakfast and go there alone.

"That is, I would," Van said, "if I didn't feel it would leave Gail in the lurch!"

"We'll take care of Gail," Mrs. Chipp said.

"We were going up to lunch with Ethel and play bridge," Mrs. Murchison reminded her in a light, droning voice not intended for Gail's ear.

"Oh, well, that's all right!" said Mrs. Chipp, who liked Gail, pleasantly. "We'll just leave her here to amuse herself, and the boys will be back for dinner, and we'll all go home Monday afternoon."

Gail had to protest; her library job would stand no more trifling. She must be back Sunday afternoon, positively.

Mason was going back, with fruit and vegetables. Gail leaped at the opportunity to go home with him.

It was arranged. The bridge players plunged back gladly into the mysteries of vulnerability and redoubling. The young men played tennis and Gail watched and laughed and applauded.

Later, going to the cabin to dress, she heard Mrs. Chipp good-naturedly reproaching somebody for something. The voices came from behind a screen of shrubs and tall flowers, where the hammocks were.

". . . . it was dreadful. . . . I mean it was unmistakable. . . . I mean it was enough to make him furious," said Mrs. Chipp's amused, indifferent voice.

Another woman's voice spoke quickly in answer, laughingly and indifferently, too, but with more vigor. Mrs. Murchison's voice.

Gail could not hear the first dozen words. But the last trailed through her consciousness as she escaped, scarlet-cheeked, out of hearing.

". . . . with a Clippersville girl!"

The tone, the emphasis of the voice, interpreted the whole to her perfectly.

"I Was in School With Nobody's Mother!"

Van's father would be furious with him, going with a Clippersville girl. It served him perfectly right, wasting his time with a Clippersville girl. It did not matter whose feelings were hurt or were not hurt; it was only a Clippersville girl!

Her face blazed, her throat was thick and dry. She walked slowly up to the cabin, entered into its peace and shadiness quietly, and began her preparation for dinner in the brown-walled, chintz-curtained little room that was familiar now.

All the time her heart seethed like a boiling pot, and her thoughts went round and round dizzily. Her hands felt cold, and she was shaking.

"I'll be home this time tomorrow," said Gail, aloud, more than once.

What did it matter what that vulgar, smart, rouged, thin, dark woman said or thought! It did not affect Gail Lawrence; it did not affect Van Murchison.

It did affect Van, of course.

Wandering about the room in a thin cotton kimono, she addressed herself, aloud.

"You poor fool! You thought you might be engaged tonight!

"Well—you may be.

"I'd like to be, just to get even with her! I'd like to be so stunning, so smart, so popular that she was wiped right out of sight . . .

"I hate her. . . . No, I don't suppose I hate her. . . . Yes, I do.

"I despise her! I'd like her to break her leg. I would. I wouldn't want her to get a cancer exactly. But I'd like something to happen to her!"

The childishness of her own monologue made her begin suddenly to laugh, and she found tears in her eyes.

This wouldn't do. There was nothing to do but go through with the evening's program with what dignity she could muster; the boys seemed to her very noisy, very much absorbed in their own affairs, at dinner, and after dinner there was a half-hearted game of roulette, in which Lenore and Mab Whiting won everything, while Gail lost quarters and dimes to a painful degree.

It then appeared that the four boys were going over to Del Monte that night, so as to play the Pebble Beach course early in the morning. Gail was careful not to let anyone suspect that it made any difference to her. But she felt hurt and sore. At half-past nine o'clock the roadster with the shouting boys in it departed on its seventy-mile run, and Gail found herself quietly in bed, reading again.

After awhile she let the book drop and lay thinking, staring into the dim cabin room with far-away, serious eyes, and with the bushy Lawrence eyebrows drawn together.

She felt very homesick. She wanted Sam and Ariel and Phil. Above all she wanted Edith, sensible, loving, loyal, thoughtful. She was torn with pangs of anxiety for them all.

"A Clippersville girl!" she said to herself in the night stillness. "Well, that's what I am. I don't know why that should make me mad."

Shamed, courageous thoughts possessed her; she plunged into them as into a river. Despite responsibility and precocious cares, she had done little philosophical thinking in her twenty-three years; she deliberately faced the situation now, faced her own soul.

The next morning she slipped away from Far Niente before any member of the family was astir. And with every mile of the home trip her heart grew lighter and her mind steadier and her quiet determination greater.

At two o'clock, cool and trim and sympathetic, she was back at her post in the library. She felt wearied, subdued, yet oddly content. This was duller than death but it was peace. No one would hurt here her, humiliate her here; she belonged. She was not only in her proper place, but she was doing a fellow creature a service. No animal creeping back into the safety of its lair ever felt a deeper sense of gratitude.

And then—as always on library Sundays—Edith was there, slipping about the alcoves, coming up to the desk to beam, to whisper to her big sister.

"Ariel home?"

"No," Edith explained too cheerfully, too naturally; "Dot Camp telephoned to the Greeley's to say that they might not be back until after dinner."

"But why didn't Dot or Ariel telephone us?"

"Lou said she said she thought our line was out of order—it never answered."

The sisters exchanged a level, expressionless look.

"That's a new one," Gail presently murmured drily.

"Well, that's what I thought," Edith agreed reluctantly.

"Where do you suppose they are?"

"Oh, just on one of those Sunday runs, when they eat greasy fried chicken off dirty board tables, and think they're having a wonderful time!" Edith said impatiently.

At six Dora Foster came in, and Edith and Gail could walk home through the broiling late afternoon.

"Let's not have supper until seven. And let's get everything ready and then take baths and be beautiful!" Gail suggested. They fussed away in the shady kitchen together; Edith straining tea into tall glasses, Gail assembling the materials for one of her famous salads: chives, lettuce, enormous firm cold tomatoes, cucumbers sliced as fine as tissue paper.

They set the table out under the big oak in the side yard, close to the house so that the smaller furnishings could be passed through the wide-open kitchen window.

Dick and Phil arrived. They all sat about the table, while the last of the hot twilight died into a hot dusk, talking, murmuring, passing back and forth the old Brazilian silver salad bowl that Grandfather Lawrence had brought to Yerba Buena on that long-ago wedding journey.

The moon had risen and the strengthening silver light was beginning to drip down through the branches of the great trees that roofed the dooryard.

"Where is that naughty Ariel?" Edith had asked drowsily, affectionately, and Gail, listening to the strokes of the cuckoo clock in the hall, had answered more reassuringly than she felt, "Only nine, that's not late!" when suddenly there was a stranger in the garden.

A stranger. At the first glimpse of him Gail's heart stood still, and her mouth filled with water. Horror. Horror. They were all lost.

The moonlight touched the star on his breast. Dick was the first to speak, in a quick, authoritative voice.

"What is it, Officer?"

"There's been a bad accident up near the cement works. A little girl has been killed—" the man began.

Gail was beside him, fingers gripping his arm.

"My sister!"

"No, ma'am, it wasn't your sister. She was mixed up in it; I brought her over here to see your brother. She ain't hurt," he said, answering the wild question in Gail's eyes. "She's just run upstairs inside; I'm waiting for her. I seen you out here, so I came over."

"What happened, Officer?" Dick's voice asked. The others were stricken dumb.

"She was driving a car, sir, and another automobile hit her. She didn't have a license, and she's booked for that, and also on a charge of manslaughter. In the mixup, a little girl in a third car was thrown out on her head and killed."

"She's here now? My sister, I mean?" Phil asked, in a dead, awful silence.

"Yes—she just now run in the house to find you."

"After her, Phil! She may kill herself!" Gail said sharply, in a whisper. Edith put her hands over her face for a moment, praying, before they all ran together toward the kitchen door.

Little Lights on LIVING

THE SUN-LIT TOPAZ

ONCE when leaving France, I received as a gift a charming little necklace of silver and lapis lazuli. With the gift came to me the story of the maker of the necklace. A little Frenchman who owned a tiny shop in the Latin quarter of old Paris always informed his patrons, I am told, that he made his jewelry with gold, silver and love.

One day an American lady asked to see the most beautiful thing in the shop. Without hesitation he brought from a high shelf a tiny box, and showed his visitor a necklace containing a marvelous topaz, which he had bought after the war from a noble French family. "I wish I could buy it," the lady said. To her surprise he responded, "I am so happy that you cannot. Though I need money badly, I need its beauty more. Always when I am tired and disheartened," he said, "I hang my topaz in the window, the sunlight comes through it on my work bench, then can I make things more beautiful."

If that would sing in all hearts each day—"to make things more beautiful," what a different world we could make of this old planet. Wars would cease. Hearts of selfish greed would change and share with their neighbors.

We can make more beautiful the lives of those we meet each day, can glorify our work in office or home, no matter how humble it may be, can radiate from happy hearts the joy of living to even casual passers-by.

Early one morning sometime ago I was walking up the beautiful elm-bordered walk on the university campus. The day was glorious. There was still that untouchable freshness in air, trees and grass that only spring mornings have. It made one's spirit dance. I met a professor with his accustomed cane and brief case going to meet his eight o'clock class. One look at his frowning unhappy face, with mouth drooped and self-centered downward look, and my spirit halted, surprised that here was one, while walking under God's vaulted elms, constantly looking down. "No topaz in the window of his soul," thought I. A few steps further I met a freshman girl, whom I knew was having a hard financial struggle, working long hours after school, but, oh, what "a morning face" she had, radiant and lovely!

When the sunlight comes through the topaz of happiness, it will illumine not only our lives, but others as the sun-lit topaz made radiant the tired heart of the little old shopkeeper of Paris. Then can we make life more beautiful!

COMING LEISURE

NOT long ago a young graduate of two years declared that now her college days were over, life held little for her, as she did not need to work, and she was tired of play. "I am bored with society in particular and with life in general," she added with a sigh.

Here she was, talented, with a wealth of leisure time on her hands and had made of it only an idling time, instead of a growing time. "One's leisure is time to invest," I told her, "it is not time to spend. Time spent is gone, time invested is saved." Leisure is not "unoccupied time"—the dictionary notwithstanding! What an irretrievable mistake for countless generations to have been brought up on.

Too long have we been training our children to think and plan their lives in terms of dollars rather than time investment. Money spent can always be re-earned. Time spent can never be returned. Time should be budgeted like money now is budgeted. Children should be taught to expect the largest possible dividends from each day of 24 hours. They should anticipate education from their study time; skill from their play or leisure time; health from their sleeping time.

Parents lose an opportunity for giving their children an early life lesson on successful living when they fail to keep on training them in their play time, as we hear so often "run away and play." Play time in childhood becomes leisure in adulthood.

Leisure in America is coming; leisure that in the past has been a gift to the rich only will soon be part of an average man's day. In order to spread the work of the world to more heads and hands, some folk will be forced to work less hours so that others may work at all, for everyone who has to live ought to have a chance to work. Work is a blessed privilege, so is leisure. Only the man who appreciates work can fully appreciate leisure, and I am beginning to think, can appreciate life to its fullest.

The true test of an educated person is that he can enjoy himself when alone and not have to pay another to amuse him. Life holds no boredom for the man who can recreate his soul in his leisure time. Life's enrichments come to us not through the use of our money, but through the use of our time. Since the American goal has been riches rather than enrichment, what are we going to do with this coming leisure?

POULTRY

BALANCED RATION FOR YOUNG TURKS

Adequate Nutrition Needed in Early Growth.

By L. E. Cline, University of Nevada, Agricultural Extension Expert.
WNU Service.

Unless young turkeys are fed a proper ration during their period of most growth, they are likely to show very poor net returns at marketing time. All the needed elements of nutrition must be provided in adequate quantities and in proper proportions to obtain maximum development. These requirements are not always taken seriously by some turkey raisers.

At the present stage in their growth, the young turkeys are building their skeletons, muscle tissues, feathers, and body organisms at a rapid rate, all of which requires special kinds of food in definite proportions.

Many of the ills of their turkeys which are so discouraging to turkey growers at this time of year are the direct result of malnutrition, and can be corrected through a properly balanced ration if prompt action is taken.

Loose, flabby crops, which often become troublesome, are the result of insufficient protein. Turkeys up to two months of age should have at least a 25 per cent protein ration. After this time the protein can be gradually reduced to 14 or 16 per cent at fattening time.

If the proportion of total ash in the feed exceeds 7 or 8 per cent, there is great danger of the young poults developing leg deformities. At the first showing of leg trouble the per cent of ash in the ration should be looked into and lowered if too high.

Stuck-up eyes and nostrils, as well as puffy sinues, are often the result of insufficient fresh green feed. Deformed breasts and back bones also are caused by this deficiency in vitamin A which can be obtained from green feed. Serious loss to the turkey farmer can result from the lack of green feed or a proper substitute.

A properly balanced ration may cost more per pound than one which is thrown together without thought of the turks' needs. Since this is the time when the foundation for the turkey crop is being laid, it is poor economy in the long run to skimp on the principal means of building the flock.

Water Glass, Lime Water to Preserve Eggs for Year

There are two methods of preserving eggs which are practical for the average family. One is to preserve them in water glass, and the other is to keep them in a solution of lime water. Water glass is available at most drug stores, and is reasonable in price. The material is dissolved in water and the eggs should be immersed in the solution.

A solution of lime water may be made by dissolving burnt lime in water, and pouring off the clear solution after the lime has settled. The clear solution is used for preserving the eggs.

Only clean, fresh eggs with sound shells should be put in these solutions to be preserved. Stone jars make satisfactory containers for preserving eggs in this way. Usually eggs can be kept in good condition for a year in either water glass or lime water solution.—Massachusetts State College.

Line Breeding

A definition of line breeding given by a prominent poultry breeder is: "Line breeding is a form of systematic inbreeding in which an effort is made to keep away from too close inbreeding. It is really, in its ordinary use, breeding confined to the blood lines of a single family. The details of this practice vary considerably with different breeders, but the purpose is the same in each case, namely, to avoid the necessity of introducing blood of another strain or family with the disastrous results to the uniformity of the strain which often accompanies such introduction of blood. Line breeding, whether known by this name or not, is almost universally used by successful breeders, but is often accompanied by the occasional and judicious introduction of outside blood."—Missouri Farmer.

Breaking Broody Hens

Broody hens should be confined in a salt-bottomed or wire-netting floored coop for three or four days. When confined they should be fed laying mash and given an ample supply of fresh water. A grain diet will prolong the broody period. Hens that are not easily broken of the broodiness should promptly be culled out of the flock, since they spend so much time trying to set that they cannot be profitable to the busy poultryman who has a large flock.

Egg-Canning Grows

Notwithstanding sharp competition from China, the egg-canning industry in the Chicago market has shown a steady development in recent years, and four companies are now operating in this market, with an annual output valued at over $500,000. The progress of the egg canning industry in Chicago has become a highlight in recent years. The business runs into approximately 150,000,000 pounds annually. A case of eggs yields from 35 to 36 pounds of the shelled product.

THE INTERESTING STAGE

Three hours, according to Bruce Barton, is enough time for any man to tell all he knows. But he doesn't become interesting until he begins telling what he suspects.—Kansas City Star.

CALERA NEWS

IN MEMORY

Mrs. Braddie Boyd Johnson, a former resident of Calera, died at her home in West End in Birmingham, July 13th, 1935. She is survived by her husband, R. R. Johnson; a daughter, Carolyn Ivey Johnson; a brother, D. W. Boyd, of Calera; three sisters, Mrs. Will Ivey Brown, of Ozark; Mrs. L. J. Mothershed and Mrs. J. W. Blackburn, both of Birmingham; a neice, Mrs. Cecil Cowart, of Calera; two nephews, Boyd Mothershed, of Birmingham; Truman Mothershed, of Dallas Texas. Funeral services were held at the West End Baptist Church, Sunday afternoon at 4:00 o'clock, conducted by her pastor, the Rev. White. Interment in Elmwood, Luquire directing. The pall bearers were Cecil Cowart, Boyd Mothershed, W. L. Skinner, A. L. Dillon, Joe Deau, H. B. Berry, Homer Reid, John McGowan. Mrs. Johnson's kindly nature and winning smile caused her to be loved by all who knew her. Now the family circle is broken and the loss is great, but our Father knows best. And when life's transient dream is over, we shall meet again in that bright land where there is no more sorrow nor tears. We will spend eternity with our loved ones in the sunshine of our Savior's smile. We extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy and pray that our Heavenly Father may comfort them in this sad hour. The high esteem in which she was held was evidenced by the large number of friends present and the many beautiful flowers.

"God calls our loved ones,
But we lose not what He has given,
They live on earth, in though and deed,
As truly as in Heaven".

The Unique Club met at the home of Mrs. Fay Eason and Mary McKibbon, Tuesday afternoon, August 6th, from three to five, with a social meeting. If this weather continues, the FREEZING process now being advocated by scientists will receive a large following. The plan is, freeze the body, tag it, and call the human "specimen" when the individual desires to be aroused. It might be rather exciting to be "frozen", labeled, and called 100 years from now, slowly arise from the frigid slumber, yawn, take a good long stretch, and begin living all over again. A fellow might miss a lot during the "strange interlude"—but 100 years from now there might be something interesting enough to wake for, and possibly to write about.

The plan of revivification has worked successfully on a Rhesus Monkey—It should be a wow with some of Darwin's proteges!

Bernarr McFadden, famed Physical Culturist, writes an interesting editorial in Liberty magazine and asks the pointed question, "Is the whole world going crazy?" Personally speaking, we think "IT HAS WENT" —but don't you love it?

Mr. Aaron Gardner, former resident of Shelby County, now residing in Arkansas, has been the guests of his old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, who live near Columbiana. Both Mr. Gardner and Atkinson, some years ago, owned adjoining farms near Chelsea, Alabama, and during his visit enjoyed reliving the "good old days" together.

Mr. Alabama Power Company Thompson has returned from his vacation and is busily engaged in selling out the stock of Electric Fans. A new shipment arrived this week.

Mrs. Earl Wood was hostess at a Dinner Party staged in Curlee's Cafe on last Friday night given in honor of Mr. Wood's birthday anniversary and her coterie of visitors from Millen, Georgia, Misses Gay and Marks.

A number of social courtesies have been extended the Misses Gay and Marks since their arrival including a swimming party at Yamakita and a dance on Saturday night at the Airport.

A motor party consisting of Mildred Curlee, Beth Wallace and Alice Roberts, Messrs. L. G. Fulton, Frank Fulton and Wales W. Wallace, Jr., will leave for Daytona Beach, Florida on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. James R. White have returned from a motor trip to Atlanta, Savannah, Tybee, and other points in Georgia.

SPRING CREEK

It will be of interest to the friends of Mrs. Gene Merrill, nee Bertha Campbell, who died in Hammond, Ind., last January, to hear that her five little daughters, Eunice, Dorothy, Flora Lee, Mary Jane and Melbadene, have come to Birmingham to make their home with their aunt, Mrs. Maggie Allen.

Max Allen spent the week-end with home folks and returned to Argo, Ala., where he and Lem Ingram have an extensive job of grading.

Mrs. Eleene Allen and daughters visited Will Allen at the Veterans Hospital in Tuscaloosa, accompanied by E. O. Allen and family and Rufus Allen. While there they met F. M. Allen and wife, of Ashland, on the same mission as themselves. Mr. Allen was reported as improving.

Clyde Allen visited friends and relatives in Birmingham, Sunday.

The Farmers Union Barbecue held at Ebenezer, August 10, was a grand success. Many from this community were present for the occasion.

The Spring Creek C. E. met at 7:00 o'clock Sunday night. The leader was Clara Lee. The topic was "God's Laws". The program was carried out efficiently by the following members: May Ingram, Irma Ingram, Lawson and Bessie Ingram, Jessie Vernon, Walter Hayden, Miss Mattie Frost, J. F. Allen, Beonica Ingram, Maude Lee and others. A unique was the rendering of that grand old song, "Buelah Land", by a male choir with Jack Lee as leader and Bessie Ingram at the piano. It was grand and inspiring.

PATTERN 2315

Make it in percale for a morning frock! Make it in novelty cotton, shantung or pique for a sports frock! And then make it again in silk crepe for an afternoon frock!

This pattern will make a charming frock for nearly any summer daytime occasion. Its lines are particularly good—for the "not-too-slim" figure. Moreover, it can be run up before the clock moves round. Note both versions of the flattering collar. Pleated sleeves, a kick pleat, and cleverly placed fullness all contribute to the charm. Two or three frocks of this pattern will prove classics in your wardrobe.

Pattern 2315 is available in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 takes 4⅜ yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Why So Many Men?
Bitterness in Berlin
Frank H. Hitchcock Dead
The Snake Has Rights

Why does Mussolini need so many men for little Abyssinia? If he attacks, he will go through the air with bombs, poison gas or both. He certainly will not march hundreds of thousands of men through swamps and over hot sand. He now has 925,000 men under arms, with 340,000 Fascist militia ready to be called, plus 200,000 others, born two years before the big war started. Is something else present or expected, back of all this man power? Even if Japan should come in, that would only mean a more complicated air war.

Arthur Brisbane

Berlin reports increased bitterness in the war against the Catholic church, with official posters, eight feet high, printed in red, scattered through the city, attacking alleged Catholic opposition to Nazi rule.

The posters speak of the "grafting Center (Catholic) party, working hand in hand with Bolshevism," and declare that Catholics, "the eternal enemies of the reich, wish to destroy the unity of Germany." The posters are believed to indicate new and more bitter attacks on Catholic organizations.

Many Americans will learn with sincere regret of the death of Frank H. Hitchcock, postmaster general in President's Taft's cabinet and at the time of his death publisher of the Tucson Daily Citizen.

Frank Hitchcock, typical, intelligent American, will be remembered as first to appreciate the airplane's importance in connection with distribution of mail. Twenty-four years ago, when flying was new, he flew, taking a pouch of mail with him, and advocated immediate use of planes over "impassable stretches of country."

At Thomasville, N. C., Rev. Campbell Holmes, "Holy Roller" preacher, allowed a rattlesnake to bite him as he preached, "just to show you that God will take care of me." There was excitement and admiration in the congregation. Next day his arm was badly swollen, he was violently ill, death threatened, but the "Holy Roller" preacher refused medical attention. The reverend gentleman perhaps forgot that the same great Power that gave him his beautiful faith also gave the rattlesnake its powerful poison. Each creature has its gifts, not safely ignored.

Did you buy bonds in the big war excitement, when little ladies, seated on elephants, sang patriotic songs and begged you to give "till it hurts"?

One hundred and eighty-five million dollars' worth of government bonds are mislaid somewhere, perhaps hidden in old trunks, in desks, safe-deposit boxes, by those now dead. The government would like to get these past-due bonds and pay for them.

On the edge of the Sacramento river in California, a lady, thirty years old, appeared with a suitcase. While eight youths looked on, she undressed, then danced for some time on the edge of the water, finally plunged in, crying, "I'm not coming back," and sank in midstream. That death-preceding dance is new in suicide.

One out of every three married couples in the United States is childless, news not complimentary to the childless families. Exceptions are cases in which nature refuses to send children.

You would not value a chain of steel with every third link broken, or a chain of heredity with every third link missing. This "childless family" news should make this country revise stupid laws against immigration, shutting out men and women willing to have children, and work for them.

Madame Evelyn, who reads the stars, the future, the crystal globe and the lines in your hand on the New Jersey beach, read the "lines" for a 200-pound customer, then sighed and said: "I see only trouble ahead of you."

The client also sighed, and he, says Madame Evelyn, stood up and said: "'You are an excellent fortune teller, and here's the beginning of the trouble,' and socked me on the jaw, knocking me out of my chair."

Americans interested in cotton production and wondering how long our export figures will stand up will want to know that Japanees cotton buyers have "folded up," as one Texas cotton grower put it; have moved out of Texas, apparently giving up all idea of buying cotton there.

The late Nathan Straus used to say: "If a German loses one of his relatives, he feels badly. If he loses money, he goes to bed sick."

German trade and industry will "go to bed sick" if it persists in its present attitude toward those that promote business and prosperity in every country where Jews are treated fairly.

Lesson for August 18

MARTHA

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:38-42; John 11:17-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.—John 11:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Home Jesus Loved.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Home Jesus Visited.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Can I Help at Home?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Home That Attracts Jesus.

The lesson committee designated Martha as a home-maker. That she was a home-maker is to be conceded, but to view this lesson only in that light is to miss its vital point, for Christ's teachings here are equally appropriate to male and female, in the home, office, shop, schoolroom, farm, etc.

I. Jesus Revealing to Martha Her Supreme Need (Luke 10:38-42).

1. Jesus welcomed into her home (v. 38). Though Jesus had no home of his own, he could come into this home at any time and throw off the restraints incident to public ministry. What a blessed thing it would be if all homes were open to receive Jesus.

2. Mary sitting at Jesus' feet (v. 39). While this was Martha's home, Mary seemed to have lived with her. Mary had a peculiar spiritual insight which prompted her to sit at Jesus' feet and listen to his words. The real place to hear Jesus' words is "at his feet." Let no one imagine that Mary did not render any service, for the little word "also" indicates that she had been serving with Martha.

3. Martha's complaint (v. 40). She was so bent on providing a good meal for Jesus that she was on the verge of distraction. Her many assumed duties had so got on her nerves that she not only found fault with Mary, but even censured Jesus for allowing Mary to sit at his feet while dinner was being finished. She even assumed the authority to command Jesus to send Mary back to help her. The sure way to serve without distraction is to first sit at Jesus' feet and listen to his words.

4. Jesus' reply (vv. 41, 42).

a. He rebuked Martha (v. 41). This rebuke he administered most tenderly, for he knew that Martha loved him sincerely. Those who are supremely occupied with Jesus are anxious for nothing (Phil. 4:6).

b. He defended Mary (v. 42). In this defense he declared that there was but one thing needful and that Mary had chosen that good part which could not be taken from her. Those who choose this good part cannot be robbed of it by friends, foes, or circumstances.

II. A Revelation of Christ's Love (John 11:1-36).

1. The sickness of Lazarus (vv. 1, 2). Even those who are in close fellowship with the Lord are not immune from sickness. Sorrow comes even to the homes where Jesus is loved.

2. Martha and Mary send for Jesus (v. 3). Because they had come to know Jesus as more than a mere man they instinctively turned to him when this shadow fell across their home.

3. Jesus' strange delay (vv. 4-6). They sent for Jesus because he loved Lazarus. They said, "He whom thou lovest is sick." Jesus abode in the same place because he loved Lazarus and his sisters (v. 5). This mystery is to be explained by the fact that Jesus was divine and knew all things.

4. Jesus goes to the Bethany home (vv. 7-17). His mission in going into this home was twofold; to minister to the sisters and brother and to strengthen the faith of the disciples (vv. 11-15).

5. Jesus teaching Martha (vv. 18-27). As he was nearing the village, Martha met him with a complaint because of his delay. He ignored her complaint and taught her concerning the resurrection and the life.

a. "Thy brother shall rise again" (v. 23). He is saying these words to every sorrowing sister, brother, wife, husband, child, and parent.

b. "I am the resurrection, and the life" (vv. 25, 26). He is the source of life, and all who are joined to him by a living faith are in such vital fellowship as to be unaffected by bodily change.

6. Jesus weeping with Mary (vv. 28-35). In response to the Master's call Mary fell at his feet, uttering the same words used by Martha, but, no doubt, in a different tone of voice and attitude. Her words were responded to with tears. "Jesus wept."

III. Jesus Raising Lazarus (vv. 38-44).

His great sympathy now expressed itself in supernatural power. Sympathy would be valueless without this connection with divine power.

Music

Music, like a true coin, rings best on the domestic hearthstone. The essence of it no more belongs to the concert room than—reverently let it be said—does religion to the church. It must needs be an everyday matter, entering the hearts and homes of the people, otherwise its true functions remain unfulfilled.

Repentance

Repentance is a goddess and the preserver of those who have erred.—Julian.

Oriental Drape and Classic Pleat

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SEEKING a new fashion thrill? Here it is and a rather startling one when it comes to "something different." It's the draped silhouette either of Hindu or classic Greek influence. Look for it this fall, for draped fulness is on the way. As a matter of fact it has already arrived.

For quite some time Paris designers have been giving these draped effects a good try-out in evening wraps and gowns. When Schiaparelli and Alix and others first displayed gowns that either went harem or were daringly draped a la Hindustan and when artful pleatings went classic Greek and the sari and the Ihram headscarf made their dramatic appearance, they created no end of excitement in fashion's domain. The venture went over with such overwhelming success style creators were led to adopt the idea of drapes and pleats as a workable formula in the designing of the new fall and winter modes.

The oriental influence which is being so dramatically exploited this season is shown in the costume to the right in the picture. The front fulness which is a characteristic feature of the newer fashions is achieved through both shirring and draping. As the season progresses the importance of front fulness will become increasingly apparent. The new softly styled frocks, the new separate skirts and the new coats all emphasize this trend. In harmony with this idea of front fulness comes the vogue of draped bodices. The most important feature of these smartly draped bodices is that their technique involves the use of gathers and fulness that seems to radiate from the shoulder line.

It is also significant that this stunning gown is made of chiffon, for the formal afternoon gown of filmy black is proving a favorite among best dressed women. The square rhinestone buttons add sparkle to the costume. The hat of quilted silk is very unusual—suggests Egyptian inspiration.

The other gown is likewise made of black silk chiffon. The waist-depth jacket is done in all-over exquisitely fine accordion pleating. The blouse and the softly tied and pleated sash are of bright vermilion silk chiffon. The classic arrangement of this sash obviously suggests Grecian influence. The Greek trends are reflected in every realm of fashion, ranging from evening gowns to beach costumes. Beach wraps are so designed as to fall over the shoulder in classic cascade pleats. Then there are the lovely white chiffon evening gowns that are all-over pleated and go trailing in grace with pleated capelike scarfs which fall over the shoulder in most picturesque fashion.

One outcome of Greek influence is the vogue which calls for flat-heeled Grecian sandals. The smartest Parisiennes are wearing them fashioned of gilt leather. Picture a gown of Greek inspiration made of white crepe. The sculptured classic look is accented with a handsome gold cord with tassels about the waist. Gilt leather Greek sandals add the final touch.

The Hindu turban which the lady to the left in the illustration is wearing is noteworthy in that advance millinery showings are placing particular stress on the importance of Hindu-draped turbans for immediate wear with one's midsummer frocks. These charming turbans and berets are made either of black or white crepe or chiffon. As you see in the picture the thin fabric is twisted and shirred in interesting fashion. A new look is achieved this season for berets and turbans of Oriental inspiration in that they are worn, in some instances, back off the forehead.

MODERN VOGUE IN SCENT APPLICATION

A delightful new vogue in scent application—one particularly effective and appropriate with sleeveless and backless summer frocks and beach wear—is the one sponsored by a famous old French perfume house. Perfume, according to them, should not be applied to the clothing or handkerchief, or in little dabs behind the ears (as most American women apply it), but should be applied directly to the skin, spread over it in lavish quantities. Applied in this way, scent becomes an intrinsic part of the personality, being modified differently by the different texture of each skin, and so acquiring a warmer and richer, as well as an individual, fragrance.

A lovely and refreshing preparation known as "skin perfume," which should serve a double purpose in the sticky summer months (since it is cooling and stimulating as well as fragrant) is produced by this French house. The skin perfume comes, incidentally, in the fresh and delicate scent of lilac, unprecedentedly popular this year both as spring and summer shade and as floral perfume.

Another new note in scent fashion widely advocated this summer is the combination of perfume and dusting powder in the same scent to give one a single, individual fragrance. These combined perfume and dusting powder packages are ideal for summer use, from the viewpoint of comfort as well as charm.

Beauty Hint

An astringent lotion with a powder base makes an excellent foundation for make-up during warm weather. It may also be used to cleanse the face several times during the day before applying powder.

Rod and Reel

JOE HARKNESS and I met when a traffic jam caused our cars to lock fenders. His apologetic grin and our exchange of cards began a warm friendship. My games were architecture and golf; Harkness' steel and fishing.

By the time I had constructed their fishing lodge in Canada a few years later, Joe's wife was familiarly depending on me to be the extra man at her various entertainments.

Recalling it now, I believe the first time I noticed the fish hooks, the barb of one caught in the eye of the other, was during a fall visit at the lodge when rainy weather kept us indoors. They were tacked over the big stone fireplace.

When I found them in the city apartment my friends occupied while I built their Normandy chateau—the only hint of fishing in the room—I was mildly piqued. But when I saw them hanging between French paintings on the walls of their new home, I was intensely curious.

I couldn't tell the Harknesses that Corot and Millet would hardly enjoy sharing honors with fish hooks but I did ask what special significance they had.

Joe looked at them, a quizzical gleam in his eyes. "When is a fish story not a fish story?" he queried.

Sally made it a little more intriguing by replying in a low voice, "When it ends like a fairy tale."

"You see, Ken," Joe began, "long years ago, when Sally was young and beautiful—"

"He means, of course," Sally interrupted, "when I was young and gullible!"

The male Harkness chuckled. "Well, anyway, she doesn't dispute the young part, Ken. She was young, you know!"

He ducked the magazine she threw and continued. "Sal's dad and mine belonged to the same clubs. We were the only children of those widowers, so they took us around more than most parents do and Sally and I were thrown together quite a bit.

"We followed the same golf tournaments, watched the same swimming events, polo, tennis—oh, everything that went on. Well, McCrea, Sal's dad, and my old man had argued the golf championship of Valley club for over a decade. Neither one of them could win that extra game that would make the trophy his own."

"It was like a Kentucky feud after they'd been fighting for twelve years," Sally broke in with a pensive smile. "The feeling between them was so strong that the board of directors decided the winner for the coming event—which was to be the thirteenth tournament—would get the cup once and for all. Each of them had won it six times, you see."

"Well," Joe sighed, "it's a funny thing, Ken. McCrea died in the spring of the following year and it almost seemed that my dad couldn't stand the disappointment of not playing that final tournament, for he soon died, too!"

Harkness seemed lost in his memories for a minute and Sally carried on. "Their deaths were quite a blow to both of us and for a long time we were like fish out of water. But youth has a way of forgetting unhappiness and Joe and I—well, we just took up the battle where our fathers had left off."

"Yeah," my host agreed. "We tried golf at first but we were both so rotten we soon gave it up. Then trap shooting became the fad and Sally and I carried even scores for a long time. Both of us had been doing a lot of fishing, meanwhile."

"I think I never hated anybody quite as much as I did Joe Harkness," Sally confided, "the year the gang at the club complained that our inherited competition had degenerated to hot air." Sally smiled. And when Sally smiles you just naturally smile with her. "They said they were going to have a medal struck off with a picture of Ananias on it and present it to the winner!"

Harkness' face simply beamed as he went on with the story. "Anyway, Ken, for the first time in our lives we agreed on something; we both objected to being called liars. So we settled on a fishing party then and there that would decide which of us was the better man.

"We decided to cast on opposite sides of the same stream and went out the next day with fire in our eyes. We'd been at it for several hours with a couple of trout apiece, when I felt an awful tug on my line. I played it for a while, slowly reeling in, convinced that I had a whopper! My rod bent and I was having the time of my life. Finally I gave a long, steady pull that should have landed him, when I hear a—uh—respectably large splash."

Joe shook with laughter. "Sally, still hanging onto her rod, had been hauled in. Our hooks had caught just as you see them now, Ken. And that's the way they've stayed 'cause it was during that excitement that we realized our contest wasn't nearly as important as—as other things."

We were all grinning now. "Then nobody really won, did they?" I asked.

"Well, you see, Ken," Joe replied, a twinkle in his eyes, "we've never quite settled that. But since I actually had to pull Sally out of the stream, I'm inclined to believe I caught the biggest fish."

"And since I've been 'hooked' now for over fifteen years," Sally countered with affectionate sarcasm, "I'm inclined to agree with him!"

Forgiveness for Early Love 'Slip'

Understandable in Writer's View, but Not Easy to Forget.

"When I was away visiting my sister-in-law in another city recently I had occasion to see a rather unusual little play that opened there. It was called 'The Perfect Marriage,' and showed two people who had been married fifty years who were beloved by everybody and really believed themselves to be an example of a perfect marriage.

"Lovers over seventy, they were. And in reviewing the years they had spent together theirs seemed really to be an example of what all who start out on a honeymoon hope their marriage will be.

"And then, by one of those quirks of circumstances that take place in plays, like the one pulled stitch that starts to unravel a whole job of knitting, there is unraveled the story of an extra-marital 'affair' on the part of both. Both the husband and the wife of this perfect marriage once had a lover. Neither find out until now, after fifty years of 'ideal' marriage. When they do the revelation nearly upsets their sturdy little citadel of love—but not quite. With the philosophy of their years they forgive each other, and—live happily ever afterward.

"Now we hear a good deal in real life, too, of forgiveness of infidelity, and at a more hot-blooded age than that of the golden-wedding couple. Can you understand it? I pride myself on being modern, and all that, but I think this is a question of human values that does not change with the age. What do you say?"

Broadminded, and with the understanding of human nature that is her marked characteristic, the famous writer to whom this query was addressed thus answers it:

"I say this—the old saying: 'You can forgive—but not forget!' Though marriage may, indeed many marriages have survived discovery of infidelity on one or both sides, in my opinion there is always something killed. The fabric of marriage may be patched up, but the warp and woof and soul of the thing must surely carry the mark.

"On the other hand, to my mind, it is not at all beyond understanding, as my correspondent suggests, how such a couple, or either one, can be willing to 'take back' the unfaithful one, or make the effort to forgive.

"While I certainly do not minimize the hurt, the wrench, the impulse to the contrary that would naturally be involved in continuing to live with a husband or wife who has been discovered unfaithful, the richer and the happier the marriage has been the more possible it is to understand such a forgiveness. For a really true marriage is a house of many mansions. Beside the physical love there is the understanding, the companionship, with which, as I like to say, one never walks alone. In that companionship there is mutual suffering, mutual struggle, mutual joy—mutual understanding. With people of quality—the human, not the social kind—those are things to make life rich indeed. With such people, you may say, infidelity does not happen. And yet, it has been known to. And in such a case forgiveness, while a bitter enough cup—and while the drink can never be the same as when it was taken at the spring of untainted belief—is, nevertheless, understandable."

Colts Need Grain As Supplement Feed

AUBURN, Ala.—Colts need grain as a supplement to the mare's milk to make them grow into strong muscular animals with good heavy bone development, states J. C. Grimes, head of the animal husbandry department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

The daily gains of the colt before weaning are the largest of any period in its life and these gains gradually decrease as the colt reaches maturity, he says. If the feed box of the mare is placed low the colt, when from three to four weeks of age, will begin to nose about and finally locate it. Eventually, the colt will learn the taste of grain and nibble in its mother's feed box at feeding time.

The earlier the colt can be taught to eat the more independent it will become; therefore, the greater the possibility of being able to secure more work from the dam.

Farm Women Offered New Foods Bulletin

AUBURN, Ala.—In an effort to assist Alabama housewives in providing balanced, year-round diets for their families, the Alabama Extension Service has published a new booklet, "Food Preservation," by Miss Margaret Garrett, specialist in food preservation. The booklet is for free distribution and may be obtained from the county home demonstration agents or from Miss Garrett.

Pigs Require Both Pasture And Feed

AUBURN, Ala.—Pigs will not grow well on pasture alone but farmers will save corn and protein feed by keeping their pigs on pasture, according to experiments conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture. Pigs used in the experiments made very poor gains when they had no feed other than pasture—even though the pasture was good, however, the results showed that pasture along with concentrated feeds give better gains and the hogs require less feed.

Soil Surveys Planned For Tennessee Valley

AUBURN, Ala.—The resources of the Tennessee Valley will be covered by surveys and mapped in detail within the next three years, according to plans announced by the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, Washington.

The survey will be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment stations of seven states—Alabama, Tennessee, Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Georgia, and Mississippi—and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

PANOCO MOTOR OIL

A good cigarette, too needs Balance—

And that's why the tobaccos in Chesterfield are carefully balanced one against the other . . . not too much of one—not too little of another.

We take the right amounts of the right kinds of four types of tobacco — Bright, Burley, Maryland and Turkish.

It is this balancing of tobaccos that makes Chesterfields milder and makes them taste better.

Plane And Pony Aid In Hunt For Fliers

Denver, Colo., August 19—A determined aviator with a fractured leg started on a plane and horseback trip into the roadless, steep upper Laramie Peak county of Wyoming Monday convinced he will find a smashed plane that carried an Indianapolis business executive, an airport manager and the latter's bride.

The hunt was started at the request of relatives of Burnside Smith, president of the Aero Mayflower Transit Company and several other Indiana firms. They said nothing has been heard from him since he left Helena, Mont., last Thursday on a dangerous 800-mile trip to Denver.

With Smith were his pilot, Dick Barnett, manager of an Indianapolis airport, and Arnett's bride.

The trio left Helena about 2:30 P. M. Thursday and Arnett announced he would take the treacherous over-mountain routes to Denver which few pilots fly.

No trace of the ship—a conspicious yellow model—has been found. Ranchers near Laramie Peak reported heard a plane, apparently in trouble during a storm, and then saw a flash high up on the mountain that juts like a gigantic thumb from the Wyoming plains.

Walt Higley, Denver representative of the same aviation firm with which Arnett was associated at Indianapolis, immediately volunteered to make a search of the Laramie Peak country although he recently suffeder a fractured leg in an automobile accident.

ALABAMA INCREASES WOOL PRODUCTION

Auburn, Ala.—Wool production in Alabama showed an increase this year over last, reports F. W. Gist, state and federal agricultural statistician, who estimates the 1935 production at 137,000 pounds, shorn from 38,000 sheep, compared with 136,000 pounds shorn from 35,000 sheep in 1934. The average weight per fleece in each year was 3.6 pounds.

School Entrance is Changed To Oct. 1

Children who will reach their sixth birthday on or before Oct. 1 will be allowed to enter city and county schools when the Fall term opens in September, according to a new state bill.

The change gives an additional 3 months' margin in entrance age. Formerly children whose sixth birthday came after July 1 were barred from entering school until the following year.

Shelby County schools holding regular 9 months will open on Sept. 9. Those holding only 7 months term will open on October the eighth.

LIME STRIKE ENDS EARLY IN AUGUST

Forty-one days ago every lime plant in Shelby County, Alabama was closed down by a general strike. Not one unit has operated since until we reached a settlement tonight with our employes. Picketed plants made it advisable to cease all operations, allowing nothing in or out of our works.

No expense will be spared to speedily restore manufacture and shipping schedules of LONGVIEW LIME PRODUCTS. Every department is already rushing into action on our books, so any cooperation extended or business awarded to us now would be of invaluable aid and doubly appreciated.

Agency dealers, industrial users, State and Government buyers, also architects and contractors, all long friends of ours, have stood squarely behind us from the beginning of our trouble. My friends, everyone of you acted truly magnificent and we shall always do our level best to merit your continued confidence and valued loyal friendship.

And we couldn't close this without gratefully acknowledging the invaluable support rendered by our many good competitors.

Agricultural Outlook Is Better Says Myers

AUBURN, Ala.—The outlook for agriculture is better than it has been for several years, according to a statement by W. I. Myers, Governor the Farm Credit Administration.

"According to the reports from most of the Federal land bank districts, farm sae prices have advanced materially in the last few months and I am wondering if we are entering a farm real estate boom period," he says.

Heart Drifts

Cheerful Cherub Continues.

GOSSIP.

I heard some talk about myself,
And most unfair it seemed to be—
Oh, well, I live in my own mind
And not in OTHERS' THOUGHTS of me.

QUERY.

They say a life of struggle grim,
Of facing every task,
Will get you some place in the end—
But WHERE, if I may ask.

MILLIONAIRES.

I never envy millionaires
Their wealth and motor cars—
I'd like to be a poet though
For they own all the stars.

TREE

I think I'd like to be a tree,
And stand and sway without a care;
And have the fragrant rain-washed wind
Run long, strong fingers through my hair.

HOUSES

We all live in houses of thought
Life builds in our minds so it seems
The walls and the floors are just facts,
But the windows and doors are our dreams.

DRIFTING

I do not strive to guide my life
With firm and brain-restricted hand—
So often, drifting here and there,
I touch the shores of Fairy-land.

CONDUCT

A rule for good conduct
Which hasn't failed yet
Is just to do nothing
You'd like to forget.

EXPLOSION.

"When everything goes dead wrong"
And fate presses down on my load,
Am I noble and brave?
No, I break things and rave—
It's such a relief to explode.

CHASE

I long for a life of more leisure.
I rush through the day till it feels
As if I am chasing tomorrow
While yesterday snaps at my heels.

FAME

Each tried to get his share of fame
In spite of modest disavowals—
Some carve their names in history,
And some embroider them on towels.

MEMORY

My memory's like a spider's web
That holds bright joys like drops of dew,
With here and there an awful rent
Where whole long weeks have fallen through.

PROCESSION

Down the years in grand procession
Poets march with deathless song,
While with countless little verses
Stubbornly I tag along.

CIRCUIT COURT OF SHELBY COUNTY NOW IN SESSION

The Shelby County Circuit Court convened in Columbiana on Monday morning, August 19, Judge W. W. Wallace, presiding.

The morning session was opened with Invocation by Dr. Arthur Nabors, of Florence, Alabama, after which the Grand Jury was organized, and Frank Edwards of Calera, was selected Foreman. After receiving the Charge by the Court, the Jury retired to the Grand Jury room to begin their investigation of the violations of laws since their last meeting. Hon. A. L. Hardegree, Circuit Solicitor, representing the State.

The Petit Juries were then selected by the Court. It was particularly noted that hte Jury Commission in filling the box, had complied with the ruling by the United States Supreme Court in the Scottsboro cases, as one negro—Tom McLeod, was drawn on the Jury. He was excused on account of being over 65 years of age.

The Criminal docket will be tried next week.

Terraces And Legumes Will Control Erosion

Auburn, Ala.--Soil erosion often removes five to seven times as much plant food each year as is required by the cotton or corn crop, says R. E. Yoder, assistant agricultural engineer of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute

"For most Alabama farmers, the construction and maintenance of a suitable system of terraces is the first step in their erosion control program. That this is generally accepted is shown by the fact that today over 80 large tractors and terracing machines are owned and operated cooperatively by Alabama farmers," he points out.

"While terracing is the first step in any sound, long time, soil building program, it is not enough, he said and then explained that tests by the Alabama Experiment Station show that the use of vetch not only gave a practical control of sheet erosion loss from cotton land about 50 per cent. Similar experiments have shown that Austrian winter peas are just as effective as vetch in reducing soil erosion."

"The use of winter legumes, in addition to serving as a desirable source of nitrogen and organic matter, is a very effective method of reducing soil losses from 'between terraces' or sheet erosion," he concludes.

Fall Gardens Need Shallow Cultivation

AUBURN, Ala.—For those who have late-planted gardens, it is important to keep all weeds out so that the crops will have a chance to make their best growth.

Whether cultivation is done with a horse-drawn cultivator, a hand cultivator, or a hoe, the soil should be stirred no deeper than is necessary to kill the weeds. Shallow cultivation results in less injury to crop roots; and with the proper cultivation and cultivator attachments it controls the weeds just as well.

Deep cultivation brings moist soil to the surface where the moisture is quickly lost.

JAS. E. CAHALL NAT. ADJ. IS VISITOR IN COLUMBIANA TUES.

The National Convention of the Wild Cat Veteran's Association will convene in Birmingham on November 10, 11 and 12, according to James E. Cahall, National Adjutant of Washington, D. C. who was a distinguished guest of the Columbiana Legion Chapter, on Tuesday.

Lobby Committees Quarrel Over Magnate Hopson—President Signs Social Security Act—Tri-Power Conference on Italo-Ethiopian Question.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

WILL ROGERS, famous actor and humorist, and Wiley Post, one of the best known fliers in the world, crashed to their death in a plane while flying from Fairbanks to Point Barrow, Alaska. The two men, close friends, had been enjoying an aerial vacation trip in the North, and Post intended later to fly to Asia. News of the fatal accident was sent to Seattle by Sergt. Stanley R. Morgan, signal corps operator at Point Barrow. He said he had recovered the bodies from the wreckage.

RIVALS in the matter of publicity, the house and senate committees on the activities of lobbyists got into a tangle that certainly didn't enhance their dignity. Howard C. Hopson, the long sought head of the Associated Gas and Electric Utilities system, permitted the emissary of the house committee to find him, and Senator Hugo Black flew into a rage and had his committee threaten Hopson with contempt proceedings unless he appeared before it. Chairman O'Connor of the house body was angered by this and declared: "Hopson is in my custody. I've got him. Nobody else has got him. Nobody else is going to get him."

H. C. Hopson

The elusive, chunky utilities magnate told the house committee about his various companies and related the saga of his travels while he was being sought. But he politely refused to answer questions concerning the sources and amount of his income. He testified that he "believed" the Associated Gas system had spent "eight or nine hundred thousand dollars" in opposition to the Wheeler-Rayburn utility control bill.

"That's just a small fraction of the $300,000,000 equity in our companies which would be destroyed if the bill becomes law and remains law," he declared.

To one question by Cox of Georgia Hopson replied: "I resent that inquiry. No gentleman would have asked it." Whereupon Cox threatened to kick him out of the room unless he withdrew the answer, and Hopson mildly withdrew it.

O'Connor introduced in the house a resolution that severely slammed the senate, but it dropped when word came that Senator Black would wait to take Hopson after O'Connor's bunch was through with him. However, it gave opportunity for a ridiculous quarrel between the New Yorker and Rankin of Texas.

Late in the day Hopson calmly walked into Black's committee room and asked: "Is some one here looking for me?" Black and his committee then questioned the utilities man for an hour or two and got mighty little out of him except smooth sarcasm that made the chairman quite furious. At that time both Hopson and his attorney had been served with contempt citation.

GOV. MARTIN L. DAVEY of Ohio has "pulled a fast one" on the Republicans in behalf of the Democratic party. The G. O. P. leaders were demanding a state-wide by-election in Ohio to fill the vacancy created by the death of Representative-at-Large Charles V. Truax, believing the result would demonstrate, even more clearly than did the Rhode Island election, the waning strength of the administration. But Governor Davey went to Washington and consulted with President Roosevelt and then announced that he would not call and could not be compelled to call a special congressional election until next year. His declared reason was the cost, not fear of party defeat. Court action to force the calling of the election has been started but Davey says there is no restriction of his discretion in fixing the time of the election.

SURROUNDED by a group of notables and in the glare of photographers' flashlights, President Roosevelt put his signature on the social security act, of which he said: "If the senate and house of representatives in this long and arduous session had done nothing more than pass this bill the session would be regarded as historic for all time."

Among those who were present were Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York and Representative John Lewis of Maryland, who jointly drafted the bill; Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who had a hand in its making, and Senators Pat Harrison, William King and Edward P. Costigan.

In a talk intended for reproduction on the sound screens of the country, the President said:

"This social security measure gives at least some protection to 30,000,000 of our citizens who will reap direct benefits through unemployment compensation, through old age pensions and through increased services for the protection of children and the prevention of ill health.

"We can never insure 100 per cent of the population against 100 per cent of the hazards and vicissitudes of life but we have tried to frame a law which will give some measure of protection to the average citizen and to his family against the loss of a job and against poverty-ridden old age.

"This law, too, represents a corner stone in a structure which is being built but is by no means complete—a structure intended to lessen the force of possible future depressions, to act as a protection to future administrations of the government against the necessity of going deeply into debt to furnish relief to the needy—a law to flatten out the peaks and valleys of deflation and of inflation—in other words a law that will take care of human needs and at the same time provide for the United States an economic structure of vastly greater soundness."

CAPT. ANTHONY EDEN of England, Premier Pierre Laval of France and Baron Pompei Aloisi of Italy met in Paris, as arranged, to see if they couldn't devise a way to avert the Italo-Ethiopian war, due to begin in September. Eden had a plan all prepared and after outlining it to Laval he laid it before Baron Aloisi. The latter, of course, had no power to assent but was compelled to submit the proposals to Premier Mussolini. That Il Duce would accept it without change was considered unlikely, but it formed a basis for discussion.

Baron Aloisi

According to the best information, the Eden plan embraced these chief points:

1. Important economic concessions for Italy in Ethiopia.

2. A proposal that Italy be given the right to colonize and exploit rich, sparsely inhabited portions of the Ethiopian uplands probably under a League of Nations mandate as is provided for former German colonies in article XXII of the League of Nations covenant.

3. The offer of an outlet direct to the sea for Ethiopia, as a measure of compensation for its concessions.

It was understood in Paris that Mussolini still demanded what would amount to a mandate over Ethiopia so that he would have political as well as economic control over the country. This Great Britain does not like, and France is rather on the fence. The British insist that in any case there must be an immediate showdown. One correspondent said if Great Britain adhered to the policy at which Eden hinted in his conversation with Laval, it would mean either dissolution of the League of Nations or else collective sanctions against Mussolini, involving the risk of a European war.

NOBODY liked the new tax bill that congress was working on, and the senate finance committee had hard work making up its mind as to the form it would recommend. First it altered almost every provision of the bill passed by the house and changed it from a "soak the rich" measure to one which would soak practically every one. This was done by lowering personal income tax exemptions and starting the surtax increases at $3,000 instead of $50,000. The latter feature was proposed by Senator La Follette and was adopted to keep him in line. Also, the inheritance taxes which President Roosevelt had asked for were eliminated.

Senator Borah

Protests against increasing the taxes on little incomes came immediately, from senators, representatives and the country at large. Senators Borah of Idaho and Norris of Nebraska were among the "independents" who expressed their disapproval. Mr. Borah especially was vocal in opposition.

"Families with these small incomes are now paying more than their proportionate share of taxes and at the same time are facing higher prices for food, clothes, fuel and rents," he said.

So the committee suddenly reversed itself abruptly, rejected the La Follette plan by a vote of 8 to 7,

The bill which the committee reported was passed by the senate by a vote of 57 to 22. It contains new provisions to compensate for those eliminated from the house bill and the estimated revenue is only $1,000,000 less. This is divided in the senate bill as follows:

Graduated corporation income tax	$ 60,000,000
Corporation excess profits and capital stock taxes	65,000,000
Intercorporate dividend taxes	39,000,000
Increased estate taxes with related gift taxes	100,000,000
Increased surtaxes on incomes in excess of $1,000,000	5,000,000
Total	$269,000,000

The bill thus more closely follows the demands of President Roosevelt than the house measure.

FIFTY commissioners representing the Methodist Episcopal church, the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the Methodist Protestant church have been in session in Evanston, Ill., and have agreed upon a form of union that is to be submitted to the general conferences of the three churches and, if ratified by them, to all the annual conferences. The new organization, it was agreed, would be called the United Methodist church and would consist of six jurisdictional or regional conferences.

FARMERS who believe that their individual rights are being encroached upon by the administration's agricultural policies are offered a chance to get together by the organization and incorporation in Chicago of the Farmers' Independent Council of America. Dan D. Casement, a farmer of Manhattan, Kan., is president of the body. Stanley F. Morse, South Caroline farmer and consulting agriculturist, is executive vice president and Chris J. Abbott, Nebraska stockman and farmer, and Clyde O. Patterson, Illinois Jersey breeder, were incorporators. Dr. Charles W. Burkett, agricultural authority of New York and formerly director of the Kansas agricultural experiment station, and L. G. Tolles, farmer and past master of the Connecticut State Grange, are other vice presidents of the council, and Dr. E. V. Wilcox, representative of the Country Gentleman, District of Columbia, is secretary-treasurer; Fred L. Crawford, Michigan congressman and farm owner; E. E. Dorsett, farmer and past master Pennsylvania State Grange, and Kurt Greenwald, farm manager and agricultural engineer, New York, are directors.

"To me there is but one issue, whether we are going to have a constitutional government or have a dictatorial regime," said Charles E. Collins, Colorado cattleman and president of the American National Live Stock association, regional vice president of the new organization.

SECRETARY of Agriculture Wallace has changed his mind about the reduction of wheat acreage for 1936. Instead of asking the farmers for a cut of 15 per cent, as was announced recently, the figure is now placed at 5 per cent.

Sec'y Wallace

Wallace told reporters that the change was decided upon after the government's August 1 survey of crop conditions indicated that total wheat production this year would amount to only 608,000,000 bushels as compared with domestic requirements of 635,000,000 bushels.

The step was taken, he asserted, to assure ample supplies for domestic consumers. He said that it was expected to place the country in a "strengthened position" in the export market. He added the change in policy will not result in any marked reduction in benefit payment to farmers. He did not say what the exact reductions in the payments would amount to.

AAA officials estimated that approximately 52,000,000 acres would be placed under contract this year. They asserted that the government is given "adequate powers" to deal with the situation if a bumper wheat harvest should result in 1936.

WHEN the President's social security bill was finally enacted into law, the senate adopting the conference report already agreed to by the house, probably many thousands of men and women all over the country began figuring on the pensions they would receive under its terms. It is unlikely that one in a thousand has any clear idea of how the new program's pension system will work, so we reprint here a neat summary prepared by the Associated Press showing its operation as applied to "Bill Jones":

"Suppose young Bill is twenty when the law goes into effect and makes an average monthly salary of $100 until he is sixty-five. He will get a monthly pension, until his death, of $53.75.

"In detail, here is what will happen to him:

"In the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939 he will pay a salary tax of 1 per cent, or a total of $36 for the three years. In 1940, 1941, 1942 he will pay 1½ per cent, or $54. In 1943, 1944, and 1945 the tax will be 2 per cent, or $72. In 1946, 1947, and 1948 the tax will be 2½ per cent, or $90. From 1949 to 1981, inclusive, the tax will be 3 per cent, or a total of $1,188.

"Thus, in 45 years, Bill Jones will have paid in $1,440. All the time his employer will have been matching his tax payments, so the total paid to the federal treasury will be $2,880.

"At sixty-five Bill Jones can expect to live perhaps 10 years more. If he does, he will get back $6,450.

"When Bill Jones dies this is what will happen:

"His average annual salary will be multiplied by the number of years he paid taxes. In other words, if he dies after he has paid taxes for 45 years, $1,200 will be multiplied by 45—giving a total of $54,000. Arbitrarily, the bill stipulates that Bill Jones' estate shall be entitled to 3½ per cent of that, or $1,890—less any amount he received in pensions before he died.

"If Jones dies before he gets back $1,890 in pensions, what he actually received is deducted from $1,890 and the remainder paid to his heirs. If he lives until he gets back all of the $1,890 and more, his heirs get nothing.

"If Jones should die before he reaches sixty-five, his heirs would be entitled to a payment of 3½ per cent of the total wages on which taxes had been paid."

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Comments by administration leaders, including Vice Chairman Crowe of the Democratic national committee, that President Roosevelt would be re-elected by the votes of the West and South, thus virtually conceding the Northeast as enemy country, have driven political wiseacres to the electoral vote table. What they have found is highly significant.

In a nutshell, if the Democratic campaign for Roosevelt should be waged on that basis next year, New York would again be the pivotal state, as it used to be in calculations at the turn of the century. For New York has not been the decisive state since the Cleveland days. In fact, in the only close election held since Cleveland—that of Wilson versus Hughes in 1916—New York was on the losing side. She cast her electoral vote for Hughes, by the fairly tight majority of 119,000.

Talk of re-electing Roosevelt with the West and South has brought back interest in that very close election, when everyone waited for word from California to see who had been elected. An inspection of that vote, however, brings out the highly interesting fact that the real key state in that election was Ohio. The Buckeye state was the only one, so to speak, to go "out of line." Ohio voted against the trend in surrounding states, for Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana and West Virginia all went for Hughes.

Had Ohio gone for Hughes, no one would have waited three days to see how California went. Hughes would have been elected.

The point of which now is that the entire South and West are not enough, unless the candidate carrying them can also carry one of the big states, at least, east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio. New York, with all the West and all the South, would be enough. So would Ohio, or Illinois. Or a combination of Indiana and Wisconsin.

Now Vital State

All this, too, it must be remembered, is on the assumption that the candidate carrying the South and West carries California. That state is now vital, far more important, with its heavily increased electoral vote, than it was in 1916—before election day of that year.

Rumblings from California are that the Golden Gate state today is no more friendly to the New Deal than is Rhode Island, whose vote precipitated all this talk. Washington attorneys who attended the bar association meeting in Los Angeles, most of whom also visited San Francisco, and some of whom visited San Diego, bring back these reports. They say California has been so frightened by radicals that it has swung all the way conservative.

Add to this possibility, the fact that Ohio never was a strong Roosevelt state—that even in 1932 its majority for him was only about 73,000—and since then it has had many squabbles—that both its senators voted against the AAA amendments—and it becomes clearer why New York's 47 electoral votes are apt to be absolutely essential to Roosevelt next year.

Which again brings up the question of Tammany. So far the Tiger has not put a stone in the President's path. It rolled up a tremendous majority for him in 1932. Its delegation in the house has voted almost solidly for everything he wanted—in many obvious instances against the local selfish interests of the New York taxpayers. Whereas Tammany has gotten very little. Farley's backing of McKee for mayor of New York resulted in the election of La Guardia, which deprived the Wigwam of local plunder, and it has fared very badly on federal patronage.

Now, no one accused the Tammany chieftains of being stupid about this sort of thing. And there will be no forced municipal election in November, 1936, as there was in 1932, following the resignation of Mayor Walker. So do not be surprised if suddenly there should be manifested a much more kindly spirit toward Tammany at the White House.

Churches and Charities

Sudden realization of what the Roosevelt tax ideals would do to their sources of incomes—not to mention endowments—has been driven home to prominent churchmen as well as those interested in hospitals and other charities.

Up to about a month ago the attitude toward the New Deal of most persons, whose chief interest was in churches, educational and charitable enterprises, had been rather benevolent. They were glad—especially those interested primarily in church and charity—to see the federal government take so much of their burdens from them. This was especially true because the New Deal program began at a time when for several years contributions had shrunk and expenditures skyrocketed, both due to the depression.

But suddenly their interest was forced on the whole subject of where the New Deal policies would lead—with respect to contributions and bequests by the rich—by President Roosevelt's firm stand against exemption of corporation contributions to charities from corporation income taxes.

Churches have long been beneficiaries from the wills of the rich. So have universities, hospitals and charities. And while some of the shrewder leaders in such circles had been somewhat alarmed by the heavy imposts on big fortunes proposed in the Roosevelt tax message of June, they had not taken any public stand. In fact, if they bothered to write to their senators and representatives during the last days of June or early in July, it escaped general notice.

Then the President made his position clear on corporation gifts to charities, which brought the people interested up standing, and resulted in an immediate barage of protests being received on Capitol Hill.

Started Them Thinking

This got them to thinking about the whole tax program, and its possible effect not only on the things in which they were interested but, in many cases, on their jobs.

Church leaders began to realize that if the heavier income taxes on big incomes, and heavy imposts on inheritances proposed by the President, were imposed—there might be a serious falling off in their donations and bequests, as the first place the rich would start to cut would be on their charities, when it came to readjusting their expenses to conform to the new taxes.

Very prominent churchmen of four of the largest denominations in this country have already moved into action, writing their senators and members of the house at length about what the new taxes would do to their churches. In many instances these letters were the second to be received by the same legislators from the same writers within a month.

First came the protests about the President's desire to eliminate the exemption for corporation gifts to charities. Then, within three or four weeks, came the second letters protesting about the higher taxes on the big incomes and inheritances.

One very important figure in church circles in this country wrote his senator that he believed the whole system of financing his church, and for that matter all other churches in this country, would have to be changed if the policy of "sharing the wealth" is carried out.

Incidentally, a few of these protest letters also strike at the idea of the sliding scale corporation taxes, pointing out that the same curtailment of gifts to church and charities would follow reduction of corporate dividends as would follow higher income and inheritance taxes.

Indications are that if the tax bill fight is long drawn out in the senate, this church and charities influence may become one of the potent elements in the final votes on amendments.

Cut Relief Costs

Real pressure to cut the relief costs of federal government has been under way since May, and effects are beginning to show. This is not being accomplished, as some seem to think, by any surveys the federal men are making. On the contrary it is being accomplished exclusively—so far—by state and local agencies.

But it is being done because of federal pressure. Very few people realize what a czar the four-billion-dollar relief bill made of Harry Hopkins—always allowing for the fact that President Roosevelt can tell him what to do. But he has the power to say to any state: "Cut your relief rolls by so many by the first of the month, or next month you get no federal money whatever."

When congress was passing the relief bill, giving the President four billion dollars to prevent suffering and spend our way out of the depression, the senators and representatives were much concerned about how part of the money should be apportioned as between the states. They laid down the old, exacting formula arrived at in days of good roads aid appropriations. They applied this not only to such money as should be spent for roads, but also to the money to be spent for eliminating grade crossings.

It simply did not occur to them that it might be a pious idea to decide how the relief money should be distributed. The idea was, if people were hungry they would be fed. That is still the idea, of course, but the national legislators never thought of the possibilities of Harry Hopkins' saying to their state governments that if they did not proceed according to his ideas, he would cut off their federal aid.

All this really goes back to President Roosevelt's ideas in January, when he was explaining his 1936 budget (for year beginning July 1, 1935) and talking about the four-billion-dollar appropriation he was then asking.

At that time the idea of the White House was that everybody who could work would be given work, and everybody who could not work would be thrown back on the states and local communities for support. In short, that the federal government would be taken out of the relief business as soon as the works-relief projects got under way.

Sleep Is Matter of Choice, Some May Go Without It

Mr. MacCarthy, the baker of Kinsale, Irish Free State, who baked all night and hunted all day, going without sleep, refused to tell how he succeeded in doing without tired nature's sweet restorer. As a young man he decided that too much time was lost in sleeping, and he cut down his own hours abed "until he was able to forego slumber entirely." Mr. MacCarthy lived to be seventy-six, or six years on borrowed time. Mr. Edison, while engaged in tasks that kept his interest keyed up, had a habit, by some of his associates considered bad, of ignoring sleep, and he had no patience with stay-abeds. Mr. Edison lived 84 years.

To prefer hunting to sleep was Mr. MacCarthy's privilege; to choose the drafting room and the bench to the bedchamber, Mr. Edison's. It is the privilege of others to prefer to give to sleep the six hours to which Coke subscribed; indeed, true liberals will tolerate a greater liberality. But let it be sleep, not the restlessness of vain tossings, the fitful snatches of relief from vain regrets and haunting fears so many know and dread. There is still defense for the philosopher who echoes Cervantes' tribute to sleep, and takes his stand with the first of that trio immortalized in the deathless lines: "'To bed, to bed,' said Sleepy Head: 'Let's stop a while,' said Slow; 'Put on the pot,' said Greedy Gut, 'let's sup before we go.'"

The Lucky Lawrences

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

SYNOPSIS

The luck that brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, now twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. Gail again accompanies Van to Los Gatos for a week-end visit. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars.

In the icy grip of horror and fear they all ran together up the kitchen steps, across the dark porch.

Ariel opened the door of the inner passage as the others rushed in from the porch, and stood at bay, facing them. She spoke impatiently, a note of reproach and complaint in her voice.

"Where were you, Gail? I've been hunting—I've been all over everywhere!"

"You're hurt!" Gail whispered, beside her.

"No, I'm not hurt at all, and for heaven's sake don't make such a fuss!" Ariel said quickly.

"Oh, it's you, Fargo?" Dick said to the policeman. "I didn't recognize you out there. Been an accident, eh?"

"Hello, Mr. Stebbins," the policeman said with a sort of deliberate solemnity. "Yes, sir. There's been a bad smash. There was a little girl killed, Mr. Lawrence. They took her to the hospital, but later we heard she—" The officer coughed respectfully. "She passed out on the way," he finished simply. "Miss Lawrence and the feller that was driving the other car are booked on a charge of manslaughter, Mr. Stebbins. The judge is going to see them in the morning. I presume—" He cleared his throat. "I presume for an investigation," he added mildly. "It was a question of bail."

"I see," Dick said. "I'll be right down. I'll take care of everything. I'll be right over."

"Why, take your time, take your time," the officer, departing, said in a faintly protesting note.

"Manslaughter," Phil said slowly, in the dead silence that followed his going. "What happened?" he demanded, sitting down heavily in the old kitchen rocker, his eyes never leaving Ariel's.

"Why, just this," Ariel began, in a voice she tried to make sound easy and natural. "A drunken idiot drove his car out into the middle of the traffic and forced our car over against the other side of the road, and we hit the car this little girl was in. That's all.

"I had no more to do with it than—well, Sam, here! This man—he was drunk—cut in from behind a bus, and came straight at us. They said he was going fifty an hour. He headed right at us and we swerved to the right, do you see?—and this child was in the car we hit. It sort of swung 'round, and all the cars jammed, and every one shouted."

Dick, who had followed the policeman out of the room for a few private words, had returned to the kitchen.

"It looks to me, from what Fargo says, as if it was up to the other fellow," Dick said now, sitting down beside Gail on the end of the table.

"Whose child was it, Dick?"

"Moss. A little girl named Janet Moss. Five years old."

"Five years old. My G—d!"

"I don't know why you all look at me. I agree with you that it's simply terrible!" Ariel said quickly and hotly. "But you don't think I'm—I'm enjoying it?"

"Oh, shut up," Phil commanded her, brushing the little spurt of temper aside, his dark look not brightening.

"But—but Ariel wasn't to blame, Phil! It wasn't her fault, Dick. Why—why should they—why should they want to take her to jail?" Gail demanded, turning from one of the men to the other.

"It's what they call a technical charge. Now, let's keep cool, everybody," Dick said, "and find out just where we stand. In the first place, what time was this, Ariel?"

"Ten minutes to six."

"And you and Buddy Raisch and the Barchi boy were in the car?"

"In Buddy's roadster."

"Was Dorothy Camp there?"

"No. Not then."

"Where was she?"

"If you'll give me a chance," Ariel interrupted the interrogation with bitter patience, "I'll try to tell you. But I can't get anywhere if you keep looking as if I'd done all this as a joke!"

There was no answer to this. But Phil said drily, as if thinking aloud, "God knows it's no joke!"

"You weren't driving, Ariel?" Gail asked in a sick tone.

"Yes, I was."

"You don't know how to drive!"

"Oh, yes, I do."

"Good G—d!" Phil whispered under his breath.

"Ariel—not when it happened—you weren't driving then?"

"I say I was, Gail." Ariel's weary, colorless face cracked with an unnatural smile; she looked about the circle scornfully, almost sneeringly.

"You all look so funny!" she gasped, shaking, trying to laugh. "You all take—things—so d—n seriously!"

Gail tightened an arm about her shoulders.

"Pull yourself together, Ariel!" she said sharply. "You've gotten us all into horrible trouble, and been partly responsible for a little girl's death, and if you can't take it seriously, why, we can, that's all. What were you doing driving Buddy Raisch's car? Are you crazy?"

"I've told you what I was doing. We were coming back from Monterey, and Buddy was sleepy, and so was Larry, and I was driving. We were in the middle lane, where you have a perfect right to be on that hill, and the bus was coming up—and I saw it perfectly well, and I knew the line on the right was where it was, and I was driving along, about twenty-five, I guess, when this drunk came lunging out from behind the bus, straight into my face, and of course I had to jerk right—I couldn't jerk left into the bus, and I couldn't stop because of the cars behind me. The car—the car this drunk Miller was driving—came head on, and hit our guards and smashed the headlights. They said it was badly smashed, but the man wasn't hurt, and at first I don't think they thought anyone was hurt. And then they saw this little girl on the grass."

"Why wasn't Buddy driving, Ariel?" Gail asked, very gently, in a silence.

"He was sleepy, I told you. We were all up late last night, dancing. We were over at Monterey. We just went there for dinner, Buddy and Larry and Dorothy and I. And then we stayed and danced. We were going to come home last night, but it was too late, so we stayed. Buddy felt sort of sick, anyway. He had some oysters or something."

"After Gail went to Los Gatos you said you were going to Santa Cruz to have lunch on somebody's yacht, and stay with Dot over night," Edith put in, anxiously accusing.

"Yes. Well, we did; we had lunch on the Howards' yacht, in Santa Cruz. We were coming right back, and then afterward, when we were starting home, we saw the sign at Soquel—'Del Monte 38 miles'—and Larry said he dared us to go down there and have dinner and dance. We started for Del Monte but then we thought that was too smart—we weren't exactly dressed for it—so we went to a place in Monterey, a nice place, too, and we all wandered up and down the street, and bought things and had fun."

She fell silent on the word.

"Go on!" Phil said.

"Well, then we cleaned up for dinner, and dressed—our suitcases were in the car—and we went over to the hotel and had dinner, and fooled around. But then the boys got sort of—silly," Ariel explained, scowling, "and we didn't know what to do with them. Then Buddy said that if we'd go over to Del Monte and dance he'd rush us home right after, so we agreed. But at the hotel he disappeared, and I didn't know where he was. Dorothy was dancing with Larry—I think they're engaged, Gail."

The forlorn attempt at diversion fell flat. Gail's face was stern.

"I don't know what I would have done," Ariel went on, "if Van Murchison hadn't come up. Of course he said that I oughtn't to be there so late, and that you and Ede would be wild, and we went out and sat on the porch waiting for Buddy to show up. Van took me home about half-past one, to the Monterey hotel," Ariel said, "and Dorothy was there."

"And what had happened to Buddy?"

"Well, he'd eaten these oysters, Phil, and he felt sick."

"And then, Ariel?"

"Dorothy and I were so scared we cried, and she was going to telephone her mother. But we thought that wouldn't do. So we locked our door and went to bed. Dorothy and I went to sleep; I don't know when the boys got in; they were on another floor, anyway. We got up early this morning, and walked around Monterey. And we met the boys—they were all shaved and dressed and sober, of course, and they felt so sorry that we sort of forgave them, and we all went to breakfast, and then we were coming straight home. We packed and we got started at about eleven, but we stopped at the Del Monte links to see some of the golf.

"We had some sandwiches at Los Gatos, at about three, and we came on over the Dumbarton bridge, and Buddy kept feeling sicker and sicker, and Larry was half asleep. Finally Dorothy said to stop the car for a minute, and she jumped out and said she was going to take a bus. She said the way Larry was driving we'd have an accident.

"No bus goes by there, anyway. But after a few minutes Dorothy signaled a car with a man and woman in it, and got in—I didn't think she really meant to, and Larry didn't, and it made us pretty mad."

"You were alone with the two boys, then, Ariel?"

"Yes, and Larry kept getting sleepier and sleepier."

"Then what happened?"

"Then Larry asked me to take the wheel, and said he'd sit right beside me and help me out if I got into a jam. I've had the wheel lots of times. So we changed places. We were only seven miles out, and all I wanted to do—"

Her voice thickened, stopped.

"All I wanted to do was get home," she said. "I drove along—you couldn't go fast in that traffic—just keeping my place in the line, when the car ahead of me jumped forward and got clear, and this crazy drunk lunged up in front of me.

"There was the—most—awful—crashing of glass and wood," she whispered, putting her head back, closing her eyes. "Every one began to shout and scream. They saw the little girl, and a man asked me if my car had hit her, and I said—I said I didn't know. I saw a man pick her up, and her hat sort of drop back. . . ."

"Oh, my G—d!" Edith whispered in the pause.

"My car was jammed against theirs," Ariel said. "But there didn't seem to be much harm done. The police came up and they asked to see my license, and Buddy said that it was at home. But afterward at the station I told them I didn't have any. That was right, wasn't it, Dick?" Ariel asked with an appealing look.

"Well, of course!" Dick answered impatiently.

"They held us on a manslaughter charge," the innocent, hoarse young voice went on. "They wanted me to telephone home, but I wouldn't."

The recital was over. There was silence in the kitchen; no Lawrence could speak.

"I'll go right around," Dick said, glancing at his wrist. "Now, don't take this too hard. It happens all the time. If they can hang it on him that he was drunk and that Ariel had the right of way they'll not hold her."

Gail's heart went to him, the big, homely, gentle, adequate friend and champion of the family, with so passionate a rush that she felt an emotion like a physical pain in her breast.

Ariel came, white and weary and young, and stood before Dick and put her hands on his shoulders.

"Will you get me out, Dick?" she faltered.

"Why, sure I will!" he said, a little gruffly, smiling down at her as a big dog might look down on a puppy.

"I didn't mean to do it!" she whispered, her mouth trembling, her face crinkling into tears. And then in sudden irritation and disgust she exclaimed, "Gail, Gail, I'm going to be sick!"

"I thought so!" Gail sprang across the room. She and Edith had an arm apiece about the convulsed, slender little figure as they rushed it to the familiar sanctuary of the upper rooms.

Ten minutes later Gail went with Dick to the police station.

"I think it would look—better, to have one of you girls along," Dick suggested. Sam was left with Ariel; Edith and Phil went to call at the stricken home of the dead child.

"I'm—I'm terribly sorry about this," Dick presently admitted reluctantly. "I ought to warn you. This Miller, the man who was driving the other car, might ask for a jury trial."

"Oh, Dick, no!" Her voice was weak with terror.

"He might. If he can exonerate himself, or prove that Ariel was even partly in the wrong."

Her heart pounded, raced—pounded again. They were getting out of Dick's car now at the City hall.

"Dick, will they find out that she was at Monterey with those boys?"

"They might."

"They shan't! I'll have her lie," Gail said fiercely. "Dick, don't you see that with every one here—every one in Clippersville—she'll be ruined! They'll think she's the sort of girl who runs around to hotels with boys," Gail began, in an agony.

"If the case against Miller is strong enough they may dismiss the charge against Ariel," Dick pursued after a moment. "Shall we—" he moved his head toward the building—"shall we go in?"

"Just a moment!" Gail had caught at his hands. "Are you sure we can't save her—can't say that Buddy was driving?" she stammered, delaying him.

WILL ROGERS

Greatly Loved American

Born Nov. 4, 1879—Died Aug. 16, 1935

Will Rogers, Oklahoma cowboy whose homely philosophy endeared him to the hearts of millions, is dead. The wreckage of the plane in which he and Wiley Post, famous flier, were seeking new adventures was found where it had fallen about 15 miles south of Point Barrow, Alaska, northernmost white settlement in America.

Thus ended in tragedy the career of the ranch hand who had made millions laugh—probably the greatest and best known comedian of his day. His intense interest in aviation caused him to undertake the hazardous flight with Post over the wilds of the Far North. For many years he had traveled the skyways, and in his newspaper column had been one of commercial aviation's strongest supporters. That flying should have caused his death is one of fate's grim ironies.

Rogers' career reads almost like fiction. He was born at Ollogah in Indian territory, November 4, 1879. He attended the Willie Hassell school at Neosho, Mo., and also the Kemper Military academy at Boonville for a short time. From that humble beginning he rose to become the intimate companion of the great men of the world.

His stage career began in vaudeville at the old Hammerstein roof garden in New York in 1905. At first his act was purely a routine of rope tricks, and he is still considered one of the world's rope experts. Finally he began to insert homely observations on current events into his act, and enthusiastic audiences begged for more.

Rogers began to receive national recognition when he was engaged by Ziegfeld for the Follies and the Night Frolics in 1914. The ever present chewing gum, his crooked grin, and the lock of hair which dangled in his eyes were known to everyone. Whether he talked to audiences of thousands, to Presidents and cabinet ministers, or to a group of ranch hands he still had the manner of the Oklahoma cowboy sitting on a corral fence and commenting on the weather and the affairs of the nation.

It was through his writings, however, that he was best known and loved. His daily newspaper feature was read by millions, and his weekly column carried by the nation's largest dailies and also syndicated to weeklies by Western Newspaper Union carried his observations into the majority of American homes. No matter how busy he might be, or what affairs were pressing he always took time to prepare his column himself. A motion picture might be in the making, with expenses of hundreds of dollars each minute going on, but Rogers never failed his newspaper readers. Each day he would retire to some corner of the set, and while directors fumed and producers wailed, he turned out his regular stint.

Few people today realize the extent of Rogers' writings. Among the books he wrote were Rogerisms—The Cowboy Philosopher on Prohibition; Rogerisms—The Cowboy Philosopher on the Peace Conference, 1919; Rogerisms—What We Laugh At; Illiterate Digest; Letters of a Self-Made Diplomat to His President, and There's Not a Bathing Suit in Russia.

His writings were unique. Under their cloak of humor there was an underlying common-sense that came from a man raised close to the soil. He knew the people of America and his sage comments—often only a few lines—often carried more wisdom and more weight than pages by another. Although his fame was world-wide, and his income enormous he never lost the common touch. To the end he was Will Rogers, and his line "All I know is what I read in the newspapers" became almost a trademark.

Just before he left on the fatal flight, he told correspondents that he was going to spend the winter with some of Alaska's old sourdoughs—swapping stories, hearing their tales of adventures—and finding in their association the old pioneer humor of his boyhood days. And because he was Will Rogers he would have found it just as entertaining as though he had never found success beyond his wildest dreams.

America is better because of Will Rogers. He brought a viewpoint that is almost lost today—that of those sturdy people who forged their way into the West, their slow, dry humor and their hard headed attitude toward life. Millions will feel a personal loss when they pick up the paper and Rogers' comment is no longer there.

POULTRY FACTS

USE LAYING FEED FOR SUMMER EGGS

Safest Way to Make Profit, Poultry Man Says.

By Leon Todd, Extension Poultryman, Purdue University.—WNU Service.

If the healthy flocks of laying hens receives a balanced laying ration through the summer, they should return a profit. To discontinue the feeding of a laying mash would cause most of the flock to go out of production and then into a molt. The feeding of a laying ration will also make it easier and more practical to select the poor producers.

Since most farm flocks did not lay many eggs last fall or early winter, it is possible that the same flocks will give a slightly heavier production this summer if they are properly fed and have good care. Records from farm flock owners co-operating with the Purdue poultry extension division show that it is possible to make a good profit from summer egg production, provided the flocks get a balanced ration and the poor producers are eliminated.

When the flock is properly fed it is not difficult to select the poor layers. They are the first to go out of production during the summer and will soon be moulting. If some of the birds are to be kept over for the second year, it is wise to make those selections during the summer.

Usually the same ration which was fed during the winter is also used to keep up summer production. The one exception is that the birds will consume less grain during the warm weather. One should not forget to provide oyster shells and plenty of clean fresh water.

Pullets Need Green Crop When Released on Range

Wherever possible a succulent green crop should be available for the pullets when they are released on the range, and the pasture preserved and utilized to the best advantage throughout the summer. The ideal system would be to confine the birds in a fairly small section at a time and move them periodically throughout the summer, keeping the crop cut or grazed by live stock in advance, so that only fresh new growth would be available to the pullets. In practice, a similar result can be achieved by running a two-year crop rotation so that the land is free of poultry every other year. Within the area allotted for the year's use the house may be moved to a new position several times during the summer. If this is not feasible, then the feed hoppers should be moved, say 15 or 20 feet every few days, so as to induce the birds to spread over the entire field, instead of congregating on one spot.

Give Hens Wet Mash

If the poultry flock has a late-summer laying slump, feed a wet mash. If skimmilk is available use it in the regular laying mash, or use semi-solid buttermilk at the rate of two pounds to the hundred of mash. The hens should have only what they will clean up in 20 minutes. It is best to feed the wet crumbly mash late in the afternoon, just before the night feeding of grain. At the New York State college two pounds of tobacco dust is added to each 100 pounds of mash as an aid to control intestinal worms and coccidiosis. Tobacco dust should be guaranteed to contain 1 per cent of nicotine sulphate. When the mash is being fed no change should be made in the regular routine of flock management.

Have Sufficient Nests

A sufficient number of nests in the laying house is necessary to prevent crowding on the nests which may result in broken or soiled eggs, says B. C. Henderson, poultry extension specialist of the Pennsylvania State college. In a recent survey conducted in one of the Pennsylvania counties it was found that most of the producers were providing too few nests for their birds. Forty-four per cent of producers were using 10 to 12 nests for 100 birds, 29 per cent were using 13 to 15 nests, and 12 per cent were using over 20 nests.

With the Poultrymen

Culling hens should begin early.

It takes from eight to eleven months to properly develop and finish a capon.

Since young turkeys grow faster than young chickens, their feeds should be higher in protein.

Limberneck is caused by the birds eating decayed animal or vegetable material which is highly poisonous to them.

More harm is done to chicks by high brooder temperatures than by low temperatures, according to a noted poultry authority.

Egg producers whose product is trucked into New York are ordered to pay an impost of seven cents a crate to the teamsters' union.

The Dominion was the first country in the world to introduce egg grading in any form. This was done in 1928 for export purposes only at that time.

GOOD LADDERS WILL CUT LOSS BY RURAL FIRES

"A good ladder on every farm would help a lot in lessening losses from rural fires," says David J. Price, of the United States Department of Agriculture, in enumerating small but important precautions which rural residents often overlook. Doctor Price's job is to find out all he can about fire prevention and fire fighting and pass the information along to the people of this country. Precautions such as a handy ladder, he points out, would help to prevent and control many fires in rural communities.

Speed is essential in fire fighting, and a convenient ladder makes any roof fire quickly accessible. Frequent use of ladders to inspect chimneys and flues might prevent many unnecessary losses, especially during the winter when fires are going.

Among small precautions other than convenient ladders are care in handling gasoline and kerosene, especially in kindling fires; careful disposal of hot ashes; care in using open fires and matches and in burning rubbish; repair of stoves, furnaces, fireplaces, flues, and chimneys not in first-class condition; and frequent inspection of electrical wiring and electrical appliances.

Observance of simple precautions, adequate water-storage facilities on every farm and at every rural home, with a well-manned fire truck at every cross-roads hamlet, is the Utopia at which Doctor Price hopes rural America will arrive.

In the meantime, one of his suggestions is, to paraphase, "A farm fireman's best friend is his ladder."

Stop Chills and Fever!

Rid Your System of Malaria!

Shivering with chills one moment and burning with fever the next—that's one of the effects of Malaria. Unless checked, the disease will do serious harm to your health. Malaria, a blood infection, calls for two things. First, destroying the infection in the blood. Second, building up the blood to overcome the effects of the disease and to fortify against further attack.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic supplies both these effects. It contains tasteless quinine, which kills the infection in the blood, and iron, which enriches and builds up the blood. Chills and fever soon stop and you are restored to health and comfort. For half a century, Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic has been sure relief for Malaria. It is just as useful, too, as a general tonic for old and young. Pleasant to take and absolutely harmless. Safe to give children. Get a bottle at any drug store. Now two sizes—50c and $1. The $1 size contains 2½ times as much as the 50c size and gives you 25% more for your money.

MOSQUITOES Inject Poison

Mosquitoes live on human blood. Before she can draw your blood, however, the mosquito must first thin it by injecting a poison. Thus mosquitoes annoy—are dangerous, spread serious disease epidemics. Don't take chances. Kill mosquitoes, flies, spiders with FLY-TOX—proved best by 10,000 tests. Accept no substitutes . . . demand

BILIOUSNESS

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, swollen limbs; feel nervous, miserable—all upset.

Don't delay! Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

Rogers and Post

News of the death of Will Rogers and Wiley Post leaves every American with a sense of deep personal loss. These two Oklahomans were more than national institutions. Although for different reasons, both had won the honor and affection of the humblest of us.

The scene of the tragedy—a cold and fog-bound Alaskan tundra on the rim of civilization—was a particularly unfitting stage set for Will Rogers' last act. He was of the stuff of sunshine on the prairies.

This young republic will hardly seem the same without the gum-chewing wag, philosopher and statesman - without - portfolio. Will Rogers' role had come to be a mighty important one. It was, like that of the king's jester, to puncture the pretentions of little men in high places. He kept reminding them all that under their high hats and gold braids they were nothing but folks like himself and his cow-puncher friends. But the fun he poked at Republicans and Democrats, at Presidents, princes and the rest, while full of salt, was never bitter. The tinsel of Holywood, the money he made, the great audience he commanded put no mark on him. He never dressed up, either literally or figuratively. He even played polo in blue denim.

Since Mark Twain htere has not been born to America a more authentic humorist. And he understood his complex time quite a thoroughly. He was growing wiser, more tolerant and more life-loving with the years. What a rare old man he would have grown to be!

Wiley Post, too, was humble in his great achievements. His incredible aerial adventures almost dared the gods to do their worst with him. He lived dangerously, and, although young, he seemed to have shared the plight of Alexander who sighed because there were no more worlds to conquer.

Will Rogers and Wiley Post were two great souls and two great personalities. If our religion embraced a Valhalla we would know they are both there, yarning and poking fun at the other heroes of the ages.

Prosperity Depends On Farmers' Income

AUBURN, Ala.—Business and industrial prosperity is dependent upon agricultural prosperity.

A careful study recently completed by a prominent statistical connected with one of the large Chicago Industries reveals that with each 10 percent change in national farm income, there is reflected a similar change of 10 per cent in the total payroll of the nation. A 10 per cent increase in farm income immediately reflects 25 per cent increase in gross profit of all reporting corporations, has resulted in a 11 per cent increase A 10 pe cent increase in farm income in distribution of profits in the form of dividends, from all enterprises. A 10 per cent change in national farm income immediately is reflected in a 10 per cent increase or decline in the value of all stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange. The study reveals that a 10 per cent increase in farm income has resulted in 30 per cent increased profits to the U. S. Steel Corporation. It also reveals that a 10 per cent change in national farm income is followed by a 14 per cent change in the volume of production of U. S. Steel

It is particularly interesting to note that a 10 per cent change in farm income—whether up or down—is reflected in a 16 per cent change in profits of International Harvester Company; 22 per cent profits in General Motors; 14 per cent profits in United Fruit Company; 10 per cent profits in International Shoe Company; 8 per cent change in the profits of packers; 10 per cent in the profits of millers and 12 per cent change in the large cotton manufacturers.

State To Get Funds For Health Work

MONTGOMERY, Alabama, Aug. 22—With Alabama's annual appropriation for public health work apparently to be retained at its present reduced figure, $400,000, as requested by the State Board of Health, the State Health Officer feels that this State will be in position to receive substantial aid from the fund provided in the Social Security Act for the building up of rural health work, recently passed by congress to assist states and subdivision in establishing and maintaining adequate public health services.

Plans for distributing the federal funds already have been worked out in Washington at a conference between officials of the United States Public Health Service and a committee representing state and territorial health officers, of which Dr. J. N. Baker, Alabama's Health Officer, was a member. These rules call for state and local co-operation, and with its present efficient set-up, Alabama is in position to strengthen and broaden its field of health activities.

The central state health department here will work with the county health units in carrying out the program and will direct the work in unorganied counties. There are now 53 county health units in Alabama, with promising indications that several other counties will be organized in the near future.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

Dr. Arthur H. Nabors

Dr. A. H. Nabors, distinguished minister and brilliant scholar of Florence, Alabama brought to a close on Wednesday night, one of the most successful series of church services ever held in Columbiana.

About "Once in a Blue Moon," there comes to this little "Haven of Rest" the rare combination of a Minister who is tolerant, human, friendly, and helpful to the community in which he is an invited guest. Such is the case with Dr. Nabors, who has, during the past ten days, completely captivated the large congregations who have attentively listened to his unusually hopeful messages, singularly free from the critical, and often unjust accusations, sometimes hurled from the pulpit from visiting Evangelists who often drive from, rather than draw people to, the Church services during their transient sojourn.

The writer had the happy privilege of hearing the verbal portrait so beautifully depicted on Sunday morning. Well chosen WORDS and the definition and true meaning of "Work," "Sacrifice," "Suffering," "Prayer" and "Love", clearly exemplified in human lives were interwoven in a masterful way.

The memory of this forceful speaker, his convincing and magnetic personality, his straight forward delivery, and his inexhaustible supply of words and phrases correctly and artistically assembled in sentences containing hopeful messages, will linger in the hearts of his hearers, long after Dr. Nabors has returned to his pastorate in North Alabama.

Not since the years which brought Dr. Gavin of the Baptist denomination and Dr. Hendricks of the Methodist Church, has there been within the hospitable gates of Columbiana, a visiting Minister who has been so unanimously acclaimed "GREAT" by residents (regardless of creeds) of "Your little Main Street and Mine."

In wishing Dr. Nabors continued success and happiness in his chosen field of endeavor, we want to take this opportunity to thank him for his friendly interest and his personal calls to our little "Print Shop." The entire personnel of our journalistic crew join me in expressing our gratitude for his thoughtfulness of us while a welcome guest in Columbiana.

Now let's ring a few neighborly door bells, take a look thru the window and see what the natives are doing:

Mrs. George of Fairhope, is the house guest of her daughter, Mrs. Frank Head.

Mrs. Homer Bearden is spending a week in the Magic City, the guest of her sister, Mrs. Harry Harper.

Mr. Tow Phillivs, manager of Buck Creek Cotton Mills, Siluria, spent Monday in Columbiana.

Dr. E. G. Givhan of Montevallo, was in Columbiana on Monday transacting business.

Miss Agnes Wingard, after a two weeks vacation spent in touring Alabama is back in Superintendent Appleton's office and busily engaged in catching up the threads of her official position.

The Shelby County schools which will run for nine months term will open on September 9th, according to information received from J. L. Appleton. The seven months term will not begin until October 8th.

Bud Norwood of Calera spent Monday in Columbiana. We acknowledge a personal call to the DEMOCRAT EMPORIUM. We appreciate the thought which prompted the "time out" for a friendly chat.

Patricia Walthall, daughter of the famous Henry B. Walthal and Mrs. Walthal (Mary Charleston, who is spending the summer with her aunt, Mrs. Will Ashton in Boothton, was the dinner guest of Mrs. Rosa Teague on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Mack Fancher of Selma, Alabama, are the guests of Judge and Mrs. Cage Head in Columbiana.

Ira Sharbutt, prominent merchant of Vincent spent Tuesday in Columbiana, transacting business.

Jas. E. Cahall, National Adjutant, of Wahington D. C. spent several hours in Columbiana, Tuesday, visiting the members of the famous Wild Cat Division of the World War. Plans were perfected for a joint meeting on the first Monday in September when the regular meeting of the Shirley-Holloway Post will be in session. Adj. Cahall will be the guest speaker on this occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Bolin and attractive children of Birmingham spent the week end with Dr. and Mrs. James Crawford.

Everyone seems to be FLORIDA minded; Those enjoying the many attractive features this beautiful State affords this week include: Mr. and Mrs. Mims Roberts, Miss Nell Davidston, and Keener Roberts who are puruing the fishermen's luck. Another motor party left Columbiana in a cloud burst on Saturday night composed of Misses Alice Roberts, Beth Wallace, and Mildred Curlee—Messrs L. G. Fulton. Frank Fulton, and W. W. Wallace, Jr. They are spending their vacations on Daytona Beach.

George Richardson, vitally important member of the Democrat force, is spending a well earned vacation in South Alabama. Col Hildreth of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, is attending to Mr. Richardson's official duties while he is away.

Mr. and Mrs. Ehney Camp of Birmingham are happily announcing the arrival of a little girl in their home in Birmingham. "Pop" Christian is walking with an extra swagger this week—All he needs is a walking cane to make him a perfect Foxy Grandpa. He is very proud of his new dignified position and is playing the coveted role in a most creditable manner.

Mrs. Ben Hamner of Camp Hill is spending a few days with Mrs. Myra Hamner Miles in Columbiana. Mrs. Miles will accompany Mrs. Hamner on Wednesday for a few days visit.

Will Rogers

A topsy-turvy-speed-mad world was interrupted in the midst of various activities on last Thursday morning, when from the snow ladened mountains of Alaska, there was flashed the news of the death of Will Rogers, the "official jester in the Court of American Public Opinion." Old Mother Earth's shoulders were wrapped in a rainbow interwoven with a million smiles and tears caused by the world renowned philosopher, humorist, statesman, cinema magnet and entertainer de luxe. His passing leaves every American citizen with the sense of a keen personal loss. He was everybody's PAL!

Will Rogers had become a national institution. His calling was a noble one. To make the world LAUGH! To have kidded us along thru all the dark valleys of deepest gloom—often bewilderment! To have kept men laughing while thrones tottered and kingdoms crashed! What a mission!

The stage upon which Will Rogers took his last curtain call was not one fitted for the final act. We prefer thinking of him on a sunlit prairie—yet, even in this frigid foreign clime, we visualize him tossing off the "last roundup" wth a merry quip, while the proverbial boyishly towseled hair fell over his quizzical eyebrows and he said GOODBY to a world in which he had played so vital a part, and his indomitable spirit rose to reach new realms of happiness. Doubtless, ere this, he has thoroughly established himself in his new home. He is probably the favorite Jester around the Celestial throne. His cow boy belt has perhaps been replaced by the Belt of Orion, and he is seated comfortably somewhere near carelessly tossing a silver rope of moonbeams in an attempt to lasso The Mighty Tourus, or he may be sauntering down the Milky Way "getting acquainted." He may stop occasionally to recognize a former friend, perhaps Marie Dressler welcomed him—they were great friends here—His ever present chewing gum has probably been substituted for "Honey-comb." He has, in all probability, kidded some angel about his halo—or his wings which may not be adjusted correctly. He has of course given a vivid account of "What fools we mortals be" down here—and they have all had a good laugh over this bit of information. The waves of ether on which his voice was carried into every home in America will still reverberate with his cheerful verbage and infectious laugh -like a silver echo across the "streets of gold." At any rate, where ever Will Rogers may be—somewhere "east of the sun and west of the moon," the place will be a happier one for his presence. There will not be found a pair of shoulders noble enough to gracefully bear his bright and shining mantle. Its shimmering folds will hang suspended in the "blue" a bright and shining garment peculiarly his own. There has not been found another Mark Twain—There has not been heard a silver toned tenor to vie in matchless splendor with the immortal Caruso neither will there ever be another WILL ROGERS. He brought happiness to a world too shorn of LAUGHTER. He will be missed forever—but never FORGOTTEN.

PATTERN 2212

It seems that girls will be girls this season—even in the field of sports! And most welcome, too, is the return to femininity in clothes. That flattering quality is most often achieved through the softness of gathers (as you see in this yoke) or easy freedom of line (like the pleated sleeve with its casual air!) But every important tailored detail is retained making the shirtwaist frock so universally becoming! See how trim the collar—how neat the front closing—how simple the pocket! Make yours of sport silk or cotton.

Pattern 2212 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 takes 3¾ yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street New York City.

Nobody Was Frozen
One Strike Subsides
The Emperor Has Lions
1,000,000 Tiny Pigs

Several have written to this column offering to let themselves be "frozen stiff and then returned to life" in the interest of science, as suggested by a Los Angeles chemist, R. S. Willard. They will be sorry to hear that the American Medical association calls Mr. Willard's alleged freezing "a vicious hoax."

Arthur Brisbane

It accuses Willard of freezing a dead monkey and then substituting a live one, supposed to have been frozen and thawed out.

Doctor Fishbein, editor of the American Medical Association Journal, says anybody frozen stiff would surely die.

It was an interesting yarn while it lasted.

New York's strike of union men against President Roosevelt, General Johnson and the WAP ("Works Progress administration") seems temporarily to have collapsed. Mr. Meany, New York labor leader, said all union men would go out and stay out and nonunion men would follow. The news is that the nonunion men did not follow, and the union men went back to work.

Robert Moses of the park department, who employs 25,000 workers on park projects, reports only 110 deserters.

An interesting photograph from Addis Ababa shows two servants of the Ethiopian emperor, riding on lions, one female, one male, in the palace garden. The emperor's lions are trained in this fashion for use as "watch dogs." You can easily believe that intruders "keep out."

For war purposes, however, lions are not particularly valuable. Tear gas and deadly poisonous gas would discourage the lions, as they would men, and lions cannot jump as high as an airplane.

In Chicago's stockyards half the hog pens are closed, prices are soaring, men have lost jobs, all for lack of hogs to push around and butcher. The yards are suffering.

And only a little while ago an earnest government, determined to help the farmer and promote prosperity, was butchering tens of thousands of "farrow sows" to get rid of them before their little pigs could be born. "Too many little pigs will make too many big pigs," said the government.

You can imagine the ghosts of a million pigs floating over the stockyards, squeaking in their baby voices, "We told you so."

War talk continues. Mussolini announces a new air weapon "overwhelmingly powerful," but does not say what it is. Plain TNT and poison gas are powerful enough.

Hitler, announcing that his country is "ready to meet any outside peril," adds: "No power on earth can attack us." That seems a little overconfident.

A prosaic financial telegram suggests that the public debt of Germany has been increased by 20,000,000,000 marks. That might represent an interior enemy of considerable proportions.

Uncle Sam, with all his spending, makes a little something for himself. His money-issuing privileges, paper dollars worth about 50 cents, and silver coins containing less than half their value in silver, have given the treasury a profit of about $3,000,000,000.

And at this moment it does not appear to have hurt anybody. Who understands money?

Stocks are better, prices higher, in London and in Wall Street. The London Daily Mail says: "A stock exchange boom seems to do more for world trade than anything. The reason is that it gives confidence everywhere."

Strange and powerful is "confidence." You cannot see it, feel it, weigh it, but you can easily destroy it.

Lovely woman, led by Paris fashion designers, is still trying to find out what she really wants. Universal Service dispatches from Paris describe "dresses as transparent as lace curtains from the knee down; skin-tight evening gowns with cut-out designs as big as elm leaves from under the arms to the hip-line. Cape coats of white fur, slit wide open on both sides." One gown is made entirely of "plaited gold braid."

When will women settle down finally to some one style, as men have done?

Interesting items in taxation news. For instance, government will collect income tax on "public relief." If your generous Uncle Sam gives you $94 a month, the amount that unions now spurn, he will take back $13.12 in income tax.

That seems like giving your little boy a stick of candy and biting off the end of it.

Fall Styles Highspot Silk Suits

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

HERE'S news as is real style news—silk suits for autumn "firsts." According to the Concours d' Elegance, in the morning and the Prix des Drags in the afternoon (the two most elegant displays of clothes in the grand fortnight of Paris racing) the emphasis is on silks of every description.

The couture is dividing attention between rich heavy types of silk and the light sheers which are so happily wearable during the milder mid-season days. Among the silks which have attained prominence in the early showings silk serge is outstanding. A heavily crinkled silk taffeta is also launched. Then there are such interesting silks as satin-faced silk gabardine for street dresses and silk alpaca, and that which is most interesting, a collection of silks which look almost as if they were wool but which are in reality "pure silk." It is needless to say that these heavier silks tailor superbly and are ideal for the autumn suit. The fall feeling is stimulated with details of luxurious furs and a wealth of costume jewelry together with touches of exquisite lace, all of which forecasts the coming season as one of elegance in dress.

Just to give some idea of the smart and active doings going on in the realm of silks we are grouping in our illustration reproductions of a few snapshots taken at random of models recently displayed in the French couture showing held by the international silk guild.

To the left, a charming afternoon suit made of sherritone silk with a mat surface, has a three-quarter jacket. Flowers lined with brown leather are at the neck. Petal pieces at the hemline of both coat and skirt carry out the floral motif. Fitch-dyed sable makes the collar and cuffs. A second view of this smart outfit is given below to the left.

The model centered below assures us that silk taffeta will continue to rustle this fall. This stunning outfit is of black taffeta in a faconne dot. It boasts a sealskin capelet collar. The jacket and skirt feature inverted pleats at the back.

Novelty silk crepe in a rich green, fashions the suit to the right above. Points of interest are the collarless jacket and the graceful three-quarter sleeves. Just below, this same suit is pictured with different hat and gloves. The fact that milady is wearing long suede gloves is important as a forerunner of their survival this fall.

In the new silks the rich colors of the Italian renaissance are given prominence. Vivid clear reds, deep purples, hunter and olive greens, warm browns, all are represented. The use of black is also encouraged, in most instances with a vivid contrast touch to enliven it.

In three-piece suits loose jackets and pleated skirts, also the many gored skirt with contrasting blouses, are in the lead. Afternoon dresses feature long slender lines with lavish use of dressmaker detail. Evening gowns that are draped in Hindu or Greek fashion, with slenderness somehow preserved, are the favorites and the new supple crepes and silks yield admirably to this treatment. Just now all white with gold accessories reflecting Greek classic influence is a favorite theme with smart Parisiennes for evening. A very striking feature in connection with evening gowns is the wide brilliant sashes that are being worn.

MORE TAFFETA

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

With the rustling of fall leaves comes the rustle of more taffeta. Which is to say that taffeta is listed high among voguish silks for the new season. To conform the message of taffeta for fall comes this striking evening ensemble from Paris, to enter in a showing here in America to a select clientele. It is of steel gray silk taffeta. An intricately worked skirt fullness developes into an imposing train. Rows and rows of stitching border the cape edge, the full collar and form the belt. The cape and dress both have neckline ruffles of green silk taffeta. Matching capes are going to be more in fashion than ever.

WOOL-LIKE SILKS POPULAR FOR FALL

Silks resembling wools are important. This is the first year that the texture of these fabrics has been perfected, giving them the depth and heavy "hand" of woolens and at the same time the lightness and luxury characteristics of quality silks. They lend themselves beautifully to tailoring and the dressmaker detail of the prevailing mode and are ideal choices for early autumn costumes where a "fall" look but cool texture is still desired. Later they may be worn in steam-heated rooms with the perfect comfort demanded by the American woman.

The outstanding types are in very high twist, novelty constructions, both sides of the silk dull. Many are in heavy sheer constructions. Some have very flat finishes, continuing the surface influence of the taffetas and chiffons.

Wool-like silks are being shown in the early American design collections for jacket suits and tailored dresses and some evening gowns. They are being made up in evening gowns and fur-trimmed suits.

Silk Alpaca Is Revived in First Autumn Collections

Among the fabric revivals deserving of favorable comment is silk alpaca, a fabric so old it is new again. It is appearing in the first autumn collections now being shown and gives lively promise. It seems particularly ideal for the two-piece dress—whether jacket or skirt—and is just the sort of thing for traveling, whether the occasion calls for a "going away gown" or is a solo expedition.

From behind the scenes in showrooms it seems there is the possibility of the contrastless costume. It has been such a long time since women chose to wear monotones that it seems about time to stop playing with color schemes.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for August 25

BARNABAS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 4:36, 37; 11:19-30.

GOLDEN TEXT—He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith.—Acts 11:24.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Barnabas' Love Gift.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Friendly Barnabas.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Barnabas Used His Possessions.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—In Partnership With God.

The explanatory title given by the lesson committee, "Barnabas (A Consecrated Man of Means)," is not entirely satisfactory, as it emphasizes only one of his many excellent qualities.

I. Barnabas the Man (Acts 4:36).

His original name was Joseph. When he became a Christian he was by the apostles renamed Barnabas, which doubtless signifies the change from the old life to the new. This was a common custom, e. g., Simon to Peter and Saul to Paul. The name means "son of prophecy" or "son of exhortation and consolation." This shows not only the nature and spirit of Barnabas but indicates that he possessed a gift of hortatory preaching.

II. Barnabas the Philanthropist (Acts 4:37).

So fully had the divine love permeated the very being of Barnabas, that, seeing the need of his fellow believers, he sold his property and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet. He was in no sense obliged to do this as there was no such binding law of a community of goods in the early Church. Private ownership of property was recognized (Acts 5:4).

III. Barnabas the Christian Statesman (Acts 9:26-30; 11:19-30).

1. Befriended Saul (9:26, 27). After Saul's conversion he came to Jerusalem and tried to join himself to the disciples, but they were afraid of him. Barnabas saw that Saul was really a converted man. Being a good man he could see there was good in Saul. To be able to judge personality is the first mark of a Christian statesman.

2. Sent to Antioch (Acts 11:22-24). Violent persecutions of the Church sent many disciples to the regions about the Mediterranean sea. As they went they preached the gospel and churches were established. The most conspicuous of these was at Antioch, the capital of Syria, becoming the most important center in the spread of Christianity. Everything went well as long as the gospel was preached to the Jews only, but certain of these disciples deliberately preached Christ among the Greeks. They announced to them that God had become incarnated in a man, that that man, after a ministry of love and grace, had died a sacrificial death on the cross, and that salvation was now offered to all who would accept him.

Tidings having reached the ears of the Jerusalem Church that a great work of grace was expressing itself through the Grecians who were preaching the Lord Jesus Christ at Antioch, Barnabas was sent to look after it. Barnabas was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and faith. He, therefore, had spiritual discernment and broad sympathy. Those who have grace in themselves will be able to see grace in others. He exhorted them and urged them forward in their work.

3. Goes after Saul (11:25, 26). The work at Antioch so prospered that help was needed; therefore, Barnabas went after Saul. Barnabas thus introduced Saul to his great work as the apostle to the Gentiles. The gifts of both of these men were needed on that field. Different temperaments when brought into harmony by God's grace are needed in the church.

4. Disciples called Christians first in Antioch (v. 26). After a year of teaching by Paul and Barnabas the name "Christian" was given to the disciples. Observe that the name was associated with the teaching. Paul taught the vital oneness of the believer with Christ! therefore, it was natural that the disciples should be called Christians. The notion that the name "Christian" was given in derison has no factual basis.

IV. Barnabas the Dispenser of Alms (vv. 27-30). Because of the oneness of Christians with Christ and with one another, the distress of the brethren at Jerusalem must be relieved by the gifts of believers at Antioch. The Spirit of God, through Agabus, made known the coming dearth which was to prevail throughout all the world. The disciples were therefore moved, according to their ability, to send relief unto the brethren in Judea. These gifts had a powerful effect in removing the suspicions of the brethren at Jerusalem.

A Strong Will

If we have need of a strong will in order to do good, it is more necessary still for us in order not to do evil; from which it often results that the most modest life is that where the force of will is most exercised.—Count Mole.

Lies

One lie in word or act opens the door to a thousand. Truth is the magician's circle, to cross which is to break the spell and turn all to darkness.—O. S. Marden.

True Meaning of Saying Is Ignored in Present Usage

"A friend in need is a friend indeed." This famous saying was originally a cynicism, first uttered by Samuel Foote, an English wit of the Eighteenth century (and an acquaintance of the great Doctor Johnson), and intended by him to mean that a needy friend is a friend with a vengeance.

While all this is true, it—as the current phrase goes—doesn't mean anything. Use and custom have seen to that, and the saying, turned from a cynicism to a sentimentalism, now means what 999 people who hear it think it means, namely, that a friend who comes to your assistance when you are in need is a real friend.

So, too, with "the exception proves the rule." Why try to make me believe that the word "prove" here does not mean "establishes" but "tests"—in the same sense in which one proves a gun, puts a man to the proof, and the like—and that the sentence, therefore, means that a rule is tested, its validity essayed, by anything in contravention to it?

I already believe this, but no one else does, or at least not the millions who constitute the irresistible army of use and custom. For them it means that, no matter how hairbrained or woolly-minded the rule and how forceful and logical the exception, nevertheless, this particular conjunction of opposites sets up the rule on an irrefragable foundation. A very comforting arrangement.—John Bunker in Harper's Magazine.

Accepting a Job

A woman whose dignified and reserved husband was among the unemployed but who, like Mr. Micawber, was expecting something to turn up momentarily, was advised by him each time he left home for the day, that if an offer for any sort of a position at all should come for him to wire an acceptance with speed. And when at long last the wire did come from Washington the wife was so thoroughly imbued with thrift that she couldn't bear to send only a one-word answer like "Yes" or "Accept" to the "Will you accept?" etc., message, so she sent the following:

"Yes thank you ever so much love and kisses."—Miss Ann Thorpe, in the Kansas City Star.

Pittsview Beauty Closes Switch On New Rural Electric Line

Miss Virginia Burt, shown in the upper picture, is the proudest young lady in Russell County. On August 21 she closed the switch which started electricity flowing through the 9.6 mile line built by the Alabama Power Company to serve the citizens of Pittsview and farms along the line. The completion of the line was celebrated with a barbecue, at which Mrs. B. R. Pitts, pioneer resident of Pittsview, expressed appreciation to T. W. Martin, President of the Alabama Power Company, for bringing electric service to Pittsview. In the lower picture, C. T. Hunter, Division Manager of the Company, is shown just as pulling up the sign on the 72,000th pole of the Alabama Power Company's rural electric system.

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

COURT HOUSE DOME

The Criminal week of Shelby County Circuit Court swung into action at ten o'clock on Monday morning, Judge W. W. Wallace presiding. Four murder cases and other felonies will occupy the entire week. Five negroes were drawn during the week., for Jury duty, but all were excused at their own request from serving.

J. M. Lyon, president of the Shelby County Board of Revenue, is in receipt of the following telegram:

Washington, D. C.

Chairman Board of Revenue:

Just advised Works Progress Administration allotment approved for surfacing twenty-two miles Star Route through Shelby County, Federal Funds $128,000, sponsors contribution $48,000.00.

Ruth Tucker,
Secretary Con. Oliver.

President Lyon has been engaged during the past week in securing the right of way from many property owners in Shelby County, in an endeavor to make the County eligible for the Highway Program now under construction in Alabama. The first road in the County to be improved will be re-surfaced from Calera to Wilsonville.

Attorney General A. Carmichael has ruled that persons operating school buses over regular routes must purchase a bus tag if they carry passengers on other trips for which fares and charges are made.

The Board of Education for Shelby County met on Friday afternoon in Supt. Appleton's office. Plans are being perfected for the opening of Shelby County schools on September 9th.

Shelby County has received her first shipment of new auto tags which will be issued beginning October 1.

Red lettering against a white background makes the tag unusually arresting and easy to read.

All records for collections of gasoline tax for a single month have been broken by those made up on sales of gasoline in July, it was announced by Henry S. Long, of the State Tax Commission.

Gasoline tax collected up to August 15, totaled $928,026.76 exceeding by more than $100,000 revenue collected from the same source for July of last year.

AAA Will Offer Aid To Sirup Producers

AUBURN, Ala.—The Agricultural Adjustment Administration is preparing a production adjustment program for commercial producers of sugarcane for sirup in Alabama and other Southern States. The program will be offered to growers as soon as the adjustment contract is approved, says an official announcewent from Washington.

The program is expected to add approximately $2,500,000 to the income of producers of this commodity for the crop years 1934 and 1935. Under the proposed program approximately $1,500,000 of this will be paid as benefit payments on the 1934 crop and the remainder will be paid on the 1935 crop.

American Legion Meeting Deferred

The regular monthly meeting of Shirley-Holloay Post American Legion will be deferred on account of Labor Day, until the second Monday in September.

Vice-Commander Boyd Taylor will be a guest speaker, and also we will have both the State Commander and National Adjutant of the Wild Cat Veterans Association with us. We urge all veterans to meet with us on that night, and especially all former members of the 81st or "Wild Cat" division. We expect an interesting meeting.

Frank Head, Commander.

GRAND JURY OF SHELBY COUNTY TENDERS REPORT

We, the Grand Jury of said County duly empanelled by Your Honor for the July Term, 1935 of the Circuit Court of Shelby County, Alabama, beg leave to herewith submit our report.

We have investigated 77 cases and herewith return unto open court 59 indictments, of which 49 are for felonies and 10 misdemeanors.

Our investigation reveals the fact that quite a number of crimes have been committed in our county during the past 8 months; it further reveals the fact that our officials have been on the alert and in most instances done excellent work. We regret that this investigation shows that there has been nine homicides committed in our county since the last Grand Jury convened, however, all of these were among the colored race except one.

We have endeavored to go into all the matters which have come to our attention dilligently. We ask the citizenship of our couny to stand behind law enforcement and to assist and back the officials in their honest efforts to honestly and efficiently enforce the law. We feel that with the proper backing of law enforcement by the people of our county that crime will eventually diminish and ours will become a better county in which to live.

We have by committees investigated the court house and grounds, the Alms House, the jail and the books and records of the various county officials.

We find the Alms House to be in fairly good condition. It appears, however, to us that there are some repairs which should be made, such as screening windows, doors and repairing door steps. We had some complaint fro mthe inmates of the alms house to the effect that during the cold weather they were not furnished enough cover with which to keep warm. Practically all the inmates com plained of their food in that the quality is very poor and the quantity shy. We make these suggestions so that the proper authorities may further investigate and help to see that these inmates are properly cared for.

We find the jail to be clean and apparently well kept, and in good condition. The inmates there of speak favorably concerning the treatment they receive from the sheriff and his deputies, and state that they are well fed and cared for.

The court house and grounds are apparently well kept. We have observed at least one place in the floor that should be repaired and probobly other repairs are needed about the court house. We simply offer this suggestion feeling that the proper authorities will, to the best of their ability look after it and take care of the court house and grounds.

The books and records of the various county officials are neatly kept and all under good and sufficient bond, as required by law.

We desire to extend our thanks to the sheriff and his deputies for the faithful performances of their duties as officials and for so ably assisting us during our labors. We also extend our thanks to our bailiff for his faithful performance of his duties and for answering our every demand so promptly.

And now in conclusion, we would not forget to express our thanks to our Judge for the able charge which he gave us in the beginning of our work and which we have endeavored to observe in the performance of the same.

And now having finished our duties, we desire to be discharged subject to the call of Your Honor.

Respectfully submitted,
Frank Edwards,
Foreman.

Big Fall and Winter Terracing Programs

AUBURN, Ala.—Indications are that more Alabama land will be terraced this fall and winter than ever before during a similar period, says J. B. Wilson, extension agricultural engineer, in reporting that early in September 79 complete terracing out fits will start terracing land in 45 Alabama counties.

Some 300 local people will be employed in operating the terracing outfits. In addition 13 assistant county agents will devote their entire time to the work in north Alabama counties.

Ginners Planning Special Gin Days

AUBURN, Ala.—Ginners throughout Alabama have made arrangements to hold special gin days this season to save pure planting seed of better varieties for use in 1936.

"If present plans materialize Alabama should save, this season, several hundred thousand bushels of pure planting seed of better staple varieties," says J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist, in complimenting the ginners for cooperating with county agents and farmers in holding the special gin days.

Several thousand bushels of Stoneville seed were planted last spring in Perry, Tuscaloosa, Montgomery, Chambers, Tallapoosa, Marshall, Cullman, Jefferson, Marion, Lawrence, Limestone, and Madison for multiplying this variety, Lowery reports.

D.P.L.11 is being multiplied by growers in Madison, Franklin, Coosa, Tallapoosa, Talladega, Shelby, and several others.

More than 10,000 bushels of Cook 144, which runs one inch and better in staple length, direct from the breeder, were used in the Blackbelt and surrounding territory. This variety is proving very popular on the heavier soils of the southern half of the state.

The Cook wilt-resistant varieties were planted in large quantities in south Alabama for the purpose of saving pure seed. Cook 12, grown on the Wiregrass sub-statoin, is being multiplied by farmers of the southeast Alabama section.

Army Worms Appear In North Alabama

AUBURN, Ala.—The cotton leaf hopper or army worm is numerous in many North Alabama counties, report county agricultural agents, who are advising farmers to control the insect with calcium arsenate.

"Dusting should be done whenever worms appear in large numbers on cotton with immature bolls," says Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the entomology department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. "The calcium arsenate may be applied undiluted with a dust gun at the rate of 5 to 6 pounds per acre, or it may be shaken from cloth bags on the ends of poles. If bags are used each pound of calcium arsenate should be mixed with 9 pounds of hydrated lime to prevent wasting large quanties of the arsenical. An application made with a dust gun is cheaper and more effective than one made with poles and bags."

EXAMINATIONS TO BE HELD FOR U. S. GOVERNMENT JOBS

The United States Civil Service Commission has announced open competitive examinatons as follows:

Bacteriologists, various grades, $3,200 to $4,600 a year; cytologists, various grades, $3 200 to $4,600 a year; epidemiologists, various grades, $3,200 to $4,600 a year; mycologists (medical), various grades, $2 600 to $4,600 a year; senior pathologist (medical), $4,600 a year, U. S. Public Health Service, Treasury Department.

Refuge superintendent, $3,800 a year, associate refuge manager, $3,200 a year, assistant refuge mnager, $2,300 a year, bureau of Biological Survey, Department of Agriculture.

Sheet-metal worker, $1,680 a year, departmental service, Washington, D. C.

Full information may be obtained from the Secretary of the United States Civil Service Board of Examiners at the post office or customhouse in any city which has a post office of the first or the second class, or from the United Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

CCC PROJECTS ARE 100 PERCENT GRANTS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 26,—Forest and park developwent projects of the Emergency Conservation Work, manned by the Civilian Conservation Corps, under the direction of the Alabama Commission of Forestry do not involve loans which later must be paid back to the Federal Government, states Col. Page Bunker, State Forester. One of the most deterrent factors of the various work programs under recent reconstruction policies has been the requirement that the beneficiary, public or private, pay back to the Federal Government some 55 to 70 percent of the total cost. This demand has given pause to many a deserving project.

In Alabama the number of State Park projects at present exceeds that of any other class under the supervision of the Commission of Forestry. In the case of parks, an ironclad requirement is that the State must own the land. A small financial outlay is necessary in the acquisition of areas appropriate for State Parks and in rounding out units already established.

Heart Drifts

This, Too, Will Pass.

This, too, will pass. O heart, say it over and over,
Out of your deepest sorrow, out of your grief.
No hurt can last forever—perhaps tomorrow
Will bring relief.

This, too, will pass. It will spend itself—its fury
Will die as the wind dies down with the setting sun;
Assuaged and calm, you will rest again, forgetting
A thing that is done.

Repeat it again and again, O heart, for your comfort;
This, too, will pass, as surely as passed before
The old forgotten pain, and the other sorrows
That once you bore.

As certain as stars at night, or dawn after darkness,
Inherent as the lift of the blowing grass,
Whatever your despair or your frustration—
This, too, will pass.

(Crowell)

ONLY

We had only the wind, and the croon
Of two dark trees a quiver;
There was a raindrop from the moon,
As we passed a sleeping river.

We glided over the dying world
And I heard your quiet singing:
There was a lonely star a-twirl,
Our tears—and silence ringing.

(Gordi)

THE WORD

A thin little bitterness,
Edged like a sword,
Slid in between them
After a word.

It was none of their making,
They hardly knew
How the knife's acid
Ever etched thru.

Now they walk carefully,
Each to his own,
And their lean sharp silence
Walls them in stone.

(Ambush)

MELODY

A little song you used to hum
Is running thru the rain,
Its notes are found in spattered drops
That splash the window pane.

A vender of old sentiments
Who owns a music box
Has played the theme you sang to me
For half a dozen blocks.

The kettle bolis in harmony,
The fire has caught the tune.
(Must everything begin to chant
The words you brought last June?)

And though I vowed I would forget
Your promises, the rain
Is backgrouned for a heart that hums
A broken, old refrain.

(Welshimer)

FAULTS.

They came to tell your faults to me
They named them one by one,
I laughed aloud when they were done
I knew them all so well before,
Oh, they were blind, too blind to see
Your faults had made me love you more.

WISDOM.

It was a Spring that never came
But we have lived enough to know
What we have never had remains,
It's the things we have that go.

Ghosts of Pigs Haunting AAA

Ghosts of 6,188,717 little pigs that went to market before their time so that farmers might be paid more for the little pigs that stayed at home, again are returning to haunt the AAA.

A year ago these same little pigs, that lost their lives late in 1933, were credited by the superstitious with bringing about the unprecedented drought of 1934. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, felt impelled at that time to criticize publicly those who sought to connect the devastation wrought by nature with the premature slaughter of the baby swine.

He remarked that the sentiment aroused had created the impression that people believed pigs were raised to be pets.

Now the ghosts of the piglets that gave their lives in 1933 are here.

This time they get the blame for today's 50 cent pork chop. High meat prices—particularly of pork, the poor man's meat—are causing housewife revolts. The result is one of the New Deal's biggest present worries.

Hogs this past week sold at nearly $12.50 a hundredweight. That was their 1929 price when people had larger household budgets. At present it is accepted by officials as something approaching a famine price. Meat cuts that come from $12.50 hogs are almost prohibitive in cost, in view of present worker income.

So, as an explanation of the scarcity of pork, the ghosts of the baby pigs are paraded again. They serve as a symbol of the cleavage appearing between the city worker who wants cheap food and the farmer who needs what have become known as "parity" prices to maintain his food factory as a going concern.

Committee Recommends Peanut Program To AAA

AUBURN, Ala.—An advisory committee of peanut growers has recommended to the Agricultural Adjustmemnt Administration a plan designed to stabilize prices of the 1935 peanut crop through an arrangement for diverting to oil any peanuts which would not be absorbed in the regular channels of trade at prices representing a reasonable return to growers.

County agicultural agents in each of the peanut-growing counties of the state are being funrished detailed information about the plan.

Rhythm Ristocrats Play At Airport

The Rhythm Ristocrats scored probably their biggest hit of the season on last Saturday night, when this aggregation of musicians were augmented by K. L. Lott of Birmingham, clarinet soloist, and Tom Miner, substituted his guitar for the trumpet. Judge L. B. Riddle took the director's stand, and many musical specialities were rendered. Mamie Miller Horn, versatile pianist, has consented to become the future director of this excellent group of talented boys who will, if we do not miss our guess, be heard from in a big way before it is all over. The boys are planning to continue the popular bi-monthly dances thru the winter months.

E. K. Wood, in announcing the opening of his new Grocery Store and up to date market in Calera, Alabama, on Saturday, August 31, cordially invites his many friends in Shelby County to attend.

LOCAL TALENT IN MUSICAL COMEDY AT WILSONVILLE

The Tennis Club of Wilsonville is presenting an unusual program in answer to "What can we do tonight," "Where can we go?" This is your answer for next Friday evening, August 30, for the boys and girls of your community are giving the delightful, rollicking musical comedy "SEE YOU LATER" at the School Auditorium at 8:00 P. M.

The plot of the play centers around the mistaken identity of the daughter and niece of a New York Millionaire. Added to this is the excitement and suspense caused by the missing Lucky Charm of this New Yorker. Before the girls' true identities are disclosed, and before the Lucky Charm is restored to its owner the characters will afford the audience an evening of good, clean entertainment with many laughs and much fun

Added attractions consist of costumed tuneful choruses. All are cordially invited to see this Musical Comedy coached by a professional Director from the Triangle Producing Co., Greensboro, N. C.

Fat Livestock Show And Sale Planned

AUBURN, Ala.—A fat stock show and sale will be held in Montgomery in April of next year reports Dr. R. S. Sugg, extension livestock specialist, in advising that "farmers with surplus feed may find it profitable to feed a few steers and market them during the show."

Farmers Find Winter Legumes Increasing General Crop Yields

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama farmers are growing more corn and cotton per acre following winter legumes—hary vetch, Austrian winter peas, and crimson clover—than t hey do on lands not planted to legumes.

John Blake, county agent of Dallas County, tells of actual experiences of farmers as follows:

"J. O. Risher, Tyler, produced 103 bales on 93 acres; Henry Perdue. Minter, gathered 20 bales from 18 acres; and Satterfield Chisolm produced 51 bales on 44 acres.

"These men have used vetch for a number of years, supplementing it with phosphate and potash, but no commercial nitrogen."

"J. M. King, Selma, Rt. 1, averaged 75 bushels of corn per acre on his entire crop of more than 50 acres. Before using cover crops (vetch and Austrian peas) this land averaged less than seven bushels per acre."

"Arch Hardy gathered 5,000 bushels of corn from 150 acres. This land three years ago produced less than 1,500 bushels."

From Shelby County, A. A. Lauderdale, county agent, says:

"J. Frank Baker of Montevallo, R. 1, states that he averaged 15 tons of corn silage per acre on land following Austrian winter peas and hairy vetch. He filled 6 silos of 150 tons capacity each."

"His harvested corn averaged 60 bushels per acre while the county average was 15 bushels."

NEW SCHOOL BOOKS AGAIN

Unfortunately school book changes always entail hardship on the poorer families, and just now how to get books for the children is the subject of some serious consideration.

It is estimated that about 80 per cent of the old books must be replaced by new. Very small or practically no allowances are made in exchanging an old book of the same kind for a new one.

One favorable factor in the situation is that the state has promised to supply all the books for the first grade children this year, which service will be expanded to include the second grade next year. This, plan is as yet only a promise. It may not be carried out. In the larger cities of the state which include Selma, the adoption of text-books for the Junior and Senior classes is left to local school authorities. It is learned that practically all of these books now in use for these grades will be retained here.

Among rural patrons, however, there will be some real difficulty experienced in buying the new books. The school book question bids fair to become really acute among large numbers of families who cannot spare the funds that will be needed.

President's Program Driven Through Congress Before Adjournment—Mussolini Refuses to Abandon His Projected Conquest of Ethiopia.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

LEGISLATIVE action in both house and senate was fast and furious during the closing days of the session. White House pressure was freely used; filibusters were started and stopped; senators and representatives, hot and bothered, were inclined to be quarrelsome. But congress had its orders and it wanted to go home, so the administration program in general was pushed through.

Senator Guffey

One of the most controversial measures on that program, the Guffey coal bill, had been driven through the house by orders from above and threats of a strike, and when it was taken up by the senate every effort to kill it, by eliminating the tax feature, was defeated. During the debate Senator Walter F. George of Georgia, Democrat, created a sensation by denouncing the bill in these words:

"Outside of political circles, it is questionable whether there are five reputable lawyers in the United States who would declare this measure constitutional. However, that is not the worst feature of the bill. The worst feature is the defect and infirmity in the legislative program that we are developing. This nation cannot remain free and happy, if we are to legislate for groups, and beyond all of that, if groups are to legislate for themselves the end of things is not very far distant.

"That is the situation we have confronting us. And to this kind of program the Democratic party is willing to commit itself!"

Senator George was assailing the proposal to set up district boards in the coal industry, which would make their own laws as to trade practices and regulate wages and hours, allocate tonnages and fix prices, with regard only for their own interests.

"This is the type of absolutism from which we revolted to establish this Republic," he declared.

The house gave up the fight against the "death sentence" in the utilities bill and instructed conferees to accept a "compromise" that was pretty much one-sided. This means that all holding companies beyond the second degree are to be sentenced to death by the SEC promptly after January 1, 1938. Even a holding company in the second degree would not escape unless its operations were confined to a single integrated system within a state or within contiguous states.

Both senate and house adopted a resolution making mandatory the embargo on munitions shipments to both belligerents in case of war. This was what the administration did not want, claiming it would tie the hands of the executive so that he could exert no influence toward averting war.

Senate and house accepted the conferees' report on the bill increasing the powers of TVA and legalizing that body's past actions and it was sent to the White House. The senate passed without a record vote the railway bankruptcy amendments recommended by Co-ordinator Joseph B. Eastman, which are designed to prohibit minorities from blocking reorganization plans.

MUSSOLINI is determined to conquer Ethiopia, and all Europe is trembling. Il duce evidently feels that his personal prestige is at stake, and to him that means the continuation of the Fascist regime. Anthony Eden and Pierre Laval offered Italy what would amount to a mandate over Haile Selassie's realm, but that was not enough, so the tripower conference in Paris was declared adjourned. The friendship between France and Italy must be ruptured. Great Britain will insist on action by the League of Nations council when it meets September 4. There is no reason to believe that the council will do more than it did in the case of Japan's seizure of Manchuria, but it seemingly will be forced to denounce Italy's action, and that would be enough to induce Mussolini to withdraw his country from the league. If and when Italy defies the league, that pretentious body, previously defied successfully by Japan and Germany, will amount to little.

Premier Mussolini

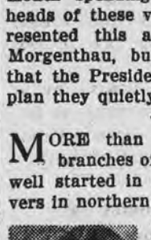
After Baron Pompei Aloisi had submitted the Anglo-French proposition to Mussolini and had received the duce's reply, he told Eden and Laval that his master would be satisfied with nothing less than "annexation of Ethiopia in whole or in part." Laval was furious and directly accused Mussolini of breaking a personal promise made to him when he visited Rome. Eden abruptly brought the conference to a close.

Hurrying back to London, Captain Eden took part in conferences held by Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin and the members of his cabinet, together with various former ministers, opposition leaders and public men not in office. The situation was admittedly tense and the advice of such men as Lloyd George, Lord Cecil and Winston Churchill was sought by the government. Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary, also called in representatives of all the self-governing dominions. It was understood the British government would be prepared fully to honor its obligations under the League of Nations covenant, these including the denouncing of a nation that attacks another member of the league. Of course the air in London was full of rumors of war, but officials gave assurance that Great Britain would move with the greatest caution.

Paris heard unconfirmed reports that Mussolini was trying to negotiate a secret military alliance with Hitler. If such a pact is signed it will greatly increase the chances of another general European war.

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, Democratic representative from Indiana, aroused the house to wild cheering by a downright attack on Tom Corcoran, the White House lobbyist who has been charged with trying to intimidate congressmen. Pettengill challenged the house lobby committee to summon Corcoran again and question him about his reported dealing in utility issues on the New York Stock exchange market at the same time he labored for legislation against utilities at Washington.

T. G. Corcoran



The Indiana representative thus brought out into the open the rumors, whispered about the Capitol, that administration lobbyists were profiting secretly by stock market deals in securities affected by legislation for which they were exerting tremendous efforts.

Corcoran once admitted to a committee that he had been a stock market plunger and had made and lost a small fortune.

"In view of this admission," Pettengill told the house, "the rules committee, investigating lobbying, should summon Corcoran and question him as to whether he is now in the market with reference to utility stock."

GRADUALLY the President is bringing all the alphabetical units of the New Deal directly under his control by bringing them under the budget and accounting act. Thirteen of them already have been treated thus by executive order, and more will follow soon. They are required to submit to the budget bureau estimates covering expenditures and to go on a month to month spending basis. At first the heads of these various administrations resented this and blamed Secretary Morgenthau, but when they learned that the President was strong for the plan they quietly gave in.

MORE than 30,000 troops of all branches of the armed service got well started in the great war maneuvers in northern New York which were organized and directed by Maj. Gen. Dennis E. Nolan. The regular army men of the first area and the National Guardsmen of New England, New York and New Jersey participated, and in muddy fields, tangled pine forests, backwoods roads, they had a series of "engagements," troops opposing troops under conditions closely simulating real warfare. An interesting feature was the use of a big fleet of taxicabs from New York city. Pine camp, just south of the Thousand Islands region, was the center of operations. Ranking high officers of the army and military attaches of foreign nations observed the maneuvers.

Maj. Gen. Nolan

During the opening days the Twenty-seventh New York division commanded by Maj. Gen. William N. Haskell was pitted in the eastern portion of the 100 square mile maneuver area against the Forty-third New England division, commanded by Maj. Gen. Morris B. Payne. In the western portion of the changing terrain the Forty-fourth New Jersey and New York division, commanded by Maj. Gen. John J. Toffey, opposed the Twenty-sixth Massachusetts division.

JAPAN has been offended by our navy on various occasions, especially by the staging of fleet maneuvers at Hawaii and the Alaskan coast. Now the sensitive islanders should be pleased, for Assistant Secretary of the Navy Henry L. Roosevelt has announced that the fleet maneuvers of 1936 will be held at the Panama canal and on the western coast of Central America. Mr. Roosevelt and the navy high command asserted, not very convincingly, that the shift was not made in response to unofficial Japanese criticism.

IN ONE of those sudden governmental upsets frequent in Latin America, President Jose M. Velasco Ibarra of Ecuador was thrown out of office and Antonio Pons, former premier, was put in his place. It all came about because Ibarra tried to make himself a dictator and imprisoned the leaders of the opposition. The senate objected and Ibarra closed congress. Then the army got into action. Ibarra was arrested by Col. Nicanor Solis, inspector general; the political prisoners were released, and Pons was installed as president.

WILL ROGERS and Wiley Post, crushed to death in Alaska when their plane fell not far from Point Barrow, were brought back to the states for burial by Joe Crosson, their intimate friend, in an airplane. And all their countrymen stood figuratively with bared and bowed heads as the broken bodies were laid to rest. None was too great and none too lowly to pay tribute in words and action to those two fine Americans, one a beloved comedian, humorist and philosopher; the other a leader among the world's aviators. They died as they had lived, adventuring gallantly, and the world is the poorer for their passing.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S cotton textile committee submitted to him certain recommendations to better the industry, and he passed them on to congress for future action. Secretary of Commerce Daniel Roper heads the committee and the other members are Secretary of Labor Perkins, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Secretary of State Hull. The report proposed that a friendly agreement be sought with Japan to limit the export of textiles to this country. The committee found that, although the Japanese imports have been small, the American market has been disturbed, with a resultant depression in the industry here.

Secretary Roper

A continuance of the labor standards provided under the NRA code was suggested. To this end it was recommended that the government supplement such voluntary efforts as are being made by administrative and legislative measures which may be feasible to aid workers.

The committee recommended against discontinuance of the cotton processing tax "during the existing economic emergency as reflected by existing price disparities." It held that the tax increases the purchasing power of farmers and thus benefits workers in the cotton textile industry.

The government's cotton loan policy was found to be primarily important to the textile industry through its possible stabilizing effect.

Various technical recommendations were made by the report, but the proposition of representatives of the industry that the government virtually subsidize cotton textile exports by an allowance of 7 cents per pound was disapproved.

MINORITY members of the senate and house committees that are investigating the doing of lobbyists started out the week with the determination to find out why Marvin H. MacIntyre, secretary to the President; Lawrence W. Robert, Jr., assistant secretary of the treasury, and Amon G. Carter of Fort Worth, publisher and friend of the Roosevelt family, were all found in the apartment at the Shoreham hotel of Bernard B. Robinson of Chicago, chief lobbyist of the Associated Gas and Electric company. Mr. Robinson himself also was there, and it was said when the door was opened at the knock of the sergeant at arms of the senate a "scene of revelry" was disclosed. For a day or two the news of this affair was not sent out from Washington by the news associations, reportedly because of the efforts of Mr. Carter to have it suppressed entirely. This, too, some of the investigators want explained.

B. B. Robinson

Republican members of the house committee also said they would insist on the interrogation of Undersecretary of the Interior Charles West and Emil Hurja, executive director of the Democratic national committee. West is reputedly the President's lobbyist and Hurja acts in a similar capacity for Postmaster General Farley, and both of them were involved with Tom Corcoran in the utilities "death sentence" lobbying that started the whole inquiry.

WHEN Charles S. Risk, the Rhode Island lawyer who defeated the New Deal candidate for congress recently, entered the house on the arm of Representative Bertrand H. Snell, Republican leader, and was escorted to the speaker's rostrum to take the oath, he was vociferously greeted by the Republicans as a hero whose victory they thought presaged great things for the party next year. Mr. Risk took his seat on his thirty-eighth birthday.

FLOYD B. OLSON, governor of Minnesota, on his way to Washington, stopped in Chicago long enough to tell reporters that he intended to be a candidate for the United States senate in 1936. This was interpreted as meaning that he would contest the re-election of Thomas D. Schall, the blind Republican. Governor Olson is a Farmer-Laborite.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Herbert Hoover is not going to say anything about his possible candidacy for the Republican nomination next year for some time to come. That may be accepted as a fact, regardless of various stories to the contrary. This statement is based on the impressions obtained from the former President by one of his close friends, who had a long talk with him.

While no single word can be put in quotation marks of what Mr. Hoover said to this friend, the impressions the friend obtained are highly significant. In a word they are:

1. That Mr. Hoover craves a vindication.

2. That he therefore wants the nomination very badly.

3. That he would prefer to have the nomination come to him without effort, either on his own part or that of his friends.

4. But that if it becomes apparent that the nomination will not come that way, very little coaxing would be required to induce him to get out actively for it.

As this is written—anything can happen to change it—the famous public utility holding company legislation seems destined to die, so far as this session is concerned. Strangely enough, a mere lifting of a hand by the President would result in Mr. Roosevelt's getting more than half a loaf—really nine-tenths of a loaf. Even without the death sentence the bill is terrifically drastic. There would be no trouble putting the measure through both houses of congress if the conferees of the two houses should report the bill back without the death sentence.

Very Much Exaggerated

Actually the importance of the death sentence has been tremendously exaggerated by the publicity over this fight between the President and the utilities. The utilities concentrated on this one objective, and as far as congress is concerned, they won this fight. But its importance can best be illustrated by the simple statement of the alternative, or house, provision. The senate draft forces the end of the certain holding companies on a certain day. The house provision leaves discretion as to whether the sentence shall be executed in each particular case by a commission—members of which are appointed by the President.

So that Mr. Roosevelt could obtain his objective without the slightest difficulty—IF—he would acknowledge defeat in this spectacular battle. The utilities would emerge with some glory, but without the fruits of victory. The President would have the fruits, but little glory.

Yet betting odds at the moment are that he will wait until next year, when he expects to win both fruits and glory.

Downward Revision

Processing taxes and farm benefit payments are both due for a sharp downward revision next year. High AAA officials, in private discussions, explain this on economic grounds. Actually President Roosevelt will force their hands on political grounds.

Experts who have studied the Rhode Island situation—so disastrous to the New Deal in its implications—bring back a remarkable story. They say that the price of ham and bacon had more to do with the result than even the cotton processing taxes, although the latter are blamed, together with Japanese imports, for the closing of so many textile mills.

These reports flabbergasted the administration and delighted the Republicans. Both the New Dealers and G. O. P. leaders had figured that while the conditions affecting the first Rhode Island district extended to Massachusetts and New Hampshire, they were not general. On the other hand, resentment against high prices for pork products, it is figured, would be just as apt to be strong in California or Michigan as in Rhode Island.

In this connection there was much interest in the apparent healing of the breach between Governor Davey of Ohio and the New Deal. All the bitterness against Davey following his caustic comments on Relief Administrator Hopkins was carefully concealed. Davey had in his power to force a state-wide election in Ohio to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Representative-at-large Truax, and most political observers believe that if an election were held today in Ohio the state would go strongly Republican.

Must Cut Food Prices

In the first place, Ohio was never very strong for Roosevelt. Its delegation did not even vote for him on the final ballot at Chicago. On election day, when most states were piling up record-breaking majorities, Ohio gave Roosevelt only about 73,000. Moreover, resentment in Ohio, which has considerable state pride, is rather strong over the failure of the President to put an Ohioan in an important place.

The administration is now faced with almost the necessity of reducing food prices before election. On the particular items on which there is now the most resentment, pork products, no difficulty is anticipated. Pigs are usually marketed at the age of nine months, so it should be possible to have a plentiful supply of pork for the nation's housewives well before November, 1936.

Reduction of benefit payments on hogs would naturally have the effect of enormously increasing hog production. Similarly, reduction of processing taxes on pork would help to reduce prices on ham, bacon and other pork. But danger threatens from several other angles as far as the grocery bill is concerned. Reports from the Northwest and Canada about the ravages of black rust on the wheat crop are alarming. Some of the AAA experts are fearful that wheat may touch $1.50. This would be fine for farmers not affected by rust but would bring the same kind of clamor from housewives. So a sharp soft pedaling of the wheat reduction program, accompanied by a reduction in the processing tax on wheat, is in order.

In fact it may be taken for granted that regardless of all past theories, the administration will do its best to have food prices down by next summer.

To Make Concessions

President Roosevelt will make concessions in the present labor war on relief projects. The concession will not be to pay union scale wages on work relief projects. The President's jaw is firmly set on this. It will be to remove present restrictions which limit jobs to people now on relief.

Very little has been heard from union labor sources on this last phase, but it has been vitally important to the unions. Not only to the rank and file, who need work in many instances, though they may have had sufficient pride and sufficient savings to stay off relief, but to the leaders. For men out of work are not apt to be regular in paying their dues, and thus the union treasuries get hurt. Especially as union leaders have been forcing in the check-off system wherever possible for years now, with the result that union workers, in more than a majority of cases, are not used to paying dues personally. They are educated up to having their dues deducted from their pay envelopes. Hence, no pay envelopes, no dues.

Work relief jobs, under the original formula to which the union leaders object so strongly, were to be given only to persons on relief rolls last May. The job could not be obtained unless the United States employment service so certified.

In the near future orders will go out from Washington that the employment service must certify union men who need jobs, whether they were on relief last May or not.

This will meet a very important point in the present controversy between the government and union labor, but it will by no means leave a good taste in the mouths of the union men.

May Cause Feeling

The situation makes for artificial discriminations—likely to raise bitter feeling. For example, two groups of bricklayers may be working across the street from each other. One group will be on a public works project—one approved by Ickes under the old "spend our way out of the depression" theory. Those men will be drawing the prevailing wage. The other group will be working under a work relief project—approved by Harry Hopkins. They will be drawing relief wages. Under the Hopkins schedules the highest rate permitted at present is $94 a month!

Obviously every man drawing the lower wage will be sore for they will be union men in each case; the administration may be fairly brave at times but it is not going to employ many non-union bricklayers in big city projects. The man drawing the lower wage will have a grouch against the government to start with.

But John Taxpayer also enters the situation. He is being taxed for relief, and knows it. The average middle class taxpayer has more or less of a fixed opinion that union wages in the building trades are too high. He resents the day wage rates for carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers and plumbers, though he thinks it fine that Henry Ford has raised minimum wages in his plant to $6 a day.

The answer to this prejudice is that the average automobile buyer thinks he gets his money's worth when he buys a car, but thinks he gets stuck every time he has a tidy repair bill on the home. He also thinks the price of building homes is too high and blames it on high wages for the building trades.

It is not important for the moment whether there is any justice in this view or not. But there is no doubt whatever that it is very widely held. Hence it is politically important.

As to Huey Long

All this talk about Huey Long is food and drink to conservative critics of the administration. There is nothing they would like better than for Huey to be an independent candidate for President, and to run in as many states as possible. They figure he would not get any electoral votes, save possibly those of Louisiana, where his machine controls the election machinery. But they also figure that in certain radical states, particularly in the West, every vote he would draw would come from Roosevelt's strength, thus aiding in the election of the Republican nominee.

No one takes seriously Huey's alleged statement that he would support the Republican ticket if Borah were the candidate. Politicians think this would never happen. Long before election day the Kingfish would discover certain issues on which he could not possibly go along with Borah.

BARBARA AND HER COUNT DEFY GHOSTS OF HAUNTED CASTLE

Tragic Love Story of a Queen Revealed as Couple Take Up Residence.

Copenhagen.—Count and Countess Haugwitz-Reventlow, the latter the former Barbara Hutton, Woolworth heiress, are defying a century-old superstition, "The Curse of Struensee," by taking the Castle of Hardenberg, on the beautiful island of Lalla, on Denmark's south coast, as their European home.

More than that, despite advice of friends, they are carrying out in at least one particular a strange parallel that, many believe, must drive them soon from the haunted castle back to the modern surroundings of New York's Park avenue.

Story of Tragic Love.

The story of the Castle of Hardenberg is that of a tragic love that ended in the beheading of Count John Frederick von Struensee, and in the imprisonment in Hanover, Germany, of the woman he adored, Queen Carolyn Matilda of Denmark, sister of King George II of England.

Count Haugwitz-Reventlow is not related to Count Struensee. The castle, where Struensee planned his idyllic improvements of Danish laws, which left him a hero to many, reverted on his death to the crown, and in 1774, two years later, came into the possession of the ancestors of Barbara's husband.

For many years the old castle has been spoken of as "haunted," and although it has been occupied continuously, the people of the neighborhood have waited patiently for the "curse of Struensee" to work. The "curse" was his dying wish that, since the queen he loved had been punished although he had taken all the blame, that those responsible for it come to an evil end.

An ancestor of Barbara's husband, Count Dimitev Reventlau had been King Christian's tutor during his childhood, and there again the castle seemed to exert its spell. For Count Dimitev was accused of teaching the young king things a king shouldn't know, and so making him easy for Count Struensee to persuade.

Queen Falls in Love.

When Struensee came into power he went to Carolyn Matilda and told her that with her help he could "raise the people of the country from their serfdom."

The queen listened to him, and came, according to the legend, to love him more than she loved King Christian. They met frequently, sometimes in the Castle of Hardenberg.

The nobles hated Struensee, and sought constantly for some weapon against him. His love for the queen gave them that weapon.

Eventually the queen and her lover, Struensee, were brought to trial. Struensee denied everything.

And then, when it seemed as if he might win his case, he learned that the queen had been imprisoned. He immediately confessed, and absolved her of all blame, on condition that she be freed.

He was shortly afterward beheaded in a public square. The queen was not executed, out of respect for her brother, King George of England. She was taken to a castle in Hanover, Germany, where she was held prisoner until she died.

What local residents are asking is this: Does tragedy lie ahead for Barbara, as it did for the other foreign-born lady, whose love led her to the Castle of Hardenberg?

White Rat Can Whip His Weight in Rattlesnakes

Provo, Utah.—Rattlesnake Pete, just an ordinary looking white rat, is just about as tough as his name indicates.

In fact, the little rat can whip his weight in rattlesnakes, lizards, or what-have-you?

Dr. D. Eldon Beck, head of the biology department at Dixie Junior College of Utah, is the proud owner of the fighting rodent. He discovered the hardiness of his pet when the rat, after being bitten several times by two rattlesnakes, proceeded to vanquish and kill both snakes.

Doctor Beck pitted his rat against a red racer snake, a bull lizard, one of the largest scaly lizards of southern Utah, and a chuckwalla. Pete licked them all and came back for more. That about exhausted the list of challengers in Doctor Beck's acquaintance.

To see if the immunity of rattlesnake Pete can be passed on to offspring, Doctor Beck plans to mate the animal. In the meantime, snakes are giving the Beck homestead a wide berth.

Penthouse Jail to Have Many Adits, But One Exit

Knoxville, Tenn.—The next Davidson county jail will be perched atop the new courthouse building, according to architects' plans.

As to the "escape-proof" aspects, there will be many ways of entering it but only one way of leaving—through a sheriff's lobby on the ground floor.

The jail will occupy the eighth floor of the courthouse. Atop the jail will be three structures done in penthouse effect, to be used as laundry, kitchen, and women's cell block. A special entrance, designed for speedy traffic between the patrol wagon and the cells by means of an elevator, will offer no avenue of escape.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The Boston Lawrences came to California at the beginning of the gold rush, but the holdings of the family have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars.

"Not that way. But if they send for an assistant district attorney from San Jose—if they do," Dick said, "I know them all down there, and I'll do what I can to keep the questions down. But you see, Gail, the trouble is in getting into a mess like this," he offered tolerantly.

"Oh, I know, I know!" She beat her palms together. "Oh, what a fool a girl is!" she whispered frantically. "What possessed her, Dick?"

"Oh, I don't know." He was silent, and they stood without speaking for a moment, in the dark outside the courthouse. "She wanted a good time," he said. "She's—of course, she's beautiful. Well, come on." He touched her arm. "Let's go in."

She imagined Ariel, bareheaded, frightened, shaken, descending these same steps, in dusty afternoon heat, and shuddered as she followed him.

There were bare, dangling lights, a man at a flat-topped desk, benches, fences, gates, men in uniforms coming and going, murmurs.

"Hello, Tex. Hello, Joe. Good-evening, Sergeant!" Dick said. He glanced at Gail. "This is Miss Lawrence's sister," he added.

"Sorry to have your sister mixed into this, Miss Lawrence."

"Oh, it's terrible!" Gail said in a trembling voice.

"Hear that the little girl died?" the sergeant asked Dick.

"Yes, we heard that. Very sad. Terrible for them!"

"The young lady had no license," Walsh said, glancing up from his papers at Gail. "It's an awful thing, you know, if a man can't take his wife and child out for a run," shaking his head, mumbling his words.

But he was kinder, and she knew it.

"Your little sister, hey?" he presently asked.

Her little sister, yes, she answered, suddenly shaken by tears. She went away, and sat on a desolate bench, and Dick talked to the sergeant. The atmosphere of the dreadful place oppressed Gail like a pall, and she had to keep telling herself that this ordeal, like every other, would soon be over.

She started as Dick sat down beside her.

"Made a hit with the sergeant," he murmured; "he's been very decent!"

Gail went back to the desk, and smiled with blue eyes filled with tears.

"Thank you so much, Sergeant Walsh."

"Now, you have your sister here at ten o'clock day after tomorrow, see?" the man said. "It's too bad to have a little girl mixed into a thing like this!"

"Oh, I know it," Gail murmured thickly, heartsick. He was probably thinking that his little girl never would run about Sunday roads with intoxicated boys, she reflected bitterly.

Dick took her away through the nail-studded doors and the smelly hall.

"Dick, what kind of a fool is a girl," Gail began passionately—"what kind of a fool is a girl to let herself in for this sort of thing?"

"Well, that's what you wonder!" he commented mildly.

"I don't know what we would have done without you," she said, wondering.

"I haven't done anything," Dick answered promptly.

Gail went on with her musing, not so much about Ariel now as about Dick. He seemed a very rock of strength tonight; she felt a passionate regret for all the times she had thought slightingly of him, treated him carelessly. Buddy Raisch, Larry Barchi, and Dorothy Camp had all failed Ariel. But big, homely, awkward, loyal Dick had not, and never would fail, any of the Lawrences. Gail felt puzzled, somehow.

She was even aware of a little self-consciousness with him tonight for the first time in her life. It was as if she had never seen him before. When they went back into the old kitchen, and he half sat and half leaned against the table in his usual way, she found herself studying him—fascinated by his ease, and his quick, emphatic use of words, and his adequacy in this crisis. Whenever he called her "Gail"—and he had called her by her name all her life—she felt an emotion of pleasure.

"Walsh will do all he can; I don't think we need worry," Dick said. "Barchi and the Raisch boy were both gone—out on bail—when we got there, but they say there's no question they both had been drinking. It was natural enough for them to think Ariel had been drinking, too. I think I got it over that she hadn't been."

"What's the worst that can happen to Ariel, Dick?"

This was Edith from the arm of Phil's chair, where she sat leaning against him.

"What I think'll happen," Dick said, reflecting, "is that the charge against Ariel will be dismissed, and that she'll be retained as a witness. But there may be damages—from Moss."

"Oh, dear!" Gail wailed. She looked at Phil. "Another mortgage, just as we were clear!" she said philosophically.

"No, I wouldn't mortgage the place again," Phil said deliberately. "I'd borrow on my insurance policy this time."

"Phil, are you insured?" asked both sisters, surprised and impressed.

"I took out some a little while ago," His colorless skin, as clear as a girl's, flushed suddenly. He looked at Dick and laughed a little uncomfortably.

Dick gave Gail a look full of significance and understanding.

"Phil's insured himself because he wants to marry Lily!" Edith said to Gail when they were alone, later.

"I know it."

"This," Edith said solemnly, "is real trouble, Gail."

"I know it," Gail agreed again.

"We thought we knew what trouble was before."

"I know."

They looked gravely at each other.

"I can't believe that I went off to Los Gatos only yesterday, never dreaming of any of this!"

"I suppose we go to work just as usual tomorrow?"

"Well, I'll have to," Gail said.

Lying in bed, she went over the whole bewildering panorama. The incredible had happened: this was real trouble. This was disgrace.

"Your Little Sister, Hey?"

But she could not quite forget a new note, a new thread of friendship and happiness that had somehow come of it all. Dick's sternly concerned face as he first listened to Ariel's story, the authority with which he had assumed command of the situation, and his manner in the police station—definite, unfrightened, and friendly—all these seemed to create a new Dick, or rather to put an unknown person in Dick Stebbins' place. Protecting—self-reliant—devoted to the Lawrences.

Van would be tremendously concerned, too, of course. Van, who might have saved Ariel all this if he had acted quickly enough last night over at Monterey. If he had realized. . . .

But then, why should he? Had any of them realized the deadly danger into which Ariel was drifting? If her family's influence could not keep her at home, why should that of a man she hardly knew bring her back there?

"Except, of course," ran Gail's reasoning thoughts, "except, of course, that we never dreamed she would be over there alone with Dorothy and the boys, and he knew that she was."

A spasm of sheer pity for Ariel stirred Gail. Poor little Ariel, hot and tired and frightened, trying to drive a car through the Sunday traffic with a couple of heavy, half-intoxicated boys for her only companions. It was horrible.

Gail brought her eyes resolutely to her book. But instead of the printed lines there rose before her inner vision the picture of a hard, lean, serious young man leaning over a police sergeant's desk. Dick Stebbins was in the kitchen again, awkward, earnest, adequate. She was in the courtroom with Dick Stebbins.

She closed her book, put out the light. Soon she was floating, drifting, sinking, and rising on a sea of dreams.

CHAPTER VII

The big courtroom was very hot. Gail could hardly believe that this tense, dark, dirty place of fear and shame had been in existence yesterday and last year, and would be going on through all the years with the happy, marketing world so near and uncaring.

Phil and Edith were with her; the fifth Lawrence, white and frightened, and looking less than her seventeen years, was inside the fence. Dick was with Ariel. Sometimes they whispered together; often she looked at her brothers and sisters.

Dick and Ariel talked to the judge, who looked from face to face seriously, biting his lips as he listened. Gail prayed wildly. Then Ariel and Dick came down and joined the others.

"The case against Ariel is dismissed," Dick said in a whisper. "So far so good! Miller was drunk," he explained, his words barely audible, barely formed with his lips. "He's been arrested before. Ariel's fined fifteen dollars for driving without a license."

"You mean they're not going to try her for anything, Dick?"

"The case is dismissed."

They couldn't believe it. Their eyes moved solemnly toward each other.

"We can't—Ariel and all—we can't go, Dick?"

"Sure you can."

Five minutes later the Lawrences, scared and white, but beginning to breathe again, were out in the street. Ariel's ordeal was over.

Dick brought the verdict to Gail late that afternoon.

"The jury wasn't out fifteen minutes. Guilty. They say Miller'll get five years."

"Dick, is that the end of it?"

"The end!"

"Oh, my G—d, I am grateful!" Gail whispered, tears in her eyes.

Phil went up to tell Edith. And Van Murchison took Ariel off for a drive. "He's going to have her home well before six," Dick reported.

"Could you dine with us, Dick?"

"Not tonight. I'm going over to Stanislaus, to see Mother. Gee," Dick added youthfully, after thought, "I wish you could get Ariel to stop running with that bunch of rotters!"

"Oh, she's cured now," Gail predicted. "When it's too late," she added sadly. "Well, we've been fools."

"I don't see that you've been a fool," Dick protested, surprised. Gail laughed, a little fluttered, looked down as she stamped a book, looked up.

She looked straight into his face, noted the line of jaw, the wide-apart, wide-open gray eyes. Her eyes fell to the big hand on the desk, with his old cap in the fingers. The shabby old library in the jaded last heat of an autumn day seemed to lift and quiver with light.

"Dick, how are we ever going to thank you?"

"Oh, cut it!"

"And you know," she said, leaning toward him, looking at him with her heavy brows anxiously knitted—"you know what a child she is, Dick? That there is nothing wrong about Ariel—just mischief, and wanting to have a good time! You don't think people will remember this against her, Dick?"

"Oh, I suppose the old tabbies will whisper about it, for awhile."

"She'll just have to live it down," Gail said, wondering if her words had any meaning.

"Oh, sure."

He still lingered. Their heads were close together. Gail wondered what he would do, what the dull, browsing occupants of the library would do, if she suddenly kissed him on the temple.

He looked up, with his kindly grin.

The waters of the great sea were drawing her—drawing her away from solid ground. Gail was deeply, subconsciously aware of a fear that she would betray herself.

"Suppose," she thought, smiling her mysterious smile at him, "he suddenly leaned across here, and caught at my hands, and said, 'I love you!'"

"What's the matter?" Dick asked.

"Nothing. I just felt—a little—giddy. Reaction, I suppose."

For twenty minutes after he went away she knew neither where she was, nor what she was doing or saying.

Then she went up to Muller's and joined Edith, and they walked home together, happy, exhausted, grateful, Gail hugging her amazing, strange new secret to her heart as if it were a living thing.

Ariel came in a few minutes after dinner preparations were under way, and both older sisters glanced at her fearfully. She was quieter than usual, but she looked lovely, her face flushed, her hair flyaway gold under her white hat.

"Did you have a nice drive, darling?"

"Oh, heavenly!" Ariel said, with a weary sigh and a sober face.

"Couldn't bring Van back to supper?"

"Didn't think to ask him."

"Do you like him?" Gail asked encouragingly.

"Oh, he's darling," Ariel said listlessly. "Not that it makes any difference," she added bitterly.

"Ah, don't say that, dear!" Both sisters dreaded this mood, when she would be resentful and dark for awhile, and end up with hysterical laughter, hysterical tears, and physical collapse.

"Well, why should it matter, in this jay place! You don't suppose Van'll stay here one minute longer than he has to, do you?" Ariel demanded angrily. "I'm sick of it! Sick of it!" she said, in a sullen undertone.

Sam came in and lighted the gas above their heads; dusk had deepened almost into darkness.

"Sam, you're an angel!" Edith said gratefully.

"I suppose, jail or no jail, we eat sometimes?" Sam asked by way of answer, kissing the back of Gail's neck where the thick, tawny tendrils of hair curled up like a baby's hair. "Listen. There's a swell film at the Liberty tonight. Want to go, Ariel?"

IS OUR AMERICAN HOME GROWING ANEMIC?

RED blood generally denotes health; lack of it, disease. The first question asked about any patient these days, is "What is the blood count, doctor?" It is time we were taking the blood count of the American home. While the medical profession is working so assiduously on lengthening of life, what the world needs today is the strengthening of life. This must be done in the home, because it is nearer the beginning of life than any place on the planet. Parents train not only young life, but they "begin" life, they create it. The home is the source of all of the human energies of our nation, whether physical, mental, moral or spiritual.

Probably three causes have contributed most to this anemic condition of the seemingly bloodless home life in our country. First, easy divorce laws are gnawing at America's vitals. She heads the world's list with one divorce out of every five marriages. Compare this with her nearest neighbor, Canada, who has only one divorce out of every 161 marriages. Secondly, the insidious heresy of companionate marriage based entirely on selfish gratification. Thirdly, America's trait for imitation as shown by Hollywood's heinous example of promiscuity on the silver screen. These are "the why" of America's anemic home life.

The world concedes, I believe, the first six years of child life to be the most impressionable of his whole life, because at this time the child's character is being formed by external influences from which later he will form his own convictions. Over a decade and a half of close contact with both parents and their children, as dean of women, I can see why some children are launched into life with hardly a fighting chance to grow strong. In fairness to youth it should be said that in most cases of problem students, there have been also problem parents.

A student was once dropped from the university because of very low scholarship. After several talks with her I could only sense something at home was troubling her. Her family pride forbade her revealing it. Later I talked with the father. Upon leaving the office, to hurry back to Chicago, he hurled the remark over my desk, "You will have to keep her here anyhow, as my wife and I have moved into a small apartment and haven't room for her."

"No child can grow up twice," Dorothy Canfield once said. Heaven help the children who are born to anemic homes.

A VISIT TO THE BELGIAN QUEEN

TEN women physicians, from as many countries met in Belgium for a conclave. Among them was a friend of mine from Iowa. It had been arranged for them to meet the Belgian queen. When the appointed hour came they were ushered into a long salon of the palace, to await her majesty. Much excited were these visitors, no one of whom had ever before seen a queen. Most of them were able to speak English, although some brokenly. The question on the lips of each was, womanlike, "How will the queen be dressed?" "Will she wear a velvet gown, have jewels in her hair; will she be tall and queenly?" These subdued conjectures stopped as the attendant asked the physicians to form in line to meet the queen. Immediately the queen was announced and her majesty came smilingly into the room.

Extending her hand to the first visitor, she said, "So your home is in England, I love the English resorts, we play over there whenever we can." The next physician in line had come from France, and the queen in passing told her of her recent visit to Paris. The American physician stood third; to her the queen expressed her gratitude for the wonderful horses Iowa had sent to Belgium in the past. Thus through the line she went, until she had spoken personally with each one.

After she had gone, the women looked their complete satisfaction, "a real queen" they voiced in unison. "What kindly eyes she had," said one. "Her low well modulated voice I shall never forget," "Her handclasp was firm but so gentle." Said another, "She seemed sincerely glad to meet us, she had a personal word for each." Suddently some one asked, "How was the queen dressed?" The ten women recalled only with difficulty, for jewels, or lack of them passed unnoticed, when they looked into her eyes.

Thus this gift, for it is the greatest of life, can be a part of everyone who genuinely desires it. It is not alone the attribute of queens, though it be a queenly trait. Personality cannot be taught in six lessons as I saw recently advertised in a weekly magazine. It comes from the heart, it must be lived years before it becomes one's whole being.

The queen had put her queenly adornments within her heart instead of upon her head. Her crown of jewels was an understanding heart. Is this not within the reach of each one of us?

POULTRY

RECORD BIG LOSS IN FERTILE EGGS

Elimination of Roosters, Experts' Advice.

By H. H. Alp, Poultry Extension Specialist, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Roosters have nothing to crow about for the rest of the summer, for they will cause a loss of from $30 to $40 in every poultry flock of 100 hens unless they are taken out to prevent fertile eggs. This loss from fertile eggs that spoil in hot weather is a conservative estimate based upon current feed and egg prices. It represents 25 to 30 per cent of the annual egg income from laying flocks.

The direct loss of $30 to $40 that roosters cause the farmer through fertile eggs that spoil does not include the loss of feed used in producing the spoiled eggs. Altogether it is estimated that roosters cause a loss of about $5,000,000 to Illinois farmers each year.

Where egg buyers candle and grade eggs, the loss is direct, since spoiled eggs are culled out before the dealer makes a purchase. While grading and candling is not practiced by a large percentage of dealers, those who buy on the count basis are forced to pay a smaller price, thus causing an indirect loss to the farmer. This is well illustrated by the fact that several Illinois poultrymen were able to get 29½ cents a dozen for graded eggs on a New York market, while their local "run of the flock" price was 19 cents. The spread between graded and count-basis prices grows wider in warmer weather.

Roosters are necessary during the breeding season when eggs must be fertile to hatch, but at other times of the year they should be sold or confined. Especially desirable birds or young cockerels may be held over if they are kept away from the laying flock.

Alfalfa Range Best for Poults, Authority Says

Turkey growers agree that the best range for poults is an alfalfa field. Clover ranks second and rape probably third. They will do well on any range, however, if there are plenty of greens, but of course succulent greens are preferred, says a writer in the Missouri Farmer.

Before poults are put on range, it is necessary to give them greens and at this time such greens as lettuce, spinach, wild lettuce, or rape are excellent. They are better than alfalfa and clovers since they can be more easily cut into small pieces and stems that might choke the poults can be avoided. It is necessary to cut the greens finely until the poults are some six weeks of age because they gorge on them and choke on the stems if fed whole.

When poults do choke on greens, they can be caught up and held by the feet, head downward, and the greens worked out through the mouth with one hand.

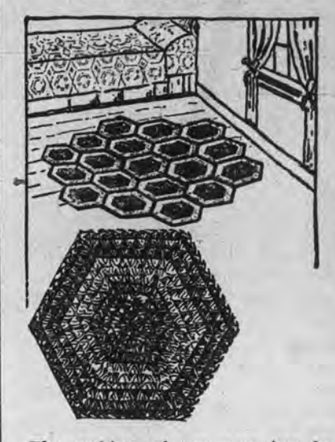
Avoid Too Much Sunshine

Growing chicks need sunshine, but they can have too much in the hot days of summer, and excessive heat may seriously affect their development. If there are no natural trees or shrubs on the range, sow clumps of sunflowers or other quick-growing annuals, which will provide shelter in the summer, and can be cut down when the land is cultivated in the fall. A well-insulated roof on the brooder house, or small shelters covered with branches, brush or sods, will also provide welcome retreats during the hottest days of summer.

Getting the Hens to Lay

Commercial poultry men try to get their pullets laying during the months of September, October, November and December. In spite of that according to some reports only 15 per cent of the eggs are laid during these four months. That means that the best prices occur at these times. The inevitable result is that folks start to give their birds better care and by the time they get into production the price of eggs is down. The important time in determining whether birds lay in the fall or not is during the summer.—Indiana Farmer's Guide.

Fresh Water for Pullets



One very important item in the diet of a growing pullet is fresh water, especially in the hot days of summer. Have at least four large fountains or pans for each 100 birds, and place them where they are easily accessible. Have all drinking pans standing on wooden platforms or wire frames, or put down some gravel to take up the overflow, because moist earth and mud puddles form breeding grounds for soil-borne diseases and intestinal worms, and are thus a serious menace to health.

Spraddles in Poults

"Spraddles" is the word used by turkey growers to describe poults that have spraddle legs when hatched. No one seems to know just what causes spraddles. They occur in the best of turkey flocks or, one might better say, they hatch out of the best of incubators, for more spraddles hatch from eggs out in incubators than from eggs hatched by hens. Very seldom in fact do spraddles occur from eggs incubated by hens. The trouble appears to be due to some defect in artificial incubation.

Different Ways of Making Rugs

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

The making of rag rugs has interested needleworkers for hundreds of years. One very good reason for this is that rugs are practical and wanted in every home. The larger the rug the harder the work; the weight increases as the work progresses. Making a rug of motifs and then assembling takes the hard labor out of rug making and the work becomes interesting. Work these motifs in spare time at home or elsewhere and, when all are finished, assemble.

Folder No. 532 contains a lot of information about making the hexagon motif in various sizes in hexagon shaped rugs and in various color combinations. Hexagon motifs are crocheted in any size and color scheme according to your own idea. Amount of material and all the stitches are given and other hints of value to rug makers. A new kind of chart for selecting your colors gives you an opportunity to see what your rug looks like before you go ahead with the work. You can get some wonderful ideas from this folder on "Different Ways to Make Rugs." It will be mailed to you upon receipt of 10 cents.

The "tin-tin-nab-u-lation" of the School Bells will soon send several thousand Shelby County children back to scholastic duties. Teachers and pupils are beginning to make their plans for the opening on September 9th. Miss Mary Peters, popular and efficient English Instructor has arrived fresh from a summer's study in Peabody College in Nashville, and is delighted to be home again, but speaks most entertainingly of her work and recreation activities in Nashville. Principal Childs is in Columbiana, having completed a summer's course at the Uninversity of Alabama, Mr. Childs speaks enthusiastically of his plans for the coming semesters, and we predict a successful High School for Columbiana next year. Miss Elizabeth Bell of Vincent, Joe Stone and other members of the faculty will arrive next week.

Among the collegiates who will return for further study are ,Miss Ruth Luck, A. D. Gordon, Harris Milton Gordon—University bound. Misses Charlie Verne Tinney, Jane Fowler and Margaret Ellis who will return to Alabama College. Miss Alice Roberts has accepted a position to teach next year, and will devote her time to this phase of school activities.

Miss Beth Wallace will leave Columbiana, Saturday, for Sylacauga, where she will teach in the City Schools this season.

George Veazy, of Washington, D. C. is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Charles Niven in Columbiana.

Oliver Head, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head, and his Grandfather, O. P. Head of Montevallo celebrated joint birthday anniversaries on Saturday, August 24th.

K. L. Lott of Birmingham has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Homer J. Walton.

One of the most entertaining and interesting visitors to the Democrat office this week, was John Charles McGhee, 4 month's old son of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton McGhee. His ready smile and spontaneous friendliness completely won all of us in the office. During his visit we received a hurried call to come to the Courthouse, so we took this young fellow with us, and personally introduced him to all the officials. Should he ever "choose to run" for a political office, we shall hope for as sincere a reception as he was accorded, by all members of the official family, on the above mentioned occasion. There was not a dissenting vote as to his "perfect fitness" for whatever job he might have wanted.

Little Annette Thompson was also a "curbstone" attraction on Saturday, when she motored up with her Mater, and gave us a merry "hello" in her own immitable baby way.

Joe Stone and a group of Future Farmers left Columbiana on Sunday afternoon for a trip to Panama City, Florida. The boys will be entertained in Auburn, Tuskegee and other points in the State before reaching their destination. Last year, Mr. Stone sponsored a trip to the World's Fair in Chicago. A worth while organization that believes in doing constructive things.

I have been using Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills for thirty years. No matter what kind of pain I have, they stop it almost instantly. Never without them in the house.
Mrs. Chas. W. Webb, Indio, Calif.

You're The Loser

WHEN you allow Headache, Neuralgia, Muscular, Rheumatic, Sciatic or Periodic Pains to keep you from work or pleasure.
You can't go places and do things when you are suffering—and the work or good times won't wait for you.
Why allow Pain to rob you of Health, Friends, Happiness, Money?
DR. MILES ANTI-PAIN PILLS have been used for the relief of pain for more than forty years. They taste good, act quickly, do not upset the stomach, nor cause constipation, leave no dull, depressed feeling.
Thousands have used them for twenty, thirty, forty years, and still find that nothing else relieves pain so promptly and effectively.
Why don't you try them? Once you know how pleasant they are to take, how quickly and effectively they relieve, you won't want to go back to disagreeable, slow acting medicines.
You too may find quick relief. Why wait forty minutes for relief when Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills will relieve you in ten to twenty minutes?
As a household remedy I have never found anything that equalled Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills. Mrs. Silas D. Keller, Penfield, Pa.
I never found anything that was so good to stop pain as Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills. I have told many about them and I find they are all using them. Mrs. Martha Lacy, Davenport, Iowa
I have been using Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills for years. I keep them on hand all the time. I can certainly recommend them for pain. Miss Audra Seybold, 317 W. 2nd St., Dayton, Ohio
Your Anti-Pain Pills have been a wonderful help to me. I have used them for three years and always keep them on hand. Mrs. E. Pierce, Lapwai, Idaho
I have used quite a lot of Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills. They are fine pills to stop pain. Mrs. J. L. Kester, Shickshinny, Pa.

Party Prize Frock for a Little Girl

PATTERN 9259

"They all liked my new frock!" this little girl will be certain to say when she returns from the party—a triumphant little miss. For this dress is different. It boasts a double yoke. The second yoke is cut all in one with the pleats. And puffed sleeves are a deliciously youthful fashion. Moreover, young mothers will find this pattern no trouble at all to follow—they'll probably make it up in several cotton prints. The cost will be nominal. We suggest a sprig print or possibly a small polka dot pattern—in gay colors! Bloomers are included in the pattern.

Pattern 9259 may be ordered only in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8. Size 4 requires 2½ yards 36-inch fabric. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth street, New York, N. Y.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

Solicitor George Lewis Bailes stated he would oppose any move to obtain a parole for R. A. Bridges, who has served little more than one year of a 20-year penitentiary sentence imposed upon him by a Criminal Court Jury in the bombing of the Pure Milk Company plant in Birmingham July 10, 1931.

Mrs. Clinton Davis, of Frisco City, was killed instantly when lightning ran in on electrical wires and struck her as she washed dishes in the kitchen sink. Her husband, sitting in a chair on the back porch of his home, was knocked to the ground but was otherwise uninjured.

The Birmingham City Commission has awarded a contract for widening, straightening and deepening the channel of Village Creek from Twenty-Sixth Street to Vanderbilt Road for $96,944. The award is subject to the approval of the State PWA engineer.

A corps of engineers is surveying the road from Faunsdale through Dayton, Thomaston and Sardis to Magnolia. Work will be started on this road by the State Highway Department, as soon as possible. This will be a hard surfaced state highway.

Judge M. K. Graham, of Goodwater, has requested an opinion of the state attorney general whether Representative J. O. Steele, of Coosa County, can hold the office of representative and that of clerk of the County Board of Education at the same time.

The Erhart cotton warehouse in Selma is being visited daily by scores of Dallas County planters to view a 910-pound bale brought in from the Burnsville plantation of H. M. Smith. It is said to be the largest bale ever ginned in Dallas County.

A project for the repair of all school buildings in Morgan County is being prepared at the office of the county superintendent of education at Decatur. The plans will be submitted to the Works Progress Administration when completed.

Gov. Bibb Graves has signed the Calhoun bill granting immunity to newspaper reporters from revealing confidential news sources before Grand Juries or other investigating bodies, and the measure immediately became a state law.

A determined movement to stop fake damage "racketeering" suits, responsible for Birmingham having the highest liability insurance rates of any city its size in the nation, has been launched by the Chamber of Commerce.

Alabama cities and counties have been warned by H. S. Geismer, acting state director for the Public Works Administration, that Sept. 16 has been set as the deadline for receiving applications for PWA funds.

Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, has announced the resignation of W. H. MacGregor, department statistician, who has accepted the principalship of Etowah County High School at Attalla.

Dates for the air carnival to be held at Birmingham Municipal Airport were changed from Sept. 14-15 to Oct. 5-6 at a conference between aviation leaders and Commissioners J. M. Jones, Jr., and W. O. Downs.

Installation of equipment and machinery for hotels, apartments and multiple-family houses is now possible under the amended modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

Aubrey W. Williams, executive director of the National Youth Administration, has appointed Thad Holt, Alabama Works Progress administrator, as director of the youth program for Alabama.

The annual homecoming at Grady was held Aug. 25. The program was opened with a sermon at the Church of Christ by the Rev. W. T. Grider, pastor. A basket dinner was served at noon.

After electing Paul W. Stockton, of Guntersville, president of the Alabama Merchants Association, the final session of the nineteenth annual convention came to a close in Birmingham.

A better housing meeting was held recently in Mobile with more than 150 bankers, material dealers, contractors and others interested in the building industry attending.

Gov. Bibb Graves has signed the Mixon bill authorizing the Town of Muscle Shoals to sell a 240-acre tract to the Tennessee Valley Authority for development as an airport.

Federal loans of 12 cents per pound on the current cotton crop were advocated by the agricultural committee of the Alabama Bankers Association in a meeting at Auburn.

Expenditure within the next few weeks of more than $900,000 is expected to provide the most extensive road building program in the history of Madison County.

Bids for the construction of a new postoffice at Fort Payne will be opened Sept. 9, according to advices received from the Treasury Department at Washington.

The Greenville CCC camp has a total of 225 enrolled. Soon the men will begin their work in the soil erosion control work to be done in that county.

All accredited junior and senior high schools of Marshall County opened Monday, Aug. 26. The rural elementary schools are scheduled to open Oct. 21.

BRISBANE

THIS WEEK

A Rogers Highway
Our Policy? Here It Is Why Go to Town?
To Discourage Vice

From Tusla, Okla., in which state Will Rogers was born, J. D. Underwood telegraphs suggesting as "the highest tribute and a lasting memorial to Will Rogers," that Highway 66, which runs from Rogers' new home in California to his old home at Claremore, Okla., be extended on to New York, and the whole road named "Will Rogers Highway."

Arthur Brisbane

If every American highway with friends of Will Rogers living on both sides from one end to the other were named for him, there would be many "Will Rogers" highways.

Thus run the headlines:

"ITALY BARS ALL PEACE TALK."

"BRITAIN WEIGHS SANCTIONS. WANTS TO KNOW OUR POLICY."

If she wants to know the policy of 90 out of a 100 ordinary Americans, and 100 per cent of all common sense Americans, it would be this:

To mind our own business; let European nations, alternately murdering each other and robbing inferior nations, attend to their business, in their way.

Our policy now, with Italy swallowing Ethiopia, should be exactly what it was when our British friends were busy swallowing the lands of the Boers, absorbing that country with its valuable gold and diamond mines. We did nothing then. Why should we invent a special policy for Mussolini now?

France and England "fear Mussolini may involve three continents in the Ethiopian war." Has Europe heard of the New England farmer who said: "I'm on my way to town to get drunk, and Lord, how I dread it!" He need not have gone to town. European nations need not be dragged into a tri-continental war if they don't want to be dragged.

A very old poker player of the New York Press club, when he "raised the pot," remarked usually: "The only way to discourage vice is to make it expensive." That idea seems to be working in Germany. Doctor Schacht, head of the great German bank, leading financier of the Reich, warns Germany that Nazi individuals indulging themselves in the pleasure of treating defenseless Jews brutally, are endangering German's prosperity. Such wanton brutality constitutes a great menace to German trade everywhere, according to Doctor Schacht, who knows.

Republicans report greatly increased demand for the nomination of Senator Borah, since the announcement that, if nominated, he will run. This will be mournful news for some Republican corporation-best minds, for whether they have to be "lashed with scorpions," or with something else, would make little difference to some of them who consider Senator Borah distinctly in the "scorpion" class.

An old gentleman of eighty-one strolled into a New York police station, remarking: "I have just walked from Kansas City and shall walk back again tonight." He was removed to a psychopathic ward. If he had substituted the verb "fly" for "walk," the police would not have disturbed him, for he could have flown in from Kansas City during the day very easily and flown back again at night. If 25 years ago he had said, "I just flew in from Kansas City," he would have been sent to the dangerous ward.

So there is progress.

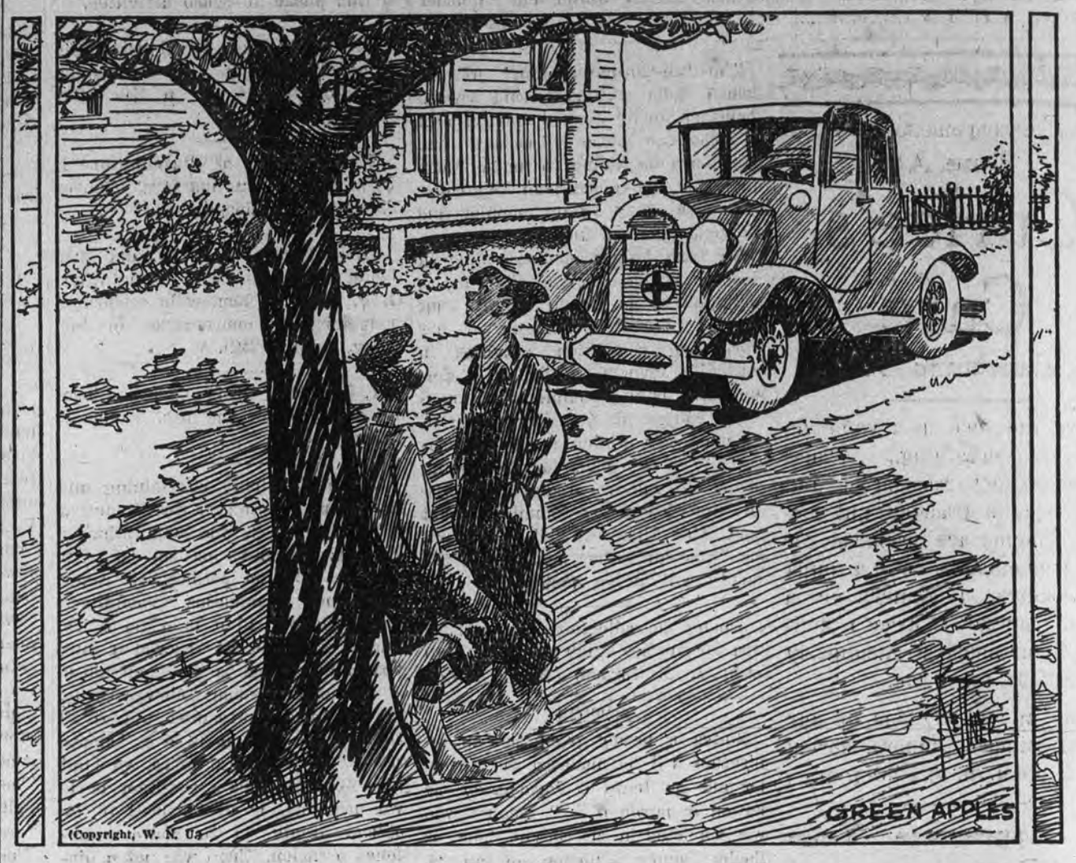
At Sverdlovsk, Russian government engineers, digging sewers under the city, find gold ore that indicates a rich gold field underlying the town. The government owns practically all the city, and can easily take the rest, and a further increase in Russia's gold production, already more than three times as great as that of the United States, may be expected.

Those that believe in the wickedness of Russia may ask:

"Why does Providence allow such wicked people to find so much gold?"

One answer is, "The quickest way to make them stop their wickedness is to make them rich, and gold would do that." Gold might not change the existing government of Russia. But another generation will see another kind of government, and ownership of such a lump of gold, as we possess, might make that next Russian government consider Lenin and Stalin "old fashioned."

Providence works mysteriously.



Physicians at St. Vincent's hospital in New York report the extraordinary case of a baby, that lived for 27 days, appearing almost normal but possessing no brain.

Disgruntled "best minds" will tell you there are "babies" in Washington, some of them full-fledged professors, that have lived longer than 27 days "without any brain."

Time Out

New Autumn Woolens Are Striking

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WOOLENS to "suit" the smart woman this fall are that fascinating we are not going to be able to resist them and you wouldn't if you could after once glimpsing them. From every inch of their woof and their warp the woolens brought out this season radiate a beauty of coloring, of texture, of novelty in patterning and weave which is simply taking the world of fashion by storm.

Seeing that the American mills and the mills abroad are giving us the most amazing, the most beautiful woolens fancy can picture, it is to rejoice that the English habit of wearing sportsy or tailored costumes for all daytime occasions in contrast to most resplendent and glorious formal fashions for evening has spread to America. Now that the smart thing to do this fall is to go very colorfully and handsomely tailored in the daytime, it is safe to predict that dresses, suits, swagger costumes together with three-piece ensembles made of stunning woolens will predominate by a large majority in the wardrobe of every fashion-wise woman.

One of the most dramatic gestures which has to do with this sweeping vogue for grand woolens is the costume which goes fifty-fifty gorgeous cloth and high-colored suede. That is to say, a skirt of rich woolen is topped with a jacket or sweater of suede or leather which carries the key color of the plaid or striped material. To climax the scheme of design, the newest thing is the blouse which is knitted of the identical yarn in which the wool material is woven. Thus a perfect color harmony is achieved.

Another thing likable about the new woolens is that they are so delightfully soft and caressing to the touch, and give ear to this bit of good news—they are so woven in combination of yarns, they do not wrinkle.

Just to mention a few of the smartest and newest of new woolens—there are kemp tweeds, bright nubbed tweeds of unusual treatment, sawtooth checks, broken plaids, marl tweeds, chevron stripes, ribbed diagonals, ombre plaids and others too numerous to cite.

The colorings of the versatile woolens brought out this season are a triumps both in art and of science. A complete wardrobe may be planned to include several colors, none of which conflict because the most vivid plaids and gay hues are given dusky overtones which blend into one grand symphony via misty interweavings of grayish or brownish yarns. The attractive Seton Cotterill collection of London which was recently shown in America by the Chicago wholesale market council stressed particularly this feature of color blend in smart woolens. The trio of high-style woolen fashions here pictured were displayed in this exhibit.

See illustrated to the left in the group a perfect travel costume. The Scotchy plaid in black and white, of which it is made, has a heavy nub yarn interwoven to give highlights of canary yellow.

A new chevron-stripe wool in tones of amber, rustique and brown makes the suit with tuxedo topcoat (centered in the illustration.) Note the smart cross-scarf of the jacket. Semi-fitted lines and woolen buttons give a new smart air, also the front fullness of the skirt.

The new skirts are marvelously built. They are most deceptive. They look as innocently pleated and paneled as you please, while in reality they are concealing slits which allow for perfect freedom of action. Such a skirt is the one to the right in the picture. "Swagger collegienne" describes this ombre plaid suit in rich tones of dubonnet red and ivory. It has a snug collar and stock scarf and is worn with matching sweater.

COAT OF PIGSKIN

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Have you heard about the too-chic-for-words new polo coats which are made of fine pigskin? Just study this picture and see how smart they are down to the slightest detail. You can get them either in natural or rich dark dyes. The model illustrated has all the latest "touches," such as big, roomy bellows pockets, the new sash belt which ties so casually, strap-band sleeves which are adjustable about the wrist, deep-set yoke and an intricate seaming which gives the garment exquisite finesse. The hat is of pigskin to match the coat. The paisly print scarf is up to the moment in style.

LUXURIOUS METALS TOUCH UP FABRICS

Inspired by Oriental and period influences fabric manufacturers have outdone themselves in producing beautiful and luxurious metals on every type of silk ground.

In addition to being important for afternoon and evening gowns, the new metals are widely used for millinery—notably turbans—scarfs to be worn with wool as well as silk suits, blouses, waistcoats, bags, vanity and cigarette cases, in superb evening sandals and evening jackets that have a decidedly new look.

Metals with solid burnished faces in silver, gold—and newest of all—copper are shown in the market and considered especially good for jackets and accessories.

Silk crepes with double borders in metalized broche show distinct traces of Persian, Hindu and Japanese influence in their rich colorings and delicate patterns.

Sheer silk gauzes, completely metalized, form one of the newest and loveliest of the metals.

Pink Rates Coolest Shade and Looks Most Expensive

Pink, fashion's favorite color this summer, is the coolest-looking and, incidentally, the most expensive appearing shade you possibly can wear. There are pink linen and shantung suits for town and country, handsome pink sweaters to wear with white skirts when you week-end out of town and glamorous evening gowns in various tones of this lovely shade. One particularly nice evening gown is fashioned from double layers of pink chiffon and is worn under a billowing wrap of matching material.

Paris Loves Blue

Blue is a favorite color of Paris this year. Smart women seen at the races are many of them gowned in navy with white relief; also navy and white prints. Pale, misty blue crepe frocks are worn with darker blue hats, bags and shoes.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for September 1

PAUL THE APOSTLE

LESSON TEXT—Acts 20:33-35; Philippians 4:4-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak.—Acts 20:35.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Happy Worker for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul a Good Soldier for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Find Happiness in Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Church and the Toiler.

The explanatory title given by the lesson committee, "Paul (A Worker With Hand and Brain)," is unsatisfactory. His pursuit of a trade was incidental, as well as working with his brain. He was in deed and in truth the apostle of Jesus Christ and his entire person was dominated by his passion to serve his Lord.

I. His Birth (Acts 22:3; cf. Phil. 3:17).

He was born in Tarsus of pure Hebrew stock. He could with lawful pride boast of a godly ancestry.

II. His Home Training (Phil. 3:5).

His parents were pious people and carefully reared him according to Jewish standards. Most religious leaders spring out of such homes, as for example, Moses, Samuel, and Timothy. Stern principles of integrity were inculcated in him, thus giving him strength of character to impress the world.

III. His Education (Acts 22:3).

1. His patriotism. He was brought up to love his nation. He proudly affirmed, "I am a Jew." Paul was a nationalist of the true type.

2. A love for the Bible. The Scriptures were to him the very Word of God. What was found written therein was the final word for him. Loss of love for the Bible and implicit faith therein is a tragedy.

3. Zealous for God. He says, "I was zealous toward God." The word "zealous" literally means "to boil." It means that his life was inflamed with passion for God.

4. He was conscientious. His supreme aim was to have a conscience void of offense. Conformity to the dictates of conscience is demanded. It is the law of life for every man, but because of the blight of sin the conscience needs to be taught by the Word of God.

5. He had a trade. Every Jewish boy, regardless of his father's wealth, was taught a trade. It was a saying among them that he who failed to teach his son a trade taught him to steal.

IV. His Conversion (Acts 22:6-10).

1. On the way to Damascus (v. 6). He was filled with hatred of Christ and was on his way to Damascus with authority to bring to Jerusalem to be punished such Christians, men and women, as might be found.

2. A light from heaven (vv. 6-9). As this light burned through the sky he fell to the ground. Accompanying the light was a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" In response to his inquiry as to who was speaking, the Lord declared that it was Jesus of Nazareth whom he was persecuting.

3. An honest inquiry (v. 10). This is shown by his declaration of his willingness to do what the Lord willed. The Lord, therefore, instructed him to go to Damascus where fuller light would be given him.

V. Paul's Philosophy of Life (Phil. 4:4-13).

What men do and say expresses their philosophy of life. In order to induce right living, there must be created right thinking, for truly, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

1. Unceasing joy in the Lord (v. 4). The one who knows the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour and who knows that in the providence of God all things work together for good to them who love God, cannot help but persistently rejoice in spite of personal circumstances.

2. Be careful for nothing (v. 6). The word "careful" means "concern which leads to distraction." This does not mean that such a one will be hazardous in his living or fail in the exercise of common sense. He will not be disposed to depend upon himself, but cast himself upon his Lord for everything.

6. Think on right things (v. 8). The one who thinks on truth will be true; the one who thinks on honesty will be honest; the one who thinks on love will have love flowing from his person. Things honorable and of good reputation among the people will not be neglected.

4. All sufficiency is in Christ (vv. 10-13). The one who is thus in harmony with his Lord will be content in whatever circumstances he may be placed.

Health

"The first wealth is health. Sickness is poor-spirited, and cannot serve anyone; it must husband its resources to live. But health, or fullness, answers its own ends, and has to spare—runs over, and inundates the neighborhoods and creeks of other men's necessities."—Emerson.

Need of Self-Control

But take my word for it. This is the time to see the world in its Sunday clothes, and without money and without price.—Exchange.

Glaciers' Retreat Shows Earth Is Growing Warmer

New evidence that the earth is slowly growing warmer is supplied by two years' records of the glaciers in the Alps, reported by Dr. P. L. Marcanton, director of the Swiss weather bureau.

The exact positions of the 98 Swiss glaciers are measured every year by agents of the bureau, says the Chicago Tribune.

In 1932 only 15 glacier fronts were advancing, while 80 were retreating. The remaining three showed no change. In 1933 the evidence of increasing warmth was a little stronger, 81 glaciers being measured as retreating, while only 13 were advancing and four were unchanged.

These accurate yearly measurements of the glaciers go back only a few years, but earth ridges, piles of stones and other geological evidences exist to prove that nearly all the Alpine glaciers once reached much further down the mountain slopes than they do today.

Geologists who have studied these evidences believe that the last time of extreme glacier advance was about 15,000 years ago, since when the average movement has been a slow retreat, interrupted, however, by at least three brief periods of no movement or of advance.

There is much other evidence that during this last 15,000 years the earth, as a whole, has experienced similar back and forth swings of climate, but with a general tendency to grow very slowly warmer and dryer.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

Judge L. C. Walker spent LABOR DAY in trying one of the heaviest County Court dockets yet presented. The corridors were crowded with witnesses, and lawyers were busily engaged throughout the day in the trial of the cases. There were 25 cases disposed of. Sixteen convictions and nine cases nolle prosequi.

The Board of Revenue was in regular session on Tuesday. President John M. Lyon presiding. A called meeting was held on Monday in which there were many persons owning land through which the new highway will run, present. The right of way was being sought from property owners.

The Federal Government will spend $8,000,000 in Alabama on Forestry and State Park Projects, under the direction of the State Commission of Forestry.

Red and white is the color scheme of the new auto tags which have been received in the Probate office in Columbiana. There will also be required an additional tag on the front of your car this year, but at no additional cost to the car owner.

All plans have been completed for the opening of the first semester of Shelby County High Schools on next Monday, September 9th, according to Supt. J. L. Appleton. The first day will probably be given to classification, distribution of book lists and a general schedule for the semester's work.

The dove shooting season under 1935 Federal hunting regulations, will open on September 21, and close on January 5th—according to a new amendment approved by President Roosevelt for Southern states.

Under the new Swift Act, dog trainers must procure a license from the Commissioner of Conservation. The price of the license is $5.00.

L. C. Abbott, in speaking of his new position as Tax Collector of Shelby County, which goes into effect on October 1st, states he will have to learn an entirely new set of books. Judging from the number, their size, and their volume, it will be like starting to school again. When we stopped by for a hurried "Goodmorning", we found him literally buried among 31 new books in which to "check and re-check" your tax amounts "due and payable" etc. However, knowing his past record in accurately and efficiently dealing with "facts and figures", we predict his knowledge to be complete when he finishes going through the system.

On October 1st, Luther Fowler, Editor of the Shelby County Reporter, will assume the responsibilities incident to the Tax Assessor's office.

NEW PRESIDENT OF ALABAMA COLLEGE HAS BEGUN DUTIES

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—Dr. A. F. Harman, former state superintendent of education, began his duties as president of Alabama College Monday, September 2nd, succeeding Dr. O. C. Carmichael, who resigned to become dean of the graduate school and senior college at Vanderbilt University.

Dr. Harman, the fifth president of the institution, has had a distinguished career in state educational circles. He served as state superintendent of schools in Montgomery County when its schools gained wide recognition.

He has been a frequent visitor on the campus during the Summer. Dr. Harman was named head of the college at the annual meeting of the board of trustees in May, following announcement of the resignation of Dr. Carmichael. The college began its fortieth year with the new administration.

JOHN TALLY & KYLE GREEN ARE KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

John Tally, 32, of Alabaster, and Kyle Green, 26, of Wilsonville, met instant death in an automobile accident at Saginaw on the Montgomery-Birmingham highway about 9 a. m. on last Thursday, August 29, when two cars collided.

The two automobiles were being driven by John Tally of Alabaster, and B. H. Lester of Columbiana.

According to an account by B. H. Lester, the Ford car which Tally was driving appeared to be turning off at the Fulton Spring road, when suddenly Tally must have changed his mind, whirling back into the highway, where he was met with a head on collision by the Chevrolet truck in which Lester was driving, and Green a passenger.

Only two people, other than those in the truck, are reported as having

LEGION AUXILIARY MEET FRIDAY, AUG. 30, IN WILSONVILLE

The Shirley-Holloway Unit No. 131, of the American Legion Auxiliary, met in business session Friday afternoon, Aug. 30, with Mrs. Roslyn Reinhardt, in Wilsonville.

Installation of officers for the coming year was very impressive. Those taking offices were as follows: Mrs. Willie S. Lokey, President, succeeding Mrs. Loretta Head; Mrs. Florene Smith, Vice-President, succeeding Mrs. Roslyn Reinhardt; Mrs. Loretta Head, Secretary-Treasurer, succeeding Mrs. Claudia Wooley; Mrs. Gladys Walton, Sergeant-at-arms, succeeding Mrs. Emmie Young; Mrs. Ruth Baker, Historian, succeeding Mrs. Iucile Nichols; Mrs. Roslyn Reinhardt, Chaplain, succeeding Mrs. Elizabeth Lyons. The President will appoint her committees at the next meeting.

Pictures were made of the out-going and the in-coming officers to be used in the interesting history of the unit now being compiled by Mrs. Lucile Nichols.

Plans for money-making projects were discussed and the matter left open until the next meeting when definite plans will be made.

Membership drive was also discussed and the auxiliary will soon put on a drive for new members as well as re-enlist former members who have dropped out.

The next regular meeting will be Friday, September 27th, with Mrs. Willie S. Loker.

Heart Drifts

FINIS.

I have no will to weep or sing,
No least desire to pray or curse;
The loss of love is a terrible thing—
They lie who say that "DEATH is worse".

—(Contributed)

CHARITY—MARCH WIND.

Last night a thin wind
Snuffed at my palms,
And whined like a beggar
Asking for alms.
So I took out and tossed him
An old letter
Which he carried off
And we both felt better.

—(Contributed)

THE GIFT.

I thought, beloved, to have brought to you
A gift of quietness and ease and peace,
Cooling your brow as with mystic dew
Dropping from twilight trees.

Homeward I go not yet; the darkness grows;
Not mine the voice to still with peace divine;
From the first fount the stream of quiet flows
Through other hearts than mine.

Yet of the night, I give to you my stars,
And of my sorrows here the sweetest gains,
And out of Hell, beyond its iron bars,
My SCORN of all its pains.

—(Contributed)

CARRY ON.

Let us pause. One of us has fallen.
Maybe a neglected misunderstanding tripped him;
Or the seeming uselessness of things wearied his heart.

It is so necessary for him to go on!
Maybe not to you, or you, or to me—
But to someone.

Courage, patience! You are the torch-bearer.
Who knows? In lighting the way for us,
You, too, may find the true gods.

—(Edwards)

BECAUSE.

Because you come to me with naught save love,
And hold my hand and lift mine eyes above
A wider world of hope and joy I see—
Because you come to me.

Because you speak to me in accents sweet,
I find the roses waking round my feet
And I am led thru tears of joy to thee
Because you come to me.

Because God made thee mine, I'll cherish thee
Through light and darkness thru all time to be
And pray His love may make our love divine—
Because God made thee MINE.

—(D'Harlot)

PROPHECY.

In a little grey cottage in some small town
I shall grow old in a checkered gown.
I shall drink milk with my warm fresh bread,
And never a night but safe in bed
I shall rest well and never wake
In the breathless dark with an alien ache
For seas of purple and tropical stars
And the flashing scarlet of strange bazarrs—
For the low pitched note of a foreign tongue
Murmured by those I pass among.
I shall rest quietly there in the gloom,
Quietly, quietly, there in my room.
And though I walk to the corner store,
Though daily I mop the kitchen floor,
Though I can laugh and weep my tears,
I'll have been dead for forty years!

Dr. Carmichael Leaves For Vanderbilt Job

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—Dr. O. C. Carmichael, former president of Alabama College, left last Saturday for Nashville, where he is to be dean of the Graduate School and Senior College at Vanderbilt University. He has been president of Alabama College the past 10 years, coming here three years earlier as dean and assistant to the president.

Dr. Carmichael will begin his duties immediately at Vanderbilt, while Dr. A. F. Harman, his successor at Alabama College, will take his office Monday morning also, becoming the fifth president of the institution.

Radio Artists To Be In Calera Sept. 6th

CALERA, Ala. — The American Legion, Post No. 56, will present Hand Saw Bill and His Alabama Woodchucks from Radio Station WS GN in Birmingham, on Friday night, September 6, 1935, at 7:30 p. m., in Calera Junior High School Auditorium. Admission 10 and 20 cents.

CHILDREN IN FIRST GRADES WILL GET THEIR BOOKS FREE

The Honorable Bibb Graves and Dr. J. A. Keller, State Superintendent of Education in Montgomery, have arranged to give the children of the first grades their textbooks free this Fall. The State Depository, E. E. Forbes & Sons Piano Cowpany, advises us that they will have these books delivered to every Superintendent of the Counties for distribution through the teachers. They have also arranged to have pamphlets with the prices and books for each grade distributed so there will be no confusion in the pupils getting the right books from the local depositories. This will be of great assistance to both the pupils and the dealers.

Should there be a possibility that anyone lives away from a local depository and are in a hurry for the books, the teacher can give them the price and they can send remittance to the E. E. Forbes & Sons Piano Company, 403 North 20th Street, Birmingham, and they, in turn, will mail the books to them the same day remittance is made. Remittance can be made by either woney order, bank check or postage stamps.

SMITH-BATSON

WILSONVILLE, Ala. — Of widespread interest was the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Pratt Smith, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. T. O. Smith, of Wilsonville, to James Lucian Batson, Jr., of Bessemer, which was impressively solemnized on Saturday morning at the Baptist Church in Wilsonville, in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends, the Rev. B. T. Waites performing the ceremony.

The wedding vows were spoken before an altar improvised of banked ferns. In effective relief against a background of green were tall candelabra holding burning white tapers.

Preceding the ceremony, Miss Aileen Pope, pianist, and Mildred White Wallace, soloist, presented a program of nuptial music.

Members of the wedding party included T. O. Smith, Jr. and Earl Wood, Groomsmen; Mrs.C. C. C. Keeton and Mrs. T. O. Smith, Jr., Brides matrons; and Mrs. L. H. Lewis, Matron of Honor.

The bride entered with her father, by whom she was given in marriage. They were met at the altar by the groom, who was accompanied by Lester Lewis, Jr., of Bessemer.

The bride was lovely in a soft wedding gown of white lace with hat to match. She carried an arm bouquet of roses and valley lillies.

Following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Batson left for a trip on the Florida coast, after which they will make their home in Bessemer where Mr. Batson holds a responsible position with the Long-Lewis Hardware Company.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruton Pitts have as their guests this week, Mr. George O'Hare, George O'Hare, Jr., and Mrs. Jess Wall, Pat O'Hare and Miss Aline O'Hare of Sherman, Texas.

CIRCUIT COURT IS CLOSED ON AUG. 31 BY JUDGE WALLACE

Judge W. W. Wallace brought to a close on Saturday afternoon one of the most successful terms of the Circuit Court ever held in Shelby County, according to reports from officials who have been engaged for the past two weeks in the discharge of their various duties, and citizens who attended this session of the court.

During the first week of the court, the Grand Jury was held, and 59 indictments returned to the Court. There were also 19 Civil cases disposed of—finally, during this week.

The Criminal docket was sounded on Monday morning, Aug. 26. After completing the organization of the Court, the same was in continuance operation until Saturday afternoon which cleared the jail of al Felonies, and practically cleared the entire Criminal docket. There were 26 Criminal cases disposed of by trial or pleas of guilty during the week.

Credit was given for this splendid Court record to Judge Wallace, Solicitors Hardegree and Luck, Sheriff C. H. Fore and his efficient deputies, the full cooperation of the lawyers of the Shelby County Bar, and the unusually high type men who served in the capacity of Jurors.

The next term of the Circuit Court for Shelby County will be held in November.

Miss Victoria Nolen Is Called By Death

WILTON, Ala. — Miss Victoria Nolen, 74, passed away at her home near Wilton on Thursday night, August 29, after a short illness. Miss Nolen was a prominent member of the Montevallo Baptist Church.

Funeral services was conducted on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 1st, at the Wilton Baptist Church, the Rev. F. B. Pearson and A. B. Canant officiating. interment in the Montevallo cemetery, Rogan in charge.

Miss Nolen is survived by one brother, Charles Nolen, of Wilton; two sisters, Misses Laura and Mary Nolen, of Wilton; four nieces, Mrs. J. H. Lee, Misses Ella Mae, Alice and Louise Nolen, of Wilton; and one nephew, Pat Nolen, of Wilton.

E. S. McClanahan Opens Business Here

E. S. McClanahan, of Birmingham, is being cordially welcomed into business circles of Columbiana this week. Mr. McClanahan is an experienced Electrician and Radio service man. His decision to permanently locate in Columbiana, and his efficiency in all kinds of wiring and radio repair work, will fill a long felt need for this type of work in this community.

Mr. McClanahan told the writer he would be glad to call in any home in Columbiana, inspect radio, tubes, aerial and ground wiring for the small charge of $1.00. Should he be given the work, this minimum charge would be deducted from his reasonable rates.

The Democrat takes this opportunity to extend to Mr. and Mrs. McClanahan a cordial welcome to Columbiana, and to wish them success in their new field of endeavor.

ALABAMA COLLEGE TO BEGIN FORTIETH SESSION ON SEPT. 9

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The fortieth session at Alabama College will begin Sept. 9th, with registration of freshmen. Registration will continue until Thursday of that week, when classes are to begin.

The first faculty meeting of the year will be held on the preceding Saturday afternoon.

A full orientation program has been announced, beginning next Sunday, when the Y. W. C. A. vesper services will be held in Palmer Hall for freshmen, orientation committees, faculty and visitors. The annual Student Senate party is scheduled for Sept. 9 and on the following day the local churches will give a reception for the new students.

On Sept. 11 the freshmen will be entertained by the athletic board with supper at the Camp House. The Y. W. C. A. step-singing program will be held the following day.

Misses Helen Hewell and Mary Nall Kendrick will serve as leaders in the "Echoes of College Night" program on Sept. 13. It is presented each year to give new students an impression of campus traditions and of the significance of College Night. The Y. W. C. A. Big Sister-Little Sister party is slated for Sept. 14, closing a crowded opening week for members of the freshman class.

A large number of upperclassmen will return to the campus early to assist in the orientation program, which is arranged under the general supervision of Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, student counselor.

The student committees are to work in divisions under the presidents of the Student Government Association, the Senate, the Y. W. C. A., the Presidents Council, the Athletic Board and the Publication Board.

Members of the senate will meet freshmen at the trains and busses; the Y. W. C. A. representatives will conduct them to their rooms from the assembly halls, the Athletic Board members will aid them in locating their luggage, the President's Council will conduct new students and visitors about the campus, the Publication Board will arrange conferences with officials the seniors for freshmen.

Congress Quits as Long's Filibuster Kills Deficiency Appropriation—Russia Rejects America's Protest Against Communist Subversive Activities.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

CONGRESS ended its session at midnight Monday—after the clock hands had been moved back three times—the house hilarious with refreshment, song and rustic antics, the senate furious because Huey Long of Louisiana had conducted a lone filibuster for seven hours and talked to death the third deficiency appropriation bill. This measure carried $93,000,000 tax to pay pensions to the aged, retirement pay to railroad workers and money for crippled children.

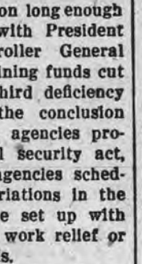
Senator Long

The Kingfish defeated all efforts to silence him and was adamant to pleas that he was cutting off funds for humanitarian purposes. He was insisting that the house be forced to vote on the cotton and wheat loan amendments to the bill which the senate had inserted but which the lower chamber had rejected. A compromise had been reached between the administration and the bloc of cotton state senators by which the cotton raisers were to get government loans of 10 cents a pound, and the wheat farmers were left out. Long would not stand for the elimination of the amendments thus arranged.

The Democratic leaders were afraid that if submitted to the house government loans not only on wheat and cotton but on other commodities would be voted at a cost of upward of $2,000,000,000.

They determined to let the appropriation bill fail rather than submit to Long's terms, although Robinson stated that information from the controller general's office indicated there would be no available funds for the social security program unless the deficiency measure were passed.

The compromise cotton plan was accepted reluctantly by the AAA, and many of the southern senators were dissatisfied with it. The senators from the wheat states were disgruntled because the wheat loan policy was completely abandoned.



SOME of the congressional leaders lingered in Washington long enough to hold a conference with President Roosevelt and Comptroller General McCarl on ways of obtaining funds cut off by failure of the third deficiency bill. They came to the conclusion that the administrative agencies provided for in the social security act, as well as the other agencies scheduled to receive appropriations in the deficiency bill, could be set up with money either from the work relief or other unexpended funds.

However, Mr. McCarl advised, and the congressmen agreed, that grants in aid to states for old age assistance, the blind and dependent children, cannot be paid out of the work relief fund, because such activities would not create employment.

This restriction, it was concluded, would not apply to grants to states for the setting up of administrations for unemployment insurance and other activities contemplated by the social security bill, for this would provide jobs.

"It is apparent that the Long filibuster will work a great hardship, but a study is being made with a view to proceeding wherever it is possible with a preparation for the administration of the social security, the railroad retirement law and other measures provided for in the deficiency bill," said Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Democratic leader.

NOTWITHSTANDING the general protest by newspapers against the financing of paper mill construction by the Reconstruction Finance corporation, on the ground that government control of print paper supply threatens the freedom of the press, Chairman Jesse Jones of the RFC intimated that this practice may be extended and at the same time said this question was for congress to decide. He produced figures showing that 500,000 tons of paper pulp is imported annually.

Jesse Jones

"Every governmental loan to industry competes with private capital, and it is for congress to determine how long it wishes such loans made," Jones said, in a formal statement on RFC cash supplied to the Crossett Lumber company of Alabama to make paper.

Jones recalled that the house of representatives on January 29 rejected an amendment to the RFC extension bill which would have eliminated loans to paper mills. He inferred that this action gave the RFC a free hand to engage in financing of paper mills.

The application of the Crossett company is the only one received by the RFC thus far, Jones said, and added that the security behind the loan was worth $12,000,000, whereas the loan itself was for only $3,850,000. The company's previous earning record, including the last few years, assures its payment, he argued.

RECONSTRUCTION Finance corporation announced that, in order to encourage the construction of new homes and to assist the housing administration, it will buy and sell insured mortgages. Chairman Jones said a $10,000,000 revolving fund had been made available to the RFC mortgage company for this purpose. The mortgage company also was authorized to lend money to companies formed for the purpose of helping property owners pay taxes.

Jones also said that debt burdened school and reclamation districts have become eligible for loans. Advances to them will be on much the same principle as loans to aid drainage and levee districts in refinancing, he said. Both will be expected to compromise their debts with bondholders and then the corporation will refinance them on a lower level.

FRIENDLY diplomatic relations between the United States and Russia, established in November 1933, will not longer be maintained unless the Soviet government mends its ways and keeps its solemn pledges to prevent Communist organizations on its soil or under its control from plotting to overthrow the government of the United States. This was the warning handed to N. N. Krestinsky, assistant foreign affairs commissar of the U. S. S. R. by Ambassador William C. Bullitt in Moscow, whose note was written by direction of the Department of State in Washington.

Ambassador Bullitt

The language of the note was not quite so blunt as the above, but it did not mince words and its implications were not to be doubted. It said the United States "anticipates the most serious consequences if the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is unwilling, or unable, to take appropriate measures to prevent further acts in disregard of the solemn pledge given by it to the government of the United States."

Within two days the Soviet government replied, through Krestinsky, with a coldly worded note flatly "rejecting" the American protest. It was based on the old and more than dubious contention that the Moscow government is not and cannot be held responsible in any way for the doings of the Communist Internationale, and continued:

"Thus the statement about a violation by the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of its obligations contained in the note of November 16, 1933, does not follow from the obligations assumed mutually by both parties, in view of which I cannot accept your protest and am compelled to reject it."

Krestinsky concluded by declaring the Soviet government is striving for "further development of friendly cooperation" between the Soviet union and the United States.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, in an interview granted to the correspondent of the London Daily Mail, declared flatly:

"It should be realized without the possibility of misunderstanding that whoever applies sanctions (penalties for treaty violations) against Italy will be met by the armed hostility of our country."

The duce added that if the League of Nations voted sanctions against Italy, his country would at once leave the league.

This was enough for France, which has been sitting on the fence, trying to retain the friendship of both Italy and Great Britain. Premier Laval called the cabinet together and was empowered by it to oppose the application of sanctions by the League of Nations against Italy. He expounded to the ministers his plan to persuade the council of the league to look upon Italy's projected attack on Ethiopia as a "colonial expedition" rather than a war. This would permit the league to slide out of a situation that gravely threatens its prestige. It was understood that Laval told the cabinet England was less determined to act drastically, having realized the danger in Mussolini's stand that sanctions would mean war. He also said that the duce's agreement to present the case at Geneva indicated his desire to avoid a quarrel with the great powers or a break with the league.

So, at this writing, it appears poor Ethiopia is left to her own resources in opposing Mussolini's rapacity. His intentions were clearly stated in the interview quoted.

In reply to a direct question whether there is the slightest possibility of his changing his attitude, Mussolini replied in the negative, saying "none at all—unless Ethiopia gives in."

Opening up of the vast Ethiopian interior, he said would benefit "all civilized states." Colonization of Ethiopia by Italy would "completely fulfill all colonial aspirations of Italy."

JOHN N. WILLYS, long prominent in the automobile industry and ambassador to Poland for two years in the Hoover administration, died in New York at the age of sixty-one. He had been ill since last May when he suffered a heart attack. Mr. Willys, forced into business at eighteen by the death of his father, made his first fortune in selling bicycles. In 1908 he took over the Overland Automobile company, which was about to go into the hands of a receiver, and organized the Willys-Overland company at Indianapolis. Later he purchased the Pope-Toledo company at Toledo, Ohio, and moved the Willys-Overland plant there. He sold his automobile holdings to a syndicate in 1929, the deal involving several million dollars.

Thomas Alva Edison, Jr., eldest son of the famous inventor, died suddenly in Springfield, Mass. He was head of the research engineering department of the Edison plant at West Orange, N. J.

IN HIS radio address to the convention of Young Democrats clubs in Milwaukee President Roosevelt insisted that he was not speaking with any political motive but was saying "precisely—word for word—what I would say were I addressing a convention of the youth of the Republican party." He justified the New Deal as an intervention by government to protect and aid common men in the complex scheme of modern existence, and asserted its aim was not socialism, but regulated individualism.

Rep. Snell

Championing a philosophy of change, the President said that "rules are not necessarily sacred—principles are. The methods of the old order are not, as some would have you believe, above the challenge of youth.

"To the American youth of all parties I submit a message of confidence—unite and challenge."

Under the auspices of the Republican national committee, Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York spoke over the radio in direct reply to the President's appeal to youth—for both parties are making strenuous endeavors to capture the allegiance of the young men and women. Mr. Snell argued that a change in the Constitution abolishing rights of individual citizens would place "those who possess the power, the wealth and the cunning" in control of the government.

"Surely the youth of America," he said, "are not prepared to endorse any administration which is seeking to bring about such a condition."

JOHN G. WINANT, former governor of New Hampshire and a Republican, has been appointed chairman of the social security board, the body that will direct the part of the New Deal of which the President is proudest and which he declares is one of the outstanding social reforms in the history of the government. Mr. Winant's two associates on the board are to be Arthur J. Altmeyer of Wisconsin, who has been serving as an assistant secretary of labor, and Vincent Morgan Miles of Fort Smith, Ark., an attorney who has been associated with the Public Works administration. Each is to receive an annual salary of $10,000.

J. G. Winant

In sending his nominations to the senate the President stipulated that Winant will serve six years, Altmeyer will serve four years and Miles one year. All appointments date from last August 13 when the social security bill reached the White House.

As chairman of the new national labor relations board, operating under the Wagner act, the President named Joseph Madden, a Pittsburgh attorney. The other members appointed are John M. Carmody of New York and Edwin S. Smith of Massachusetts. J. D. Ross was nominated as a member of the securities and exchange commission, a job that it had been thought would be given to Benjamin Cohen.

APPLICATIONS for money from the four billion dollar works relief fund must be in by September 12, according to an executive order issued by the President. In addition, he directed all agencies—federal, state or municipal—to be prepared either to ask for bids or begin works operations by October 22.

The President has set November 1 as the date for putting his works program into high gear and taking all the unemployed off the relief rolls. The new orders, issued to the heads of all departments and emergency agencies, were regarded as moves to realize that goal.

JAMES A. MOFFETT has resigned as federal housing commissioner, carrying out his long expressed desire to return to private business. It was presumed in Washington that he would be succeeded by Stewart McDonald.

In his letter of resignation Mr. Moffett told the President that, despite necessary delays in getting the housing program under way, the housing administration was insuring construction and repair loans at the rate of $60,000,000 a month.

He also quoted bureau of labor statistics to show that residential building permits through the country in July had increased 214 per cent in value as compared with July, 1934. Nonresidential permits were up 18.4 per cent, he said, while alteration and repair permits had jumped 35.9 per cent.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—While congress is off the administration's hands, the courts are still on the job, and the bombardment of New Deal policies along the constitutional front may be expected to continue.

In this connection, AAA officials are confident that, with the new amendments just passed by congress, the processing taxes will be upheld. They think the objections which lower courts have found to the old processing taxes, and which lawyers generally believe will be found by the Supreme court, have been avoided.

Hence the AAA intends to do everything possible to produce a court test of the new processing taxes just as speedily as possible. AAA officials say privately that they have already picked the case on which to make the battle. It is that of the Hoosac Mills.

Washington lawyers who, no matter what their specialty, always figure that they are experts on what the Supreme court may do, and who certainly are more interested in the court than in what might be called the chores of the profession, are divided as to what will be the outcome.

Three possibilities, they admit, are open. The first is for the high court to throw the whole business out the window, holding that the assessment of such excise taxes is beyond the power of congress, in that these taxes are for a particular purpose and not for the general need of the government, and that they are not intended to produce revenue, but to achieve a desired price level.

In this case the AAA would have nowhere to turn, but there is little doubt what the administration would do. It would continue to pay farm benefits, and in January it would ask congress to levy special taxes to provide the additional revenue needed.

Or the court might, as AAA officials believe it will, uphold the whole business, which would settle the question for the time being—probably until after the next election, anyhow.

Another Possibility

But there is another possibility. The high court may decide that the processing taxes as fixed in the law are all right, but that the formula for changing them as agricultural prices approach parity is an unconstitutional delegation of power.

Most lawyers agree that the injection of this "formula" for changing the taxes as the prices of products change was a grave mistake by those desiring to avoid having the court throw the taxes out. For they contend that beyond any doubt the inclusion of this "formula" proves that the taxes are not in fact excise taxes, levied for revenue; that it proves the only object of the taxes is to bring better prices for the farmer.

Now everybody knows that this was the real object. There is no question about that. The only question is whether congress has the right to levy internal taxes for such a purpose.

No one questions that the tariff duties are levied with this end in mind. It has been a protective tariff, and not purely a revenue tariff, for a good many years. In fact, the Republicans used to win elections right along on that plea, and even when the Democrats came into power—on the tariff issue, back in Cleveland's time—there was no actual scuttling of the protective idea. It was just modified.

More than that, in recent years there has been a formula for changing these import taxes so as to equalize the difference in cost of production here and abroad.

The chief difference, the lawyers say, is that there has never been any question of the power of congress under the Constitution to levy tariffs for purposes of protection as well as revenue, but there is grave doubt as to whether congress has the right to levy excise taxes for any other than revenue purposes.

Ways of Candidates

Once a man starts thinking he may become President of the United States, something very curious happens to his mental process.

It is proverbial that this applies to his own estimates of his chances for success. Especially after he is nominated. Men who traveled on the train with James M. Cox in 1920 know that Cox thought he had an excellent chance, right up to the last, though the Harding landslide was overwhelming. But he was not alone in this. Many others on that Cox train thought so too, including some pretty hard-boiled newspaper men. Perhaps the answer to this sort of thing is that people meeting a celebrity of any sort, and certainly a man who just may become President, do not rack their brains to say disagreeable things. They like to say things that the man will remember pleasantly.

But this is not all the picture of what happens to a potential candidate—a man who thinks the lightning may strike him.

Consider the way two men who desire the Republican nomination are going about it. To wit, Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, and Colonel Knox of the Chicago Daily News.

Knox, who figured second only to Borah in the recent poll taken by Robert H. Lucas among Republican local leaders all over the country, is barnstorming as few candidates have ever done. He is going up and down the country, making speeches every time he gets a chance giving out more or less sensational interviews in between, and generally attracting all the attention he can get.

While Vandenberg has been most cautious in the senate, and is not only declining to go places and make speeches, but is refusing even to give interviews. He has recently refused to repeat his often expressed views on a certain subject for a well-known magazine —an opportunity which few senators would decline, and which Vandenberg would not decline if he were not rigidly holding himself to a cautious line of procedure.

Then Take Borah

On the other hand, Senator Borah, who probably has been talked about for President longer than any living man, and gotten less close to the nomination at convention time than anybody who ever aspired—if the roll calls of the conventions are accepted as decisive on this—acts just as though he were not interested. Right after his present boom started he proceeded to cast votes and make speeches which were calculated to alienate the conservative wing of the party. And this came at a moment when he was being considered as an excellent connecting link to weld together the two wings of the party.

Perhaps the explanation is that Borah has been talked about for President so long that he no longer takes it seriously, save in a complimentary way. Nobody knows the answer to that. People do know that he is tremendously interested in the talk. That story is true about his putting the slip of paper with "Borah for President," which a colleague put on his desk as a joke into a drawer, and then taking it out and looking at it half a dozen times within an hour. And it wasn't to figure out whose handwriting it was, either. His face, according to those who watched him, showed distinct satisfaction.

But it was not long afterward that he insurged all over the lot, casting ballots and making remarks calculated to cause cold chills down New York and New England and New Jersey spines.

"Maybe he thinks they have got to be for him, and he wants the wild boys too—so his election will be unanimous," said a cynical commentator. He recalled the story of Hoover's asking a prominent North Carolina Republican, after the 1928 election, if he would not have carried the Tar Heel state even without the religious issue.

Gets What He Wanted

Very few times in history has a President obtained a greater measure of what he wanted from his second congress than has President Roosevelt. He actually suffered no important reverses except a few having fundamentally nothing to do with his program and policies.

Critics point to the World court vote. Every President since Wilson has been for the World court, and every one—Harding, Coolidge and Hoover—failed to get anywhere with it. Due to a combination of racial groups opposing United States adherence to the court, and to widespread and firmly frozen isolationist sentiment, many senators simply do not dare to vote for it.

Critics also point to the St. Lawrence seaway treaty, which Mr. Roosevelt strongly favors, and which does impinge slightly on his program and policies in that there is a power angle.

But the power angle had nothing to do with the defeat of that treaty, nor the attitude in the senate that made it futile to attempt to bring it up again. It is purely the seaway angle that operates against ratification. Opposition comes solidly from the Atlantic coast and Gulf states, whose ports would be hurt by the diversion of deep-sea traffic to that route. There is nothing partisan about it.

Some critics also point to the votes on the death sentence of the utility holding company bill. This is not to be discounted, for the President staked his whole fight on the death sentence clause—and so did the utilities in their tremendous letter and telegram writing campaign.

Where Fight Centered

The most interesting point here, however, is that the utilities did not dare attempt to draw their battle line more to their own advantage. If they had dared make a flat fight to eliminate any possibility of the holding companies being forced out of existence, for example, that might have meant something. The whole fight between senate and house, and between the President and the house, was over whether a flat day for execution should be named, or whether discretion to commute the sentence might be vested in a commission—a commission named by the President.

The remainder of the measure is drastic, but the utilities, though denouncing it, did not make a real fight.

Plenty of lists of the legislation passed at the Roosevelt command are being printed. There is no point to repeating them here. The point is, nowhere did he fail to get pretty nearly what he wanted.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The Boston Lawrences came to California at the beginning of the gold rush, but the holdings of the family have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars. Dick Stebbins, who has been admitted to the bar, has the case against Ariel dismissed. Gail suddenly realizes that she loves Dick and not Van.

"No, thanks," Ariel began to answer steadily, but her voice shook suddenly, and her words came in a rush. "I don't want to go and have every old church-going, psalm-singing, cake-sale-making old woman in this town pointing me out," she said in a low tone. "I don't want my clothes to come from Muller's any more, I don't want sodas at Dobbins', and dances at Oddfellows' hall. I'm sick to death of this whole place, and this house, and being poor! I'm not going to stand it, either! I'm going down to Hollywood if I have to walk there, and I'm going—"

"Ah, sweetheart, you'll only make yourself ill!" Gail pleaded, close beside her now, sitting on the arm of Ariel's chair, with one arm about the younger sister's shoulders. "Don't get yourself all wrought up. Listen, darling—listen. If the Whites do give a fancy-dress party, and we give a birthday party—"

She stopped, for Ariel, looking at her with a trembling laugh of scorn, broke as suddenly into tears, and was laughing and crying in the familiar manner before any one of them could attempt to divert her. Guided by Gail, she stumbled from the room and upstairs, sobbing incoherently and now beginning to feel wretchedly sick—cold, hot, nauseated, dizzy.

Gail turned down the wide old bed and flattened the pillows; she carried a fresh nightgown to the poor little convulsed figure, kept an arm about the shaking shoulders. She lowered the shades, lighted a bead of gas, slipped the hot rubber bag comfortingly in between the old linen sheets.

And all the while her heart sang on a strengthening note, "Dick—Dick—Dick." It was good to be twenty-three, and to have Dick in the world! Gail felt that she had never been so near to Ariel, never had loved her so dearly.

And so downstairs to the dear familiar plates and lights, the peach tapioca and the blackberry punch, the eager conversation that was punctuated with laughter and supplemented by the books they always dragged in somehow, for reference or support.

"Wonderful to have it cold again!" Edith said.

"Wonderful!" Gail echoed. But it was not the autumn coolness that made her heart sing and float like a skylark. The secret was always with her, and when she forgot Dick for a second, it was delicious suddenly to remember him again. Gail had never had any feeling like this in her life before; she had never known that there was such a feeling.

"Dick," she thought. "Dick. Dick. Dick. Dick."

And at the realization that he might quite naturally come into the dining room, and sit here visibly under the rasping gaslight, she felt actually faint with ecstasy.

"You don't like Van as well as you did," Edith guessed shrewdly in the days that followed.

"No—but still I like him," Gail answered defensively.

* * * * * * *

They were in Ariel's room, and Ariel lying on her bed reading old magazines, on the Sunday afternoon following the accident. Outwardly, everything was just as usual, but Gail was conscious of changes in the air. She had been asked by Van to dinner up at the Chipps' the night before, and had declined. The thrilling prospect of shabby, quiet Dick Stebbins' company at the Lawrence house had made anything the Murchisons did or did not do unimportant.

Ariel had seemed languid and depressed, and Edith and Gail, happy in the usual sunshiny routine of beds and dishes, church and endless chatter, had been gradually infected by her mood. Gail, in a cautious undertone as they washed the breakfast dishes, had reported to Edith that Ariel had called Van Murchison on the telephone at about ten.

"I think from what she said at the telephone—she talked very low," she had resumed, "I think that he wanted her to go off somewhere to lunch with him."

"The Chipps'?"

"I couldn't tell."

"Gail, if I thought you didn't care, I'd pray about it!" Edith had said passionately. "Wouldn't it be wonderful!"

"I got a little fun out of it," Gail had analyzed the situation musingly. "I mean, I loved the excitement and knowing persons like the Chipps. But I never got—anything, really, out of Van."

"Abigail Lawrence, he adored you!"

"No, no—he liked me. I amused him. We were like two boys. Really we were," Gail had persisted, as Edith began a significant smile. "He never put his finger tip on me—he doesn't make love! Or at least he didn't to me," she had finished, thinking aloud, feeling for words.

Upstairs in Ariel's room, they reverted to the subject.

"I like Van," Gail said. "But I think he's terribly giddy."

"What would you want him to be, a priest?' Ariel demanded unsympathetically.

"Don't you have the feeling he's always laughing at everything, Ariel?"

"No," Ariel answered stubbornly, scowlingly, "I don't."

"Oh, I do," Gail said patiently.

"I want to go away, Edith and Gail," Ariel presently said quietly. "Phil can make a fuss if he wants to. Or he can help me. I don't much care. But I'm going away from Clippersville."

They looked at her sorrowfully. She had said this many times before; she had been saying it indeed since her fourteenth summer.

They Looked at Her Sorrowfully.

But this was serious. Ariel had refused to return to school after the accident. Phil had talked to Mrs. Tripp, the principal. Mrs. Tripp had put the case plainly to Phil. Ariel Lawrence had been going too fast and too far for some time. A good boarding school, at her age. . . .

This had frightened Gail and Phil. They had not mentioned it to the others, least of all, Ariel. They had no money for boarding school, even supposing that Ariel would go.

But very probably Ariel would rebel. She seemed older, harder, colder, in these few days. The events of the past week had seemed to embitter her, to accentuate her familiar impatience with Clippersville and life in it. On Saturday afternoon Gail had found her toiling over a typewritten letter, supposedly to some moving-picture concern. She had seen Ariel enclosing snapshots, presumably of herself—her beautiful little golden-headed self.

Poor little butterfly, caught in the trap of poverty, pettiness, shabbiness, and general small-town ugliness! Ariel was only one of a thousand, a million, girls, all over the country who were dreaming of Hollywood, contracts, admiration, excitement.

"She'd not mind marrying a man like Van," Gail thought. "She'd know how to manage him. She wouldn't want more than he could give! . . . We seem to be growing up pretty fast all of a sudden."

She had grown up anyway. She was a woman now, because she loved a man. It made her feel solemn, consecrated. It was quite unlike any feeling she had ever known before. Deeply, eternally, she was Dick's—for sorrow or joy, their two lives were indissolubly united.

She could even feel a little heartache for the girlhood she must leave behind her. Love, marriage, wifehood—these were solemn things. Gail experienced a premonitory pang. It was not all fun, saying good-by to being giddy, free Gail Lawrence. It was not all fun, this strangely thrilling happiness, fear, and pain that inundated her heart.

They were still gossiping and idling comfortably in Ariel's room, and the old clock in the hall had struck three in Sunday stillness, when a door slammed downstairs, and Gail, flushed and tumbled, descended to find Dick himself in the kitchen.

Going downstairs, her heart rose on wings, and she felt suffocated, but when she saw him her mood experienced a sudden chill. Dick had on the old tweeds he had bought at a sale two years ago; his pockets were full of packages.

Suddenly, seeing him so, commonplace and unexciting, in the darkened kitchen, Gail found him entirely uninteresting; her dreams melted into every day air, and she felt ashamed and confused. Dick Stebbins in one's dreams indeed! It was a desecration of their filmy fabric even to think of him in such a connection.

He glanced at her with a quiet grin as she came in. He was unloading various cans and packages from his pockets—deviled ham, cream, rolls, butter.

Gail felt as remote from him as if she had never seen him in her life before. He was nothing, nobody; she disliked him because she had made a fool of herself over him in her own soul.

"Oh, are we picnicking?" she asked blankly.

"Aren't we?" he demanded, stopping short.

Her blood rose at once. Of course they would picnic! She began to put peeled tomatoes, lettuce, fish into a deep glass jar. Dick Stebbins! Why, he was the same country boy he had always been Nice enough. The salt of the earth.

Dick came to stand beside Gail, the wrapped packages of coffee and sugar in his big hand, and she trembled and dared not look up.

They went up to the old dam, in the sweetness of the autumn afternoon, and built their picnic supper fire on the sunshiny shingle. The air was sweet with wild grapes, tarweed, and crushed grass; the scent of boiling coffee mingled with the other good odors in the hot sunset stillness. Phil sat silent, utterly content, watching a fish line, his handsome, thick Lawrence brows drawn together as he pondered something that was far away from fishing. Ariel and Van Murchison were on the shingle. Van was so close that his head almost touched her elbow; he was lying on his side, looking up at her as he talked.

Sam not being at home when the picnic expedition had started, a note had been left for him, pinned to the kitchen door. Van, arriving before Sam, had calmly read the note, and had sat down on the Lawrences' doorstep to await Sam's return. After which they had followed the others in Van's car, a circumstance that added the last touch of felicity to the occasion for Gail. She remembered her old efforts to attract Van, a few months ago, the sallies of wit, the constant attempt to amuse him.

Ariel made no such efforts—not she! She simply was, and Van trailed her helplessly, irresistibly. When Ariel went down to walk across the old boards of the dam, Van followed. When she came back, and idly began to build a little pebbly pen for the velvet-brown, yellow-bellied water dogs, Van became her enthusiastic aide. Ariel, Gail noted, did not speak much; she never did. Van did all the chattering.

The little fire burned hotly in the windless air; long shafts of sunset were striking level upon the water now; the dam was a sheet of blue satin, twinkling in the light, and slipping into exquisite jade and ultramarine shadows against the overhanging banks.

And this was the night that Phil actually got a trout—quite a big one—and the night they saw a rattler, and the night they picked the hazel nuts.

"Oh, we do have fun!" Edith commented luxuriously, lying on the flat hot stones as the meal finished.

There was silence in the group that was resting on the shingle in the dusk. A great owl floated low over the dam, and was gone; the creek rippled, rippled in the pause.

Clearing away all signs of the picnic in the fast-gathering dusk, Gail tried an experiment. Upon Dick's carrying off the coffee pot to throw the grounds away behind the trees, she rewarded him with a casual "Thank you, dear!" said in just the tone she used to Sam and Phil. Later she said again, "Take that, will you, dear?"

She couldn't remember whether she had ever called Dick "dear" before. If she had, it had not meant anything. Probably she had, for it seemed to make not the slightest impression on him tonight. If he had looked surprised she had planned to laugh quite naturally and say, "I thought I was talking to Sam!"

But there was no necessity for this explanation. Dick paid no attention to the affectionate monosyllable. Oblivious old Dick, she thought, who never dreamed that close beside him was a woman who was thrilling with love and happiness and the need for him in this wonderful hour of autumn warmth and moonshine!

They walked, singing, down the steep, rutty half mile to the cars; Gail needed a hand now; the hand that gripped her own was Dick's. She marveled that he could not feel the electric current that ran through the tips of the square, firm fingers.

Afterward she always remembered the night they went up to the dam. A hot night of moonshine and laughter and talk on the shingle above the dam.

Soon the weather changed and autumn came in, with October, in earnest. The leaves began to fall now, and the winds to blow. To Gail it was a thrilling time, this autumn filled with hints of change, of endings and beginnings. She was in love, and it was entirely different from what she had expected it to be. Far from giggles, rapture and excitement, it was a serious business; it made her feel grown up and responsible.

She could never love anyone else but Dick; it was all settled. Everything she thought now had to have him in it; the future had narrowed itself down to just Dick.

THE AMERICAN SPEAKING VOICE

THE American speaking voice is usually unlovely. So much so in fact that when one hears an exceptionally well modulated low-pitched speaking voice, it attracts attention at once. To my mind it is one phase of the human personality that broadcasts one's culture almost more than any other evident thing. One may be well groomed, and may have the manners of a Chesterfield, but when his speaking voice is heard he unconsciously brings to the fore all the cultural heritage from his family tree.

I am sure it is not because I used to sing that makes me sensitive to speaking voices, for I have conversed with singers of unusual merit whose singing voices were soft and smooth as velvet, but whose speaking voices, strange to say, were as rasping and coarse grained as their singing voices were lovely. I have heard high lyric sopranos with low heavy and unlovely speaking voices until I wondered they did not offend themselves when speaking. It is a singing master's duty to cultivate both the singing and the speaking voice. This, however, is not always done. If some of our singers and teachers of public speech suffer from the American speaking voice, what can be expected of the laity?

When traveling in foreign countries the contrast is evident, for the occidental voice carries in its every speech the tension and "high strungness" of American life and manners. We are as a nation high keyed and hurried and our life is reflected in our speech. Our modern hurry-scurry is not conducive to placidity of mind or body, so how could our speaking voice, the outward index, respond differently? Think what our children are absorbing from the noisy voices and jargons that come into our homes daily over the radio. Our sports, too, like baseball and football games, help to whack away the voices of American crowds to a pathetic degree.

It is said that the little mountain rollers, the exquisite muffled tiny canary singers of the Hartz mountains, are trained in a room far away from noise of any kind. Artist violinists, slippered in heavy felt, play with mute-violin, hour after hour for these little songsters to imitate the quality of their notes. After several weeks, the reward comes for one can hear the velvety notes of these little birds trilling and warbling "soto voce," like the hushed exquisite notes of a violin with its mute. If birds can be so trained, what could we do with our own speaking voices and those of our children?

WISHBONE VS. BACKBONE

DID you ever hear of a person having a wishbone where his backbone ought to be? It is not evident physically, but this is often the case. A little lad once said, "I'd give a hundred dollars to be a millionaire," and as the years passed by, he kept wondering through life why it had not come to pass.

In Paris there once lived a young violinist, on the top floor of a cheap pension. As a student he practiced hour after hour. His landlady had been instructed never to knock on his door, when she heard him playing. Many a time coming up the long flights with his lunch she found the first tray still untouched, and placing them side by side, she stole away softly still hearing his playing, playing, playing. He became one of earth's great artists—but it was bought with sacrifice. Do we not often say we wish we could play like an Heifitz? And yet how unwilling are we to pay the price—above $100 to be a millionaire!

"Effort is the price of everything." Oftentimes with effort comes sacrifice, which is the basic rock of appreciation and achievement in life. We appreciate and achieve only as we are willing to sacrifice. That was the secret of the striving of the Pilgrim Fathers and Mothers. Love of ease has turned many a brave heart soft.

A university student at examination time prepared his room for study. He chose the lounging chair with pillows and soft shaded lighting. On a tilted stand he laid his book at the angle easiest for him to read and turned the radio on. He started to study. Started, to be sure, but got no farther, for he fell asleep. Love of ease had conquered him. His backbone grew soft and he soon found himself wishing he could pass his finals like some other men of his class. He became a mental invalid as far as study was concerned.

The world is turning a slow curve, but it is turning. The time has passed when one rich man's son may nonchalantly spend three millions on his own pleasure yacht for his own selfish soul. Our children shall live to see the time when young men living on unearned money will not hold the center of the stage, to be envied, as scions of wealth, whether it comes by stock-marketing or inheritance. Honor must come through their own effort and achievement.

Our country needs men and women of backbone, who as yet, are far outnumbered by those of wishbone. GO is the start to GOAL.

DIFFERENT AMOUNTS OF LIGHT NEEDED

A survey shows that 22 per cent of children finishing grade school have damaged eye sight. When they have finished college, 40 per cent are so affected. At age forty, 65 per cent suffer from visual defects. And at age sixty, 95 per cent have eye defects.

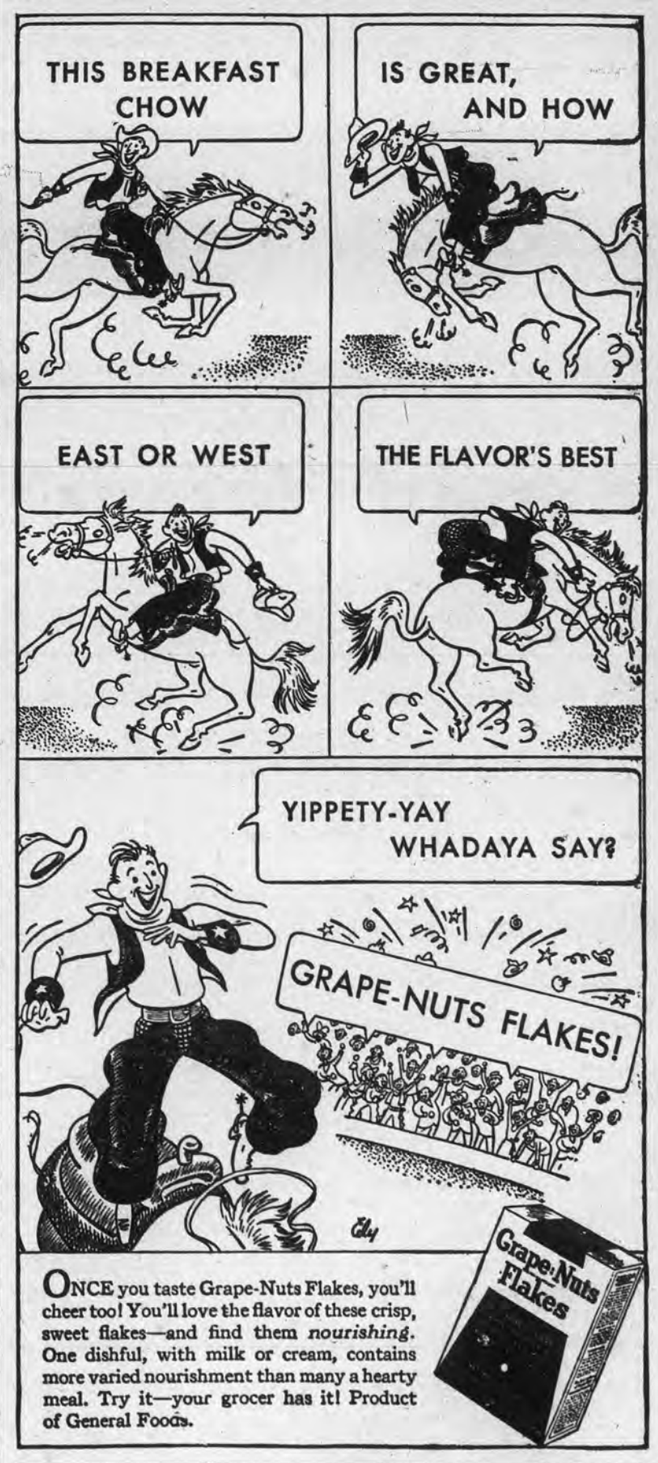
This regrettable increase in eye troubles is in many instances caused by eye strain resulting from reading, studying, sewing at night with poor light and not enough light.

Science measures light in terms of foot-candles. A foot-candle is the amount of light one standard candle shines on a surface one foot away.

For seeing one's way around and performing ordinary tasks which do not require seeing very small objects, 5 foot-candles is sufficient. For reading coarse print and large stitch sewing, you can get along with 10 foot-candles. For continued reading of ordinary print, or doing ordinary sewing, you need at least 20 foot-candles. For reading fine print and fine sewing, you require 30 foot-candles, or more.

Your light may look bright, but it is the illumination you get on your work that saves your eyes from strain; and this diminishes rapidly the farther away you are from your lamp.

Seated with your paper or work 8 feet away from your lamp, it will require a light of at least 275 candlepower to produce the 30 foot-candles needed to be certain your eyes have enough light to do their work without danger of strain and permanent injury.



If you use electricity, your light company will recommend the right size bulbs to use.

If your home is not wired, one of the new 300 candlepower kerosene or gasoline pressure mantle lamps will supply plenty of "live" natural light for every home need. It takes the pressure to give you all the light you should have.

Beggars' School Efficient

A new school for beggars was discovered by the police at Brno, the leading town of Moravia. Complete courses were organized. Lessons were given in make-up and the faking of deformities. Heart-touching "patter" was taught. The school had 14 pupils, all boys. The two teachers took half of the daily "collections" as tuition fees.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

It is related that a Sunday School teacher once asked a class of little ones, "Who were the three wise men?" Whereupon a small boy piped up and answered: "Stop, Look, Listen!".

The story may not be true—but rather appropriate at this season when little ones are trudging off to school, and thoughtless motorists are carelessly exceeding speed limits and passing by all caution signs. A bit of wisdom exercised now may save a little life. Your TIME cannot be as valuable as the LIFE of one of these. To Stop, Look and Listen does not cost anything and Accidents which could have been avoided are often times very expensive.

New faces are appearing on the streets in Columbiana as school opens, and a number of changes are noted: Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Childs, of Piedmont, have moved to Columbiana, and Mr. Childs will assume his official duties on Monday morning as Principal of Shelby County High School.

R. S. Hosmer, of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, a University of Alabama graduate, will be Athletic Director, and Miss Effie Woodham, of Geneva, Alabama, will teach Mathmematics. Miss Mary Peters, English; Miss Elizabeth Bell, Science; Joe Stone, Agriculture; Miss Mildred Meroney, Home Economics; and Miss Vivian Nix, Musical Director.

Elementary teachers for the Grammar School include: Misses Irene and Gertrude Bishop, Mrs. Lillie Mae McKnight, Miss Herminone Wooley, Mrs. C. E. Niven and Mrs. L. C. Taylor.

While happily greeting new comers this week in Columbiana, and extending them a cordial welcome to "Your Little Main Street And Mine", we have been regretfully saying "Goodbye" to our neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Pratt Houston and their daughter, Mildred.

It is easy enough to say how we love new friends and what we think of them, but words can never trace out all the fibres that knit us to the old, so we pause right here to send our personal good wishes to this happy little trio, who will make their future home in Calera, Alabama, where Mrs. Houston has been transferred by the Southern Bell Telephone Company, and will become Manager of the Central office.

Mrs. Houston's 17 years of faithful service to patrons of Herr Bell's trick invention, her patience and her untiring efforts warrant whatever this Company might have in store for her which would mean PROMOTION.

Mr. Houston is a finished Electrician, well liked, and will be sincerely missed in business and civic circles of the town.

Mildred Houston is one of the most popular member of the Junior High School set, and an Operator of the Telephonic Keyboard of numbers herself, her Mother having taught her baby fingers to fly correctly over the intricate board since she was about 8 years of age.

Marking the leaving of this worthwhile family, a Shower of loving gifts, remembrances typifying the spirit in which the Houston's are regarded in Columbiana, were presented. A postal shower was tendered Mrs. Houston by the ladies of the town, and Mrs. Dick Holcombe entertainied on Friday night for Mildred Houston with a Gift Shower from the Junior Class members of the High School. So, with FRIENDS who will never forget them, to speed them on their way, this happy little family left Columbiana on Saturday to take up their new official duties in our neighboring town, Calera.

Charles MeHaffey, of Montevallo, Director of the 'Bama Skippers Orchestra, and prominent young business man, spent last week in Columbiana serving on the Jury. While in town, Mr. MeHaffey called by the Democrat office, and we acknowledge his thoughtful, personal interest in our journalistic enterprise with a great deal of gratitude.

We are also happy to announce that our good friend, Mrs. Watson, of Montevallo, who greets us in such a happy way at the Strand Theatre, is improving rapidly after undergoing a serious operation in Birmingham last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Grady Looney, of Montgomery, are visiting friends and relatives in Columbiana, where they formerly resided.

Mr. and Mrs. Ehney Camp have named their young daughter Patricia. We are eagerly awaiting her first visit to Columbiana. She will probably affectionately be called "Patsy" —and doubtless be as universally loved in Columbiana as was her "Dad", and prophesying further, we shall say that we hope she will be as pretty as her Mother and as charmingly gracious. Her future success would then be assured.

Richard Ozley, popular member of the college set, and a boy whom everybody likes and predicts a successful future for, left Sunday to accept a responsible position with the Southern Supply Furniture Company in Selma, Alabama. Selma gains a valuable citizen in "Dick", and while we personally send across the miles every good wish for a brilliant business career, we shall miss him and his many thoughtful, spontaneous kindnesses to us while here in Columbiana. Happy landing, Dick—and hurry back to see us—!

Mrs. Joel Chandler, after a delightful visit in North Carolina, has returned to her home in Columbiana.

Miss Louise Ellis, who has made an enviable record in Seatone, N. C., as Camp and Recreational Director, has returned to Columbiana, and within the next few days will leave for Lanette, where she will again have charge of the Physical Education Department in the schools of this place.

Miss Beth Wallace left Columbiana, Sunday, to accept a position in the Sylacauga City Schools.

Miss Bertha Ellis has accepted a position to teach in Carbon Hill, Alabama, and has left Columbiana to begin her work in this locality.

Miss Martha Gallatin and Miss Allen, of Ashland, were week-end visitors in Columbiana.

Dr. and Mrs. H. T. Hamner, of Camp Hill, Alabama, were week-end guests of their daughter, Mrs. Myra Hamner Miles.

Mrs. Will Parker is visiting relatives in Indianapolis. Miss Dorothy Parker is vacationing in Gulfport, Miss., and in Isabella, Tenn. They will return to Columbiana in November.

Mrs. Howard Whittaker, Mrs. Lida Wood, Margaret Freeman Wood and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wood were among the Columbiana guests at the Smith-Batson wedding solemnized in Wilsonville on Saturday morning.

Franklin Norris, Radio Engineer de luxe, has accepted a position with WJBY, Gadsden, Alabama. Mr. Norris is well equipped to handle any phase of radio work, as he has made an especial study of technical radio requirements for the past 8 years. He is a licensed operator and Shelby County citizens will watch with pride his successful rise in the radio world.

Mrs. W. L. Farley, of Birmingham, is visiting her sister, Miss Lena Cox.

Felton Goodwin, of Birmingham, member of the Internal Revenue official force, spent the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Goodwin.

Yeager Horn has accepted a position with the State License Collecting Department.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats will meet their regular dance engagement at the Airport on next Saturday night.

The Rev. Albert Bowen, of Geneva, Alabama, returned Missionary from China, is visiting the Rev. and Mrs. T. K. Roberts in Columbiana, and assisting Mr. Roberts in a series of meetings he is holding in Shelby.

Mr. Carl Groubie has bought out the Columbiana Hardware Company, and his many friends in Columbiana will be delighted to hear of this acquisition. Mr. and Mrs. Groubie, since moving to Columbiana several months ago, have made themselves valuable citizens by their cooperative spirit manifested on many civic, social and religious occasions.

Mr. Tidwell, Principal of the Montevallo High School, was a cordially welcomed visitor to the Democrat office on Monday. Mr. Tidwell has spent a busy summer serving as a member of the faculty of efficient instructors in the adult school held in Alabama College during the past five weeks in which he taught the interesting subject, Social Science.

Miss Hazel Ruth Swann has returned from an extended vacation in Mobile, Alabama, and enthusiastically agrees to sponsor the Kiddies Kolumn for us next season. Many requests have been received for the reinstatement of this feature edited by the school children of Shelby County, and we happily extend to you "Kiddies" your own little corner again, to be used for your original ideas and their promotion. We invite every school child in the county to take a part in this section, and tell us all about your scholastic activities. Vacation days are over and the more serious days of study are here. Let us have a letter from you next week. We shall be "waiting for the postman."

Dr. E. P. Lightcap, prominent dentist of New York City, and former resident of Columbiana, is visiting his father, Dr. D. S. Lightcap. Dr. Lightcap states he likes New York "in a way," but there is no place like the South for a Southerner, and he was delighted to be back among the cotton fields of his native State.

Representative R. A. Reid of Montevallo spent Saturday in Columbiana. Mr. Reid states he thinks the Legislature will adjourn within the next three weeks.

W. L. Longshore, attorney of Birmingham, spent Monday in Columbiana transacting legal business in the Criminal Court.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that we again welcome Dr. and Mrs. H. T. Hamner of Camp Hill to our circle of weekly readers of the Democrat. A renewal subscription for the third consecutive year, makes us believe we have our own little nook in their happy household, and we enjoy our journalistic visit each week.

Frow Hollywood, California, comes also a request that the DEMOCRAT fly across the continent and enter the attractive salon of Mrs. Blossom Black, formerly of Wilsonville, now one of the most called for "Make Up Artists" of the Metro Goldwyn Mayer Studios.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wyatt of Longview were hosts at a reunion of their relatives on Sunday when they entertained in honor of the O'Hare family of Sherman, Texas, who are visiting friends and relatives in Shelby County—their former home. Among those present who enjoyed the days outing and the bounteous dinner served were: Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hale, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Wyatt, James Wyatt, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Wyatt, Miss Sarah Mattie Wyatt, Henry, Robert, Neil, Ralph, Ray Lane Wyatt Mrs. C. H. Wyatt, Mrs. Hobart Wyatt, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Wyatt and daughter, Mattie Lou of Siluria; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wyatt and daughter, Betty Faye Hubert Wyatt of Longview, and Mrs. Mattie Wyatt of Birmingham,Mr. and Mrs. Roland Hale, of Minooka, Mrs. Jewel Hale Peters of Birmingham, Mr. ad Mrs. Neil Hale and Barbara Jean of Birmingham, Mr. Lyndall Hale of Siluria, Mrs. John Brown, Birmingham, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Davidson and son, Dick, Helena; Mrs. Joe Betts and son, Robert Earle, Birmingham, Mr. and Mrs. Ronda Pitts and daughter, Barbara Ann, Birmingham, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. McClanahan and Harvey McClanahan, of Anniston, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Pitts of Coluwbiana, Miss Era Pitts, Joe Williams and Mrs. Nathan Pitts and son, John Brewton of Columbiana.

Here is a perfectly good "Believe-It-Or-Not" story which Ripley would covet. Our good friend, C. E. Niven, Postmaster, dropped by the office this morning and showed us a label on a package sent from Fort Peck, Montana, mailed on last Saturday, with no address, other than the street address of the sender. No indication as to whom the package was to be delivered or where. Jit Taylor, clerk, recognized the street address belonged to a former resident of Columbiana, now residing in Montana, and the sister of Mrs. Grace Carter. He took the "blank-addressed" package to Mrs. Carter who verified the fact that she was the rightful one to receive same. Just how this package travelled from Fort Peck to Columbiana, minus an address, and was delivered to the person for whom it was intended, is—well—just one of those things that happen on "Main Street" in Columbiana. It could not have happed anywhere else in the world. We are "just funny that way".

Off in the Mountains
Communists Would Weep
Congress Goes Home
Disobedient Twice

McCLOUD, CALIF.

This is far off in the mountains; telegraph office closed, you feel like an incurable "shut-in." But Jack Adams is here, an old-time telegrapher who can make a message go from anywhere to anywhere, and find wires to carry it. He will "dig up" Percy Thomas, another old-time telegrapher in the Universal Service office in San Francisco, 350 miles down the coast, and this unimportant message will go to many newspapers in many cities, just as though it were news from Ethiopia, or some dear little Hollywood lady's explanation of what caused her to separate from "Jack, but we are, and always shall be, the best of friends."

Arthur Brisbane

This is a city that would make a good Communist gnash his teeth, shatter them, hurry to Lenin's tomb, mumble Marxian prayers and butt his head against the walls of the Kremlin.

First, the whole city belongs to the lumber company. Nobody else owns or can own a house or any other property.

But no worker is idle, rents are low, prices in the company store are lower than in any big city, and for mountain climbing your narrator bought wonderful heavy socks, striped alternately red, white and blue, patriotic enough to make a true Communist mount his soap box and ask the crowd, if any, what the world is coming to.

It is good news that congress has gone home at last, really and truly gone home to stay, heaven permitting, until early next year.

Until the fire is out, and you count the furniture carried out on the lawn, you cannot know just what the fire has done to you. This session of congress seems to have been a pretty good fire. The San Francisco Examiner tells you that congress spent, in its short life, just $10,256,258,928.06, or, spelled out, ten billions two hundred and fifty-six millions two hundred and fifty-eight thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight dollars and six cents. Who do you suppose got the six cents?

Congress disobeyed the President only twice in the session. The senate refused to put this country in the World court. Can you imagine what that World court would do to us now, in connection with this Ethiopian marauding expedition?

Second, congress, in both houses, overrode the supposed wish of the President by passing a neutrality resolution, making it mandatory for the President to forbid shipments of ammunition to any nation at war.

Ethiopian rains are ending for this year and Mussolini is ready to go shopping for African land. France and England, now virtuously indignant, have taken almost everything, but the cool, high tablelands of Ethiopia offer good territory for Italians.

To other nations Mussolini says: "Keep your hands off unless you want a war in Europe. Let me do my fighting in Africa. Know when you are well off." He knows that France wants no war; that England, still digesting the anaconda supper of the last war, could not send her young men to war, even if she were foolish enough to want war. The young men would not fight.

You know, now, why Mussolini assembled half a million fighting men, that could not possibly be needed for an Ethiopian foray that airships can attend to. He wanted Europe to know that he was ready for a real war if anybody wanted it.

California's vigilante attack on extreme radicals is thoroughly organized, under a central command, with details of handpicked rifle marksmen, intelligence squads, and strong armed squads.

The American Civil Liberties union will bring suit on behalf of alleged Communists, tarred and feathered, and offers $1,000 reward for the conviction of any vigilant of felony.

The vigilantes declare their intention to wear no masks or disguise, saying, "We shall pick up our men in broad daylight. The whole country is behind us."

More interesting than anything in the northern part of California, only 50 miles from the Oregon border, is tall, snow-covered Mount Shasta, rising toward the sky more than 14,000 feet.

When you travel be sure to visit that mountain. You will find it worth while. All around its foot the great pines and firs are crowding, as though seeking refuge and protection from the giant sawmill and its 1,200 men that eat trees by the hundreds of thousands every year.

New! Fur Coat and Woolen Ensemble

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

'TIS THRILLING events which are casting their shadows before via an entirely new type of ensemble which works dress and lining of smart woolen in conjunction with coats of handsome fur into the 'nth degree of swank. Watch the excitement when once the college girl glimpses this sort of costume which is entirely new in the field.

It's this way, the woolens for fall are absolutely irresistible. Yielding to the lure of the perfectly fascinating new wool weaves and sensing untold possibilities in their use manufacturers of fur coats are playing up the idea of lining their garments with gay plaids and checks or a novelty woolen of some sort or other.

To be explicit, the new costume scheme, which is taking the world of fashion by storm, lines a chic fur coat with the same stunning woolen as makes the dress or skirt, with matching gilet that completes the ensemble. As soon as the first chilly autumn winds blow you will see this type of costume crowding the landscape for daytime wear in town, in country, on campus, in the grandstand or for travel whether you go by train, boat, auto or airplane.

The coats may be hip length, fingertip length or three-quarter or seven-eighth, just so it is always somewhat shorter than the accompanying woolen skirt, so that some fraction of the skirt shows below, thus co-ordinating the ensemble even when the coat is buttoned tight and only a scarf, the collar lining or the gilet top shows above the fur.

The coats of these costumes are versatile, although generally speaking they are fashioned on swagger lines. A dashing figure they cut, when left unfastened to fly out "accidentally on purpose" when in motion so as to artfully show off their smart gay linings. Furs of most intriguing type are employed so as to dramatize the picture. Favored pelts include snowflake, nutria, sheared panther, gray or beige kidskin and various spectacular spotted furs.

The illustration presents the new wool-and-fur ensemble idea in two versions selected from any number of equally as fascinating models, as worked by high-style designers. For football weather the costume, as pictured to the left, is sure to satisfy the style aspirations of any co-ed sophisticated as ever she may be. This swagger coat of sheared panther is lined with green plaid woolen which is firm of texture yet light in weight. It is identical to that used for the two-piece sports tailleur that completes the ensemble. Blown back by the wind, the charm of the costume is enhanced when the coat lining flashes its note of color. The neckline of the tailored suit jacket of wool weave is mannish in line with its notched lapels. The sports hat of smart off-face type is of felt in a dark green to harmonize with the wool plaid of the suit.

The girl standing to the right is ready to step into her open car and drive to the football game, serene in the knowledge that she will be comfortable, plus modish, all day and all evening during the drive home, no matter how suddenly the temperature may drop. For this beautifully styled outfit of supple kid-skin is worked on dressmaker lines together with a checked rabbit woolen black and maize for the wrap-around skirt and also as it appears in the lining of the wide flaring collar on the Eton jacket top and as it is glimpsed at the wristline of the bell sleeves. Her cap is of kidskin with a sporty pointed visor down over the forehead at the right side.

SMART BLACK

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Among best-dressed women sentiment is increasing for smart, refined, "classy" black for daytime wear. Just now, for midseason days, quality-kind sheers that are exquisitely fashioned are first choice. The very newest models have belts of gilt leather with neckwear styled of matching gold kidskin. If not gilt leather collar and cuffs, then gold clips or other items of gold jewelry are worn. At any rate there should be a touch of color to relieve from somberness. In the picture, Jean Tennyson, beautiful blond grand opera songstress, expresses favor for black in that she is wearing a dress of handsome black wool crepe with jabot of colorful silk print to provide the desired color accent. The perky Breton sailor hat, slippers and envelope bag are of shiny black patent leather.

Gray Felt

A smart new felt hat by Patou for sports wear is of soft gray felt, and shaped like a man's fedora.

AUTUMN BERETS IN UNFAMILIAR FORMS

It being customary to rush headlong into a new season, it will be the fall hats that make their first appearance, and among them are the familiar berets in unfamiliar forms and drapes. In current displays many French milliners are represented as designers of beret. Among the variations of this silhouette, Mlle. Marthe introduces a model with a close back and kettle edge lifted front section, of brown felt, supplemented by a shallow crown part of sectioned belting.

Other silhouettes include the small and the large, shallow Breton, and several versions of the brimmed sports hat of classic type. In addition, there is a pillbox with side bow and veil from Patou.

Other models not of the beret movement have a tendency to crowns that are deeper back than front, and to buckles and other metal ornaments.

Air-Conditioned Frock Is Newest Note in Fashions

The newest fashion contribution of this stream-lined age is the air-conditioned frock.

You've seen it in summer sports things—the porous mesh fabrics tested for air resistance. Now the same term is applied to a group of fall frocks presented in an advance showing, and designed for comfort.

The "air conditioning" consists of light weight, lacy woolen fabrics and openwork devices in waists and sleeves.

A sheer woolen fabric like georgette is a favorite for fall sports clothes, tailoring beautifully and having the necessary warmth without bulk, for the first days of fall.

Bishop Sleeves

Fullness introduced with shirring and smocking is being used on new dresses. Full bishop sleeves shirred in at the top and the cuff are most flattering.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for September 8

LYDIA AND PRISCILLA

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:11-15; 18:1-3, 24-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her works praise her in the gates.—Proverbs 31:31.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Meeting Out of Doors.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Meeting by the River Side.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Serving God in Our Daily Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Women in Industrial Life.

The central teaching of this lesson does not so much concern Christian women in industrial life as it does the gospel of Christ finding them while in the pursuit of their chosen callings.

I. The Conversion of Lydia (Acts 16:11-15).

So far as recorded, she was the first convert in Europe and in a real sense hers is a typical conversion. Observe the steps therein.

1. Attendance at the place of prayer (v. 13). There being no synagogue here, the accustomed place of prayer was at the river side. The accustomed place today is the church. However, the worship of God is not restricted to set places.

2. Listening to the preaching of the Word of God (v. 14). Paul took advantage of the opportunity afforded him by the assemblage of this group of devoted women to preach Christ to them. He was always alert and prized highly the opportunity to tell the people about Christ.

3. Her heart was opened by the Lord (v. 14). The individual may place himself near to the means of grace and the preacher may preach the Word of God, but there is no hope of salvation till the heart is opened by the Lord (John 6:44, 45. While the salvation of everyone is dependent upon this sovereign act of God, yet we can be sure that he is willing at all times to do this for those who place themselves in the way of saving grace.

4. She was baptized (v. 15). The ordinance of baptism follows belief in Christ. The invariable rule in the early church was for believers to be baptized. While there is no salvation in the water of baptism, yet hearty obedience should be rendered in this respect.

5. She brought her household to Christ (v. 15). This was as it always should be.

6. Her expression of gratitude (v. 15). She thus showed signs of the new life in showing gratitude to those who had been instrumental in her conversion by constraining them to share the hospitality of her home.

II. Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth (Acts 18:1-3).

1. Why there (v. 1). They were expelled from Rome by the cruel edict of Claudius against the Jews.

2. What they were doing (v. 3). Though recently arrived, they had already settled down to the pursuit of their trade, the making of tents.

3. Paul finding a home (v. 3). While carrying on an evangelistic campaign in Corinth and needing work for his support, he found a job at his trade in the shop with Aquila and Priscilla. It was perhaps as he plied the needle that he related to his fellow workmen the wonderful story of his salvation.

4. Valued helpers to Paul. He more than found a home with them; he found priceless fellow-helpers of the gospel. This was a most devoted couple. They are never mentioned separately.

III. Aquila and Priscilla Instructing Apollos (Acts 18:24-28).

Having been instructed by Paul, they were able not only to discern Apollos' lack of understanding of the gospel but to expound to him the way of God more perfectly. Here is a case where an eloquent preacher and mighty in the Scriptures was perfected in instruction by a humble couple of manual laborers.

IV. Aquila and Priscilla Were Active Christian Workers (Rom. 16:3).

Perhaps because of business success they occupied a place of prominence in the community, but they were preeminently known as zealous workers for Christ.

V. Aquila and Priscilla Endangered Their Lives for Paul (Rom. 16:4).

They seemed at some critical time to have endangered their lives for Paul's sake. They were so loyal to Paul that they are described as having been actually martyred for him.

VI. Aquila and Priscilla Had a Sanctified Home (Rom. 16:5).

When poverty and persecution made the house of worship impossible, the home of this godly couple became the meeting place of the saints. A private home may be made a sacred edifice and is so indeed when the saints gather there to worship God.

Work

Do your work—not just your work and no more, but a little more for the lavishing's sake; that little more which is worth all the rest. And if you suffer as you must, and if you doubt as you must, do your work. Put your heart into it and the sky will clear. Then out of your very doubt and suffering will be born the supreme joy of life.—Dean Briggs.

True Wisdom

True wisdom is to know what is best worth while.—Humphreys.

"Sunburst" Collar and Cuff Set for Fall

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

This Collar and Cuff set is quite a departure from the many models shown in open net work. The solid work gives the pieces more definite form and very little starching is necessary to hold the shape. Collar and Cuff sets are going to add attraction to fall dresses more than they did last spring so a little time given your crochet now will find you ready when the season makes its change.

Package No. 711 contains sufficient white Mountain Craft crochet cotton to complete this three piece set. Complete instructions and set illustrated on a model are also included.

Send 25 cents and you receive this package by mail postpaid. Instructions and illustrations will be mailed for 10 cents.

Address Home Craft Co., Dept. B., Nineteenth and St. Louis Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Aircraft and Radio Assist in Battle on Forest Fires

Increasing use is being made of radio and aircraft in protecting state and national forests from fire, says the forest service of the United States Department of Agriculture. Both airplane and radio aided in apprehending a firebug from the air, in a case recently reported by the New York conservation department.

A man was seen starting a forest fire by Albert Leo-Wolf, forest-patrol plane pilot. He reported by radio and later located his man at a nearby cabin. This information also was radioed, resulting in the arrest, conviction, and sentence of the firebug.

Approximately 1,000 radio sets for emergency communication in national forests are in use this year. They include several types developed for forest use by forest service technicians. Many of them are of a "featherweight" type that can be carried and quickly set up by "smoke-chasers" at the scene of a fire. Airplanes are being used in several of the national-forest regions for fire scouting, reconnaissance of "going" fires, and for emergency transportation of men and supplies.

THREE PATENTED CONSTRUCTION FEATURES MADE THIS NEW GROUND GRIP TIRE POSSIBLE

THE new Firestone Ground Grip Tire is the greatest traction tire ever built. It has 54% more tread rubber to give your car, truck, tractor and farm implements the greatest traction ever known.

Gum-Dipping, the Firestone patented process which soaks every cord in liquid rubber, makes it possible for this tire to stand the terrific strains and stresses of the extra pulling power. Firestone Tires are the only tires built that are Gum-Dipped.

The tread is built of extra tough rubber and designed with deep grooves between scientifically placed cross bars, giving super-traction and long wear. Firestone Ground Grip Tires are self-cleaning. (Chains are not needed.) The bars of the rubber are so placed that they will not bump on paved roads, giving you easier riding and longer wear.

READ WHAT FARMERS SAY ABOUT THEIR SAVINGS WITH FIRESTONE GROUND GRIP TIRES

TEXAS . . . Mr. C. W. Wardlow, McKinney, Texas, writes: "Approximately 28% saving in fuel, and 38% more acres worked each day, and am able to go through any kind of 'tough going' due to your new tread design on the Ground Grip Tires."

OHIO . . . Mr. G. I. Henning of West Salem, Ohio, writes: "Want you to know the effectiveness of your pneumatic tire on our binder—it saves time, we cut grain faster, it is easy on the man riding on the binder and now we never have to stop to tighten up bolts."

SOUTH DAKOTA . . . Chris S. Anderson, Badger, S. D., says: "I like Firestone Tires because the tractor runs easier, uses less fuel, travels faster and hauls larger loads."

NEBRASKA . . . Dr. C. E. Larsen of Tilden, Nebraska, writes: "I purchased a set of your new Ground Grip Tires about two months ago for my coupe . . . I have not been able to stick this car in mud since they were put on and they have already saved me three sets of chains and I would not be without them if they cost double what you charge."

IOWA . . . Mr. H. Elsbury of Sutherland, Iowa, writes: "With Firestone Tires on my McCormick Deering Tractor and Separator I have taken in over $100 from farmers I could not reach with other wheels."

See your nearest Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Tire Dealer and let him show you how the new line of Ground Grip Tires will save time and money on your farm. Remember, there is also a complete line of Firestone Auto Supplies for your automobile needs.

Little Jimmie Hendrie is spending this week in Brent.

Miss Lucile Stripling, of Anniston, is spending this week with her sister, Mrs. Raymond Conway.

Miss Nell Sanders and T. M. McCulley were visitors in Birmingham Monday.

Miss Louise Sanders visited friends in Boothton Wednesday.

Mrs. O. C. Ambrose spent Monday in Montevallo as the guest of her mother, Mrs. W. L. Brown.

Bobby Cleary will return home Sunday after spending a month in Boligee as the guest of his aunt, Mrs. W. P. Brew.

Ehney and Russell Ambrose are guests this week of R. E. Ambrose in Atlanta, Georgia.

A. L. Milstead was hurt Saturday while switching cars in Aldrich. Mr. Milstead fell from the cars while they were moving. He was given first aid by Dr. E. G. Givhan and then carried to St. Vincent Hospital in Birmingham.

Again Wilton had need for a well trained efficient organization of civic volunteers, when the home of Mr. John Carter burned last Sunday afternoon, and as usual the Wilton Boy Scouts were on hand to fill the bill. Although the Scouts did not arrive in time to save the house, they immediately organized themselves and others, in bucket brigades from nearby wells, and by their efforts saved several cords of wood, and about ten tons of coal until the fire truck arrived from Montevallo. It was an inspiration to see the Scouts going about their jobs smoothly and efficiently, obeying instantly their Patrol leaders and Scoutmaster. Wilton is proud of this organization that has served so faithfully for the past two years. The Scouts present were: James Fancher, Will Little, Winston Hogan, Fred Adams, J. W. Ward, Jack Fancher, Earl Beasley, Bud Milstead, Buren Canant, Clay Lucas and Robert Beane.

Bethel Community In For Guessing Contest

There will be a guessing contest held for the people of the Bethel Community at the Future Farmers of America Chilean Nitrate Demonstration Saturday morning at 10:00 o'clock, September 14th. All people that are familiar with the demonstration near the McGowen old school house place are invited to come and turn in their estimate of the yield on the fertilized and unfertilized plots. The person guessing closest the yield of cotton on these plots will receive a cash prize of $2.00. The cotton was fertilized alike on all plots at planting, the only difference being due to the side dressing of soda the cotton received at the second plowing. We are anxious for the people to see this cotton because the plots carries a valuable lesson on the value of nitrogen in a cotton fertilizer.

Shelby County High School Opens Sept. 9

The Shelby County High School opened on Monday morning, and Principal Childs held an organization meeting at which time about 225 pupils were enrolled, and classifed.

Friday morning, a formal opening will be held in the Auditorium, at which time the public is cordially invited to be present. An appropriate program is being arranged.

SILURIA BASEBALL TEAM IS WINNER OF LEAGUE PENNANT

On Sunday afternoon, one of the most enthusiastic games of baseball was played on the Siluria diamond, between Columbiana and Siluria teams—these teams having the highest game scores made during the past season.

The first half of the series of games played, was won by Columbiana. The Siluria team then stepped in to cop the honor of winning the last half of the series, and also won the play off game by a score of seven to five.

Cecil and Donald Faulkner were batteries for Columbiana, and Scott and Caton for Siluria.

This game ended the series of interesting games which have been arranged throughout the Summer months.

CHECK OF 12-CENT LOANS IS STARTED BY STATE BOARD

AUBURN, Ala.—The State Allotment Board here will immediately forward to the 67 counties of the state a list of farmers who obtained 12-cent cotton loans in 1934 and agreed to cooperate in the adjustment program in 1935 to be checked against a list of farmers who actually cooperated in 1935, announces W. H. Robertson, member of the board.

"If it is found a farmer obtained a 12-cent loan in 1934 and did not sign a 1935 contract and perform same, his loan will be due," Robertson said when reporting that the board has just received a list of the 12-cent loan borrowers.

Mr. Robertson reports also that the board is checking compliance sheets as fast as they are received from counties in order to expedite issuance of the second benefit payment checks to cotton growers.

The allotment board has just completed issuing tax exemption certificates to about 330,000 Alabama farmers and is handling a few late applicants, Robertson said.

Huge Sum Being Spent For Rural Power Lines

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—In connection with the Company's rural electrification program, Mr. T. W. Martin, President of Alabama Power Co., today, made the following statement:

"On May 22nd last, we filed with Mr. Morris Llewellyn Cooke, Rural Electrification Administrator, Washington, application for approximately $1,400,000 with which to construct 850 miles of rural lines in Alabama. This application is still pending. Meanwhile the Company has begun construction of approximately 400 miles of these lines at an estimated cost of $555,000, located in 37 counties in the State, and they should be completed within a period of seven to nine months. The Company is now serving rural customers in every county in the State except two, and the present construction is merely an extension of the program on which the Company has been engaged in its effort over the past fifteen years to extend electric service to rural areas of the State."

State Income Tax More Than Double

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Chiefly because of the sharp increase in collection of escaped taxes, the State Tax Commission so far this year has collected $618,509 in income taxes as compared with a total of $307,987 for the 12 months of 1934, Commissioner Long announced last Monday.

Mr. Long predicted that collections will pass the $1,000,000 mark by the end of this year.

Fatal Car Wrecks Declining In U. S.

The trend of fatal traffic accidents this year is downward, according to latest reports covering the nation. Each of the first five months of the year with the exception of March, showed a decrease as compared to the same month last year, and the total for the tabulated period of this year is 550 less than the number in 1934.

ALABAMA COLLEGE STUDENTS NUMBER HIGHEST IN 6 YEARS

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — With the largest advance registration in the past six years, the fortieth session at Alabama College began September 9 with registration of freshmen.

Events of the school year were opened Saturday afternoon with a meeting of the faculty in Palmer Hall. The following new faculty members were presented: Miss Mildred Irene Boliek, Assistant Professor of Biology; Dr. Lee M. Brooks, Professor of Sociology; Miss Alexina Demouy, Assistant Professor of English; J. H. Henning, Assistant Professor of Speech; Miss Katherine Hewins, Professor of Sociology; Miss Lina Louise Hodges, Training School faculty; York Kildes, Assistant Professor of Violin; Miss Edith Lindberg, Instructor in Physical Education; Miss Lenice Vaughan, Instructor in History and Economics; and B. W. Collins, Training School faculty.

Saturday evening Dean and Mrs. T. H. Napier entertained at a reception for the faculty, honoring President and Mrs. A. F. Harman.

The Y. W. C. A. Vesper Services Sunday began the orientation program, for which a number of upperclassmen returned early to assist in arrangements for the new students. The first week will be filled with a series of entertainments for the freshmen, who will complete their registration Tuesday. Other students will register through Thursday, when the first classes are to be held. Committees of the Student Government Association, the Senate, the Y. W. C. A., the President's Council, the Athletic Board and the Publication Board are cooperating in the orientation plans.

The annual Student Senate Party, a reception by the local churches, a stage presentation entitled "Echoes of College Night," a Y. W. C. A. party, the Athletic Board supper at the college camp house are features of Orientation Week, for which students began reaching the campus last Saturday afternoon.

Alabama Almost Free Of T. B. Among Cattle

AUBURN, Ala.—Within the next few weeks all Alabama counties will be declared practically free from tuberculosis in cattle, report Dr. R. E. Jackson, Montgomery, and Dr. I. S. McAdory, acting state veterinarian, Auburn, who state that 53 of the 67 counties in the state are already tuberculosis free.

The accredited Alabama counties are Autauga, Baldwin, Bibb, Blount Bullock, Butler, Calhoun, Chambers, Cherokee. Chilton, Choctaw, Clarke, Clay, Cleburne, Colbert, Conecuh, Coosa, Covington, Crenshaw, Cullman, Dallas, Elmore, Escambia, Etowah, Franklin, Greene, Hale, Jackson, Jefferson, Lauderdale, Lee. Limestone, Lowndes, Macon, Madison, Marengo, Marion, Marshall, Mobile, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Perry, Pickens, Randolph, St. Clair, Shelby, Sumter, Talladega, Tallapoosa, Tuscaloosa, Washington, and Wilcox.

Farmers Selling Cotton Urged To Keep Record

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama cotton producers who sell their cotton immediately are urged to obtain and keep sales slips from buyers so as to be sure to have adjustment sales records on which the government will be able to make adjustment payments under the new loan payment plan.

Government officials are at present working on printed forms for farmers to use but until these are available producers are urged to keep a complete record in order that the forms may be properly filled out when available.

U. S. SENATOR HUEY P. LONG DIES FROM ASSASSIN'S BULLET

The Louisana Kingfish, who rose from the obsecurity of a farm boy to become the most powerful individual State political leader in the history of America, died of an assassin's bullet at 4:10 a. m. Tuesday morning, September 10th.

He was shot and mortally wounded Sunday night by Dr. Carl A. Weiss, young Baton Rouge eye specialist, in the State Capitol building in Louisana, while directing one of his dictatorial sessions of the State Legislature.

Dr. Weiss was slain on the spot by Long's ever present bodyguards, his body pierced by no less than 15 submachine gun and pistol bullets.

Senator Long leaves a wife and two children.

Investigation is being made by proper authorities of the fatal shooting of Dr. Carl Weiss by guards of the late Senator.

Contrary to general opinion, the bite of the Black Widow Spider is not extremely dangerous nor often fatal. Undoubtedly some deaths have been due to unwise treatment by nonmedical friends. As in snake bite alcohol by common belief is supposed to be a sovereign remedy. It is the worst possible medicine in both spider and snake bite. See a physician if bitten by either.—Alabama State Health Department.

Buck Creek Cotton Mills To Buy Cotton

Of interest to a large number of farmers throughout Shelby County will be the announcement of the Buck Creek Cotton Mills in this issue of the Democrat, stating that they will again enter the cotton market and will buy cotton at the mill platform in Siluria.

Mr. Frank Beane, of Memphis, Tennessee, who comes to Siluria with eight years of experience in the grading and stapling of cotton, will be placed in charge of this department, and will be in his office on September 16, ready to pay you the highest market price for good cotton, that can be utilized in the mill.

It will be to your advantage to bring your samples of cotton to this market place and get Mr. Beane's price, before selling your cotton elsewhere.

Soil Washing Reduced With Winter Legumes

AUBURN, Ala.—Winter legumes—hairy vetch and Austrian winter peas and crimson clover—are a big aid in preventing soil washing during the winter months, points out J. B. Wilson, extension agricultural engineer of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

In an experiment at Auburn where vetch was planted on the land the pounds of soil washed from one acre between November and May follow: Level land, 767 pounds; 5 percent slope, 4 324 pounds; 10 percent slope, 6,113 pounds; 15 percent slope, 14,141 pounds; and 20 percent slope, 19,193 pounds.

From bare land the following amounts of soil were washed away from each acre: Level, 883 pounds; 5 percent slope, 27,117 acre pounds; 10 percent slope, 83,726 pounds; 15 percent slope, 135,064 pounds; and 20 percent slope, 181,697 pounds.

"These figures present one of the best reasons I know for planting soil-building winter legumes, such as hairy vetch and Austrian winter peas," said Mr. Wilson.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy shown us in the illness and death of our beloved wife and step-mother, J. A. Collier. We also express deep gratitude for the many lovely floral offerings. (Signed)

COLLEGE STUDENTS NEARLY SAFE FROM PARALYSIS DISEASE

Registered In Chancery 7-8-36

MONTG[illegible] Ala.—Dr. J. N. Baker, Alabama [illegible] Health Officer, notified the heads of the State's institutions of higher learning to-day that exclusion of students on the ground that they live in areas where infantile paralysis is in epidemic stage "does not appear warranted."

The statement was issued following receipt of requests from educational officials for advice as to whether students should be received from North Carolina, Virginia and other states where the number of cases during the past few months has been more than normal.

Dr. Baker also assured parents of Alabama students that there would be no danger in sending their sons and daughters to schools where normally a number of students from these states are registered. "Poliomyelitis, or infantile paralysis", he said, "is primarily a disease of children and nearly all adults are immune."

"The most recent reports of the poliomyelitis situation throughout the country show that the epidemic which began in North Carolina early in the summer has passed its peak in that state and is rapidly returning to normal," said the State Health Officer, who has been keeping in constant contact with the United States Public Health Service in Washington.

"The disease, however, spread to Virginia where it is still quite prevalent. Recently the disease has also appeared in several of the Northern and Eastern States, particularly in New York (New York City), Massachusetts (Boston and Fall River), Connecticut and Michigan. Kentucky has also experienced an outbreak with Louisville as the center.

"Poliomyelitis is primarily a disease of young children, although any age may be affected. The general consensus of opinion, however, is that adults are nearly all immune to the disease.

"In the presence of an epidemic, gatherings of children are discouraged, but adults are not restricted in their movements. In view of these considerations the exclusion of students from colleges and high schools on the ground that they live in an epidemic area does not appear warranted. Students coming from a home where there is a case already are subject to quarantine and would automatically be excluded until quarantine restrictions were removed.

State Club Members Will Be Given Trips

AUBURN, Ala.—Fourteen Alabama 4-H club members—8 girls and 6 boys—will be given trips to the 14th National 4-H Club Congress to be held in Chicago, November 29-December 7 this year, report T. A. Sims and Elizabeth DeLony, State 4-H club leaders.

The boys and girls will be given these trips because of outstanding work in crop production, meat judging, food preparation and preservation, clothing, health, and general improvement.

Nat'l Tax-Exemption Certificate Pool Open

AUBURN, Ala.—On September 4 the regular 1935 national pool in Washington began receiving surplus cotton tax-exemption certificates from growers throughout the country.

E. L. Deal, manager of the pool, states that the certificates will sell for a price representing 5 cents per pound of cotton. He also advises growers to get in touch with county agents or cotton assistants in cotton adjustment if interested in obtaining or disposing of certificates.

Rabies vaccine which is very generally used in Alabama for individuals who have been exposed to "mad dogs" is made from the brains of rabbits which have been inoculated with the virus of rabies. It was originally prepared by Pastour in the last century and has been the means of saving many lives from this dread disease. The people of Alabama are saved thousands of dollars annually by the fact that the vaccine is manufactured in the State Health Department Laboratories.—Alabama State Health Department.

Hundreds Perish in Hurricane That Hits Florida—Liner Stranded on Reef—Italy Accuses Ethiopia Before League Council.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FLORIDA was the victim of another terrific hurricane that swept up from the Caribbean across the keys and the southern end of the state, then along the west coast and into Georgia. The total of fatalities was uncertain but at this writing the number of dead is estimated at more than 500. Of these perhaps 300 were war veterans in labor camps on the keys where they were employed in construction work. All buildings on many of the keys were demolished and a relief train that had been sent to take the veterans away from the danger zone was smashed to pieces. The survivors on the islands were without shelter, food and medical supplies, but relief expeditions were quickly sent by the Red Cross and other agencies.

The towns along the west coast reported extensive property damage.

Responding to assertions that the great loss of life in the veterans' labor camps was due to lack of preparation against such a disaster, President Roosevelt ordered a thorough investigation by Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs. Harry Hopkins, head of the FERA which set up the camps, also started an inquiry, and so did the American Legion. The affair promised to attain the bad eminence of a national scandal.

Caught in the fury of the storm, the Morgan liner Dixie, from New Orleans for New York, was driven aground on French reef, about 60 miles south of Miami. Her passengers and crew, numbering 372, were in great peril for three days, but various steamers and coast guard cutters rushed to the rescue in response to her SOS call and as soon as wind and seas abated enough all were taken off the stranded vessel and conveyed to land, most of them to Miami. Passengers on the Dixie warmly praised the gallant work of the ship's officers and crew.

OFF the coast of Portugal the Cunard-White Star liner Doric was in collision with the French steamer Formigny and so badly disabled that she called for aid. The British steamers Orion and Viceroy of India went to the rescue and took off the Doric's passengers, numbering 736. The crew remained aboard. The Doric was returning from a cruise to the Mediterranean. Wireless reports said the Formigny was all right.

BARON POMPEI ALOISI, cold and sardonic, stood up before the League of Nations council in Geneva and presented Italy's case against Ethiopia, denouncing that empire as utterly unworthy to be classed with civilized countries. In addition to his speech, he laid before the council a long memorandum detailing the alleged conditions of slavery that still prevail in Ethiopia and the participation of its government in the slave trade. This memorandum was elaborately documented.

Baron Aloisi

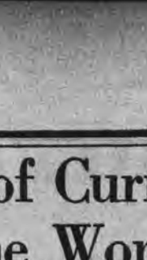
Addressing the council, Aloisi said in part:

"Ethiopia, taking advantage of her position as a member of the League of Nations, sheltered behind the treaty of friendship concluded with Italy in 1928, has since that date multiplied provocations, hostile demonstrations, incursions of pillagers, acts of brigandage, and violence against the peaceful populations of our frontier.

"The Ethiopian government does nothing to make itself worthy of belonging to the community of civilized nations. Even today that country has to be represented by European advisers in order to make its voice heard in the League of Nations.

"The Italian government considers, in these circumstances, that a state such as Ethiopia cannot have either equality of right or equality of duties as compared with civilized states. To claim that members of the league are required to observe rules of the covenant in their relations with members who have always and constantly been outside those rules is contrary to all the principles of right and justice."

To the press correspondents the baron was even more explicit. "You have heard the Italian thesis," he said. "That is final. Italy has asked nothing, not even the withdrawal of Ethiopia from the league. From now on Italy will play a passive role here. We are not going to discuss anything with Ethiopia, but we will discuss Ethiopia with the league.



"It is up to the members of the league council to decide whether they want to expel Ethiopia or expel Italy."

Ethiopia's reply to Italy was presented to the council by Prof. Gaston Jeze, a Frenchman. He protested in a dignified way against the brutal wording of the Italian statement and told the council if it considered the expulsion of Ethiopia the league would be setting a precedent of judging member states according to the manner in which they conducted their internal affairs. Some members might find this dangerous, he said.

Jeze ended with a dramatic reminder that time is pressing and this is not the moment for dilatory measures.

"The question is whether there is danger of war, and whether there is danger of an early opening of a war of extermination," he said. "That is the point to which the council ought to direct its most serious attention."

WHILE the European statesman were struggling with the Italo-Ethiopian question, Secretary of State Cordell Hull quietly took a hand in the game. He did not in any way involve the United States in the wrangle, but he put an end to the deal, whereby Hailie Selassie was giving a great development concession to Americans. Officials of the Standard-Vacuum Oil company went to Mr. Hull's office and admitted ownership of the grant. The secretary admonished them that the concession had been "the cause of great embarrassment not only to this government, but to other governments who are making strenuous and sincere efforts for the preservation of peace."

Sec'y Hull

The oil men thereupon announced their intention of withdrawing from the deal with Ethiopia, and the big concession sensation was entirely deflated. The British government was especially pleased with this outcome and felt deeply grateful to Secretary Hull.

MONTHLY estimates of private forecasters are that, if there are no serious frosts in September, the corn crop of the country will be 2,231 million bushels. This is 854 million bushels larger than last season's harvest when the drought cut returns to 1,377 million bushels. When compared with "normal" production this season's indicated crop is moderately deficient.

In Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio the crop is in excellent condition and the returns promise to be larger than appeared likely a month ago. The situation is reversed in Kansas, South Dakota, and Nebraska. In Iowa, the biggest producing state, the prospects are slightly less favorable than a month ago.

The spring wheat crop was estimated at 155 million bushels. Using the government's last estimate on the winter crop of 432 million bushels, total wheat production this year is placed at 587 million bushels.

GERALD B. THORNE, chief of the live stock and feed grains division of AAA, says that in order to rectify inequities in corn-hog production it has been decided to permit modification of the base production quotas. The tentative plan is:

Each county now has an aggregate base production of corn and hogs which will be left untouched.

Within the county bases, however, machinery will be set up, largely through county committees, by which the bases can be altered.

Thus the farmer who planted less than normal corn in 1932 and 1933 and has a low corn base can be given an increased base. In the same way the farmer who raised fewer hogs for one reason or another in those years than ordinary on a farm of that size may get a larger hog base.

For these increases, however, there will have to be corresponding adjustments downward for other farmers.

EARLY court tests of the Wagner labor dispute act may be obtained, for already complaints have been filed with the new labor relations board against two subsidiaries of General Motors and the Portsmouth, Ohio, plant of the Wheeling Steel corporation. The complainants are the United Automobile workers and the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. They are represented by Charlton Ogburn, counsel for the A. F. of L., who says the unions charge that the companies violated the act's fair labor practice provisions.

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS, in annual session at Amarillo, Texas, having been assured that the stars and bars would not be banned, accepted the invitation to hold a joint reunion on Gettysburg battlefield with the Grand Army of the Republic in 1938. Paul Roy, who extended the invitation on behalf of Governor Earls of Pennsylvania, told the confederates they would be free to carry the flag of the south wherever and whenever they pleased.

NOTEWORTHY among recent deaths are those of Right Rev. Walter T. Sumner, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Oregon, who won fame long ago as a crusader against organized vice in Chicago; George C. Hanson, veteran American diplomat, who shot himself to death on a steamer when returning from Greece; and Charles J. Vopicka of Chicago, who was American minister to several Balkan countries during the World war.

DR. CHAIM WEIZMANN, veteran leader of the Zionists, was elected president of their world organization at the nineteenth congress held in Lucerne. A resolution was adopted declaring against "systematic deprivation of the rights of Jews in Germany, which undermines their moral and material position."

The German delegation to the congress unanimously voted against the resolution, declaring it did not constitute a "constructive plan" to meet the situation of Jews in the reich.

SIR MALCOLM CAMPBELL, the English speed demon, satisfied his ambition to run his automobile, the Bluebird, at a rate of 300 miles an hour, on a salt track in Utah. As a matter of fact, he covered the thirteen mile course at an average speed of 301.337 an hour or more than five miles a minute. Over one measured mile he ran at the rate of 304.331.

RUSSIA'S reply to America's protest against the subversive plotting of the Communists in Soviet territory was a rejection and a coldly worded re-assertion of the old and more than dubious position that the Moscow government is not and cannot be held responsible for the doings of the Communist Internationale. This was considered for four days by official Washington and then it was decided to let the matter drop with another and rather milder warning. The new note sent to Moscow said:

"If the Soviet government pursues a policy of permitting activities on its territory involving interference with the internal affairs of the United States, instead of 'preventing' such activities, as its written pledge provides, the friendly and official relations between the two countries cannot but be seriously impaired."

SENATOR HUEY LONG crowed a lot about the success of his one-man filibuster which killed the third deficiency appropriation bill, but he didn't add to his popularity among the people who looked forward for help from the agencies that are now hampered by the failure of the measure. Besides that, it is now admitted that his filibuster rescued the Democratic house leaders from a tight place in the matter of the cotton and wheat loans. Still further, it appears that Huey's domination of Louisiana is going to be investigated by a congressional committee. That committee probably will be headed by Representative William L. Granfield of Massachusetts, for he was the author of the elections investigation bill, which was found to contain a little "joker." This joker gives the committee such wide powers that it can probe into all the facts concerning Long's complete control of election affairs in his state and the methods by which he has attained to the position of a dictator there.

W. L. Granfield

MRS. ANNA WILMARTH ICKES, wife of Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, was killed when an automobile in which she and three friends were riding was overturned in a ditch at Velarde, N. M. Mrs. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, well-known newspaper writer; Ibrahim Seyfullah, secretary of the Turkish embassy in Washington, and Frank Allen of Gallup, N. M., the driver, were severely injured. Allen died later.

SENATOR GEORGE NORRIS of Nebraska and Arthur F. Mullen, former Democratic national committeeman for that state, are engaged in a warm dispute that may cause considerable embarrassment for President Roosevelt, friend of both men. Mullen carried to the White House a hot protest against a $20,000,000 power project which is sponsored by Norris. He is attorney for two $7,000,000 power plants which already have been approved by the PWA, and he asserts there is no field for the enormous amount of electrical energy that would be developed by the three projects, and probably not enough water for all of them.

The first project approved by PWA was at Columbus, Neb., 80 miles west of Omaha, and situated on the Loupe river. The second was on the Platte river, 150 miles farther west, at Sutherland, Neb. Both were approved in the fall of 1933.

BOWED down by deep grief, the Belgian people laid to rest their beloved queen, Astrid, who was killed near Lucerne, Switzerland, when the automobile driven by King Leopold swerved from the road and dashed against a tree. Astrid's skull was crushed and she died almost immediately in the arms of her husband, who was cut painfully by the smashed windshield.

The queen's body, taken back to Brussels, was taken to the cathedral of St. Gudule for the funeral ceremony and then was interred in the royal crypt at Laeken, where lie the remains of the late King Albert. The services were simple, in accord with the characters of Astrid and Leopold.

BECAUSE of the possibility of a continued increase in the importation of live stock and its products, an appeal in the name of more than 300,000 farmers and ranchmen, members and patrons of the National Live Stock Marketing association, was sent to President Roosevelt urging that present tariffs and sanitary restrictions on animals, meats, lard, and similar products be maintained.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Business is recovering. Reports from all over the country prove this beyond dispute. However, two disturbing questions are in the minds of business men, and nobody really knows the answers. Which may be just as well, for the time being. If there were no disagreement about the answers, the effect might be very harmful indeed.

These questions are:

1. How much is government spending responsible for the present upturn? And its logical sequel: what will happen when government wholesale spending—or what might be called excess budget spending—stops?

2. To what extent will the new tax policy restrain new ventures? And its logical sequel: if new ventures are restrained by governmental action, what will happen as both government excess spending and new ventures shrink?

No. 1 needs no diagraming. Its ramifications, though widespread, are obvious.

No. 2 is very complicated indeed. New ventures have always been financed, in cases where considerable capital is required, either by rich men, or by a flood of investors eager to get rich quick—thinking of the amazing profits made by successful ventures in the past, and willing to risk their stakes on the hope of doing likewise.

So important is this latter classification that many shrewd financial observers have argued that this country—to continue to progress—must have "sucker money." They point to the astounding list of enterprises, today successful, which were started by "sucker money." In many of them the original investors lost their all. A glance at the big buildings, whether they be office structures or hotels or whatnot, in any large American city provides copious illustrations.

"Sucker" Takes Chances

The "sucker" knows the odds against him are heavy. Sometimes he seems to be deceived by the glib talk of the bond salesman or get-rich-quick promoter. But down in his heart the "sucker" knows he is taking a big chance. He does not need that extra thousand dollars, or ten thousand dollars, he has saved so painstakingly, for any pressing family purpose, in most cases. He is the saving, frugal type. But he craves to lift himself to a higher standard of living—to better (as he sees it) chances for his children. In short, to be rich. The only way the average "sucker" of this type has to get rich is to put some money into something which will prove a bonanza.

New Deal policies run counter to this. They have already closed the door to the highly rose-colored prospectus—to the alluring get-rich-quick ads aimed at enticing the "sucker." They would protect him from his own gullibility. But the tax policy goes further. If he does win, the government will take such a large percentage of his winnings that the average professional gambling house proprietor's percentage seems generous, indeed, by comparison.

It must be remembered that the average "sucker" has a theory. He will back hundred to one shots as frequently as he can raise the money, figuring that some day he is going to make a killing. When that killing comes, however, he steps into the upper income tax brackets.

As to those already rich, the higher the taxes are the less incentive there is, obviously, to take any risk in order to make more. The dice are too heavily loaded. The government takes a heavy cut of the winnings, but stands no part of the losses. Does not even permit them—with a small exception—to be deducted from income for tax purposes!

The question for both these classes of investors, or gamblers, if you will, is: where does the deadline come in? Nobody knows the answer to that. But it is known that President Roosevelt got only part of what he wanted in heavy taxes on big incomes, and in his sliding scale tax against bigness.

Ordinary business, of course, goes ahead, doing the best it can, regardless of tax policy. It has no alternative. It is in connection with new ventures that the tax policy may prove important. Radicals and die-hard conservatives alike agree that this policy pushes toward government ownership. Roosevelt does not. Only time will tell.

The Ohio Situation

What would a special election in Ohio show?

There is no public talk about it, but down underneath that question is something of more importance, both to administration and "anti" circles, than lots of things that are being openly discussed. It's not just a question of Democratic and Republican—conservative or New Deal. For there is even more concern over how Ohio would vote on bond issues than whether she would elect a Democrat or a Republican to the house of representatives in place of Charles V. Truax, who died some weeks back.

There was considerable publicity for a time over whether Governor Davey would call a special election. He decided against it. Publicly stated, the reason was that it would cost the Ohio taxpayers just half a million dollars, as the election would have to be in the entire state, Truax having been congressman at large. Also that no single district of Ohio was being deprived of representation.

It just so happened that at the same time Governor Davey, despite all the harsh words exchanged between himself and Relief Administrator Hopkins, received an allotment of $20,000,000. He had come to Washington to get it, but there was no necessity, apparently, of presenting any arguments for it. In fact, he received word he could have it before he actually got in to see President Roosevelt. By a curious coincidence he also announced, just before he entered the executive mansion, that there would be no special election.

This did not pass unnoticed. Critics had a great deal to say about it, especially as the reverberations from the Rhode Island by-election had not died down. But there was very little comment in Washington, for the simple reason that few people knew anything about it, or the fact that there had to be a lot of fast footwork to prevent a special election on whether Ohio voters would approve a loan to match the $20,000,000 Governor Davey was getting with such ease from the federal government.

The point is that the constitution of Ohio requires that before the state government shall commit the state to any debt exceeding $750,000, it must be approved by a referendum.

Election Not Wanted

Neither Governor Davey nor the administration in Washington wanted any such election. They remembered the enthusiasm with which the Rhode Island voters had rejected loans the federal government was seeking to force Rhode Island to make—to be spent with larger contributions from the federal treasury, which did not have to be repaid—and they did not want a repetition.

So far as Governor Davey was concerned, he wanted the federal gift of $20,000,000, so he wanted the state to borrow its share. He wanted to pose in the role of having brought home the bacon. He was not averse to showing the folks in Ohio that Washington had to come across for him even if he had threatened to put Harry Hopkins in jail, and had to throw in some minor compliments for good measure.

So far as the New Deal was concerned, it did not want to risk another setback. It was willing to overlook Davey's harsh words, or pay almost any other price, to avoid just that.

So a plan to dodge the plain language of the Ohio constitution was devised. A corporation was set up to handle the expenditures, and this corporation is to borrow the money Ohio normally would get by a bond issue. Of course the taxpayers will have to pay just as much, in interest and sinking fund, as though the state had borrowed the money direct, so it would appear to the unprejudiced outsider that at least the spirit of the constitution of the Buckeye state had been circumvented.

But the really interesting thing about it all is that the New Dealers lacked confidence that the Ohio voters would approve the project, even though the federal government was paying more than half of its cost.

Fight Not Over

The Roosevelt anti-utility fight is not over. The inclusion of what is generally admitted to be the death sentence in the utility holding company bill did not mark the end of the administration's drive against the electric business.

In the very near future another blast is coming, which will hit not only the utilities themselves, but the bankers who, according to New Dealers skimmed off the cream, leaving just skimmed milk for the stock and bondholders, while piling up a capitalistic pyramid on which the customers have to pay "extortionate" rates.

It has been whispered around in New Deal circles for some months now that the next slap at the utilities would be on their alleged costs of distribution. In fact, figures have been mentioned in connection with it. Half a billion dollars is being wrung from users of electricity every year, the New Dealers say, due to what they insist are perfectly fictitious elements of cost in distribution.

Hence the first blast will be—or at least, is expected to be—the opening gun of a fight for rate reductions estimated at half a billion a year for the country.

Most of the attack will be on the interest charges figured as part of the expense of distribution. Obviously, a very large part of the cost of distributing electricity, once it has been brought to a city line, is the original cost of laying the conduits, stringing the wires through them, erecting the transformer stations, etc. To do this work in the first place the electric companies borrowed the money.

It is the cost of that money that is the milk of the coconut in the argument about to start.

Private companies in the electric business did not get their money very cheaply, from present standards, though they fared better than some other lines of business. But if the actual money received in the treasury of the utilities companies, and the actual amount of bond interest paid on it is computed, the rate is much higher than appears, on the average, on the engraved certificates.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The Boston Lawrences came to California at the beginning of the gold rush, but the holdings of the family have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars. Dick Stebbins, who has been admitted to the bar, has the case against Ariel dismissed. Gail suddenly realizes that she loves Dick and not Van.

He had no money, he was country-bred, he was only the son of the people who rented the old Lawrence place over in Stanislaus—it did not matter. Gail, who had always felt that Clippersville limited and bound her, knew herself quite willing—ah, breathlessly willing!—to live contentedly in Clippersville forever, or out on the Stanislaus ranch forever; if Dick so decreed. What Ariel or Edith would think of this sudden altering of all her dreams was nothing; there was nothing anywhere, except Dick!

All life was a miracle now, and she walked in the glory of it like somebody lifted above the earth. All the happy old customs that she and Edith had known for years were touched with new joy and new pain. When Dick joined the family circle the air was only a little more electrified than when he did not come.

And meanwhile Van had established a more comfortable footing in the old Lawrence house than ever before, and while he and Ariel did not seem to be exactly flirting—exactly having an affair—there was a far more substantial base to their relationship than his friendship with Gail had ever known. Very quietly, in an almost bored tone, Ariel told her sisters in early November that Van was going east to get to work.

"No more college?"

"No, he wants to get into business. His father says he'll start him in the New Jersey plant."

"Then he won't come back to Clippersville?"

"Yes. He's going to be back for a week in January. That's—that's month after next!"

"He's coming back after her!" Edith said, when she and Gail were alone.

"Oh, Ede, it does look like it!"

Gail's imagination was off at full speed: Ariel married at eighteen to young Van Murchison; Edith and Phil and Sam living on here at the old house; herself and Dick . . .

But this last snatched at her breath. Herself and Dick. People in the library would glance at her: "She's engaged; she's going to marry that young lawyer, Richard Stebbins."

Dick would have cases, and she would study every detail of every case and keep up with him. And she would have babies—babies tumbling about among the flowers.

Happiness, happiness, happiness—to be married to him, to have Dick all to herself! The miracle of marriage, the amazing flaming glory of it, surrounded her with a cloud of mist by day and of fire by night.

It began to seem as if things were happening in Clippersville, after all. The sluggish current of Gail's life was stirred in many ways. It was not only that Phil got a raise, and that Van Murchison might marry Ariel. Sam was working for a scholarship, and might actually win a year at Columbia! Columbia university in New York. Gail was assistant librarian now, with the name "Abigail Lawrence" printed in gold on the library windows and a salary of fifty-five dollars a month.

And then Christmas was coming. Always exciting, it seemed doubly so this year. She fairly danced to work in the mornings, and Edith would come home in the darkness of five o'clock to hear her singing over dinner preparations in the kitchen.

Dick was boarding with them now, for his mother had gone to Oregon to stay with a daughter newly widowed, and there were only men on the Stanislaus ranch.

There was one cloud in the sky, to be sure. Gail and Edith acknowledged its existence bravely one December evening when they asked Dick if he thought Phil really cared for Lily Cass.

"That's a hard question to answer," Dick said, with a faint frown and a sigh.

"Do you like her, Dick?"

"Well—she's not my type. But she's an awfully sweet little thing, really."

"Is she divorced, Dick?"

"No. But there's talk of it."

"If she were, do you believe Phil really would marry her?"

A pause. Then Dick asked slowly, "Would you girls care?"

"You've answered!" Gail said, with a brief, mirthless laugh.

"I suppose I have." Dick sighed again. "There—there never was anything wrong with Lily," he offered, doubtfully.

"No!" Gail agreed forcefully. "Except that she was as common as fruit flies, and ran with that terrible box-factory gang, and chewed gum in church, and talked way up in G major."

This rather finished Lily's case for the moment. But a little later Gail said apologetically, "I don't know why I got so wild about poor Lily. She certainly is having a rather tough time of it."

"I'll tell you!" Dick said eagerly. "Phil's the quiet sort. He loves Clippersville; he wouldn't change places with the President. Phil wants to stay here and develop the place, and he loves Lily—or if he loves her—" Dick floundered, turning red, and correcting himself hastily.

"We know he loves her; you needn't be so scrupulous!" Gail said with a dry little laugh. "I believe you'd stand up for Phil if he went out some night and cut somebody's throat!"

But she loved Dick for his loyalty none the less, and curried the mutton stew with one idea in her mind, "They all eat it, and he loves it curried!"

Christmas falling on a Tuesday, they all went up to the woods on the Saturday afternoon preceding it, and came back laden with evergreen, scarlet toyon berries, crisp, polished huckleberry branches, and the one great bunch of mistletoe that Dick climbed high into a dying oak to secure.

Gail, frantic to start tying bundles and mixing batters, had to spend the wet Monday in the library. She walked up to Muller's at five o'clock, not only to wait for Edith but to help her effectually while she was waiting. Edith was in an exhausted whirl of last Christmas sales; Ariel also was there as one of her Christmas assistants, at two dollars a day.

Rain was twinkling and sparkling in the black night as the Lawrences came wearily, excitedly out and started for home. Ariel was very silent.

But Gail and Edith were gay. Christmas eve, at library and shop, was over, and nothing but fun and holiday ahead. Edith thought of the tissue paper and ribbons in her lower bureau drawer. She would begin wrapping and marking packages right after dinner; she had completely ruined herself on presents, as usual, and she felt the usual joy in her plight.

Gail thought of presents, too. She wondered if Dick would give her a present—of course he would! She would not care what it was; it would be the most valued thing she received.

She Felt Weak, Helpless.

Dick needed socks and ties and belts and gloves—if he went to Los Angeles next week he would need gloves—but she had dared give him none of these. Books. She had two books for him. In one, with a fast-beating heart, she had written, "Dick, with love from A. L." Love. Love from Abigail Lawrence for Dick Stebbins!

"Perhaps we'll be married by next Christmas!" thought Gail, running, racing, hurrying home in the black, rainy darkness of Christmas eve.

It seemed to her the most wonderful Christmas they had ever had. From the hour on Christmas eve when she, Ariel, and Edith got home wet, cold, and tired to the warm kitchen and to planning and laughter and tea, toast, and jam and wrapping gifts and surprises, until the two o'clock dinner on Christmas day was safely served, there was not a flaw.

They got all their presents ready and at eleven o'clock set the table for breakfast, then walked under warm shining stars to church at midnight. Every one stumbled back utterly exhausted, to go to bed heavily and blindly, fingers sore from strings and tinsel, backs and feet aching, hands scented with pine resin, hearts filled with happiness.

And then it was Christmas morning, and every one was thanking every one else and Gail was honestly amazed at all the things they got—and such beautiful things. Tables were loaded with boxes and bundles. Everybody got everything; there was no end to the gifts, nor to the tissue paper and ribbons that rained on the floor for somebody always to gather up and heap on the fire.

Breakfast, leisurely and late, was wonderful, and by eleven o'clock the scents of the early afternoon meal were in the spicy, warm Christmas-scented air. Dick was leaving for Los Angeles at seven; Ariel had promised Miss Lizzie Vail, with whom she had been studying dramatic expression, to have supper with Lizzie and her mother.

"But come home early, darling, for tomorrow's your birthday, and we have to celebrate all over again!"

Thus Gail, as she flew about the kitchen in the full glory of dinner-getting.

"Oh, I will, Gail." Ariel was very docile. She seemed to her sisters to be at her sweetest today. Van had sent her no present that they knew of. But Christmas mails were always late. Phil and Dick walked down to the post office at noon, returning laden with cards and small packages. But if Van had sent either to her, Ariel gave no sign.

At two they sat down, ravenous, to the feast. Everything was perfection. Long after three o'clock the sextette lingered at the table, nibbling raisins and nuts, trying the German honey cakes that had come as a greeting that morning, sampling the Christmas candy.

And when finally there was a stir, it was only after an unanimous decision to abandon all plans for supper. Phil went off to some point unknown—probably to see Lily—Sam helped clear the table, Dick had to walk down to his office to get some papers, and Ariel herself suggested that she walk with him because she had a present for Mary Binney, and could leave it by the way.

"But please leave the silver and glasses for me to wash—please," Ariel pleaded.

"Oh, nonsense!" Gail said. She and Edith made short work of the clearing up.

The short day ended with them both stretched luxuriously on Gail's bed, reading at intervals, talking desultorily, waiting for night to bring the other members of the family home.

"How long will Dick be in Los Angeles, Gail?"

"Only about two weeks. It's a ship case. A great chance for him."

"I think he's such a dear. I've grown awfully fond of him this fall," said Edith.

"He's a darling."

Ariel put her head in the door.

"I've been asleep," she said, blinking.

"We looked in and saw you when we came in."

"I'm going to Miss Vail's now," said Ariel, who was hatted and coated and gloved. "I'll be back early."

"Dick will be gone when you come back!"

"I know it. I said good-by to him." Ariel looked very pretty in her dark blue coat and snug blue hat. She came in, kissed Gail, kissed Edith. "I don't want to go!" she said, with a weary sigh.

"I hate to have you," Gail said affectionately.

"Think of being eighteen tomorrow, baby. Mother's poet, eighteen."

"Mother's nothing!" Ariel said bitterly.

"Gail," Edith asked, when Ariel had gone, "did she get anything from Van?"

"Not that she told me."

"It might be delayed in the mail."

"A telegram wouldn't be."

"I know."

There was a silence in the big, shabby, pretentiously furnished room. Gail roused herself, stiff and drowsily. "I told Dick I'd start packing his bag for the trip," she said, with an exultant rise at her heart.

"We'll miss him."

"Oh, won't we!"

Edith yawned agonizingly. Gail crossed the hall to Dick's cold big barrack of a room to find him done with his packing and ready for good-bys. He looked almost handsome—or at all events Gail found the lean, big-featured face handsome—as he belted his coat and pulled on the new gloves that Edith had not been too self-conscious to give him, if Gail had.

"You're worrying about this case!" Edith accused him. For he seemed unusually grave.

"No. Yes, I'm kind of worried," Dick said.

"Ariel's gone to the Vails', Dick, and Phil isn't back. Sam!" Gail called. "Come out and say good-by to Dick."

"I think we ought to kiss him good-by on Christmas night!" Edith said giddily, in a rare mood of daring.

For answer his big-coated arm went about her, and he kissed her so heartily that she emerged breathless and protesting. Then it was Gail's turn.

The clean-shaven hard cheek was against her own, his tremendous grip lifted her, held her shoulders tight; she felt weak, helpless, she drank the deliciousness of that first kiss as if it were a draught of heady wine. For an instant she was his, dazzled and ecstatic. Then panting, laughing, she was squarely on her feet again, still close to him.

"Well, Edith! The next time you have a bright idea you might take Dick and me into your counsels!"

"Don't worry—about anything that comes up, Gail," Dick was saying rather confused and breathless himself, very big, very much the man. "I'll be back in a few days. Everything will come out all right!"

He was gone. They heard the engine start in the yard, and laughed at each other as they wandered down to the kitchen.

Edith and Sam had tea and cold turkey, after all. But Gail, although she sat with them at the table, was feeding on finer food, and could not touch their tangible viands. Her mouth, her whole being, still pulsated to Dick's grave, hard, definite kiss. How he had kissed her!

Little Lights on LIVING

PROGRESSIVE LIVING

THE word progressive comes to us from the Latin word "progredior," meaning to move forward. Progressive living means forward, not faster living. One scientist believes that we, in America, have lived about 100 normal years in the last 25.

There is no doubt about the speed of our modern living when airplanes, through blizzards, carry mail 220 miles per hour, when 1,600 cigarettes are made by one machine in one minute (and consumed as rapidly), when great turbines equal in strength 900,000 man power, and the Century of Progress was lighted by a star forty light years distant. Magic it seems when we, sitting in our homes, can hear the President's voice from the White House in Washington, or listen to the Christmas mass at midnight broadcast from La-Madeleine in Paris. What an amazing, intriguing old world! We are going fast, but where?

In Indianapolis there is a great speedway. Automobiles have sped around its track at 120 miles an hour, but when they finished they were where they began, for they had been racing in circles. In the hurry-scurry we call modern life, do we ever stop to ascertain whether we are racing in circles or going forward to higher planes of living, and thinking? Civilization means intellectual, moral and spiritual progress. With all due attention paid to diets and physical exercise over the radio daily, one would think we were living physically in a health age on the planet, but when we see the large number of general hospitals, filled almost to capacity and also the increase in the psychopathic wards in America, 75,000 beds for new patients a year, we question it. Is this faster or forward?

In our home life in America today are we, as a nation, going faster or forward? The home is the economic, moral and spiritual unit of our country, said one of our recent statesmen. Do you know that America heads the list in all the civilized countries in the world for divorces? One-half of the delinquent children, government reports tell us, come from broken homes.

Also statistics have revealed that more money has been spent for automobiles in the last three and one-half years than has been spent for homes in the last 150 years. Where is the security of childhood if mortgaged by pleasure-seeking parents? The world is on wheels, we are going fast, but where? The future strength of America morally and spiritually lies in her homes, and her children.

THE FAR-VIEW

PERSPECTIVE is getting the right slant on things whether they be pictures or circumstances. Any work of art or situation in life is not clear if out of perspective. To an artist perspective is the key to success—without it he is no artist. So with us, in this art of living, if we lose perspective, we lose the true purpose of life.

The far-view, or perspective, is a good habit to cultivate every day. When looking out of the window of a fast moving train, the near view causes the fence posts and corn stalks to dance by in one dizzy whirl, which ceases when we take the far-view to the calm hills and peaceful horizon. Just so, with our petty problems and worries, which will be gone in a week from now.

For the want of the far-view, many persons of our own day have lost their perspective in money matters. I remember as a child my father telling of a miserly old man—a veritable Silas Marner—who got his dollars so close to his eyes, he shut out the sunlight. Even yet do I mentally see two silver dollars where his spectacles were. Poor old man—he lost his perspective.

Some business men are working harder and faster as the years roll on, hoping to accumulate enough to "lay off" sometime in large luxuriant homes and say within themselves, "my soul, take thine ease." What happens? About that time health breaks and their savings go largely to the hospital.

From a Chicago office on the twenty-fifth floor, the view of Lake Michigan was superb. A rising young editor sat with his back to the view, facing day in and day out, a flat tan-painted wall. "Look what's behind you," I said to him one day, looking out of the window. "I haven't time," he said gruffly. "You've lost your perspective at far too young an age," I remarked.

Many students come for counsel asking: "What course shall I pursue? Shall I take a job now, if offered, or finish my last year of university work?" My answer is: "Get the far-view. Do now what ten years from now you will wish you had done. Be willing to sacrifice any immediate end for the larger future good." Perhaps in our student days we too were mentally near-sighted, failing to fit each day's task into our life's plan, perhaps emphasizing credits rather than knowledge, and knowledge more than wisdom. In later years, perhaps spiritually near-sighted, we still forget the far-view of how we are daily growing old. Because of a too near view of this life many have missed the life eternal

CHOOSING HEN TO KEEP OR TO CULL

Profitable or Unprofitable Birds Are Marked.

The hens to keep are:

Strong, healthy, vigorous hens with short, neat heads and strong beaks.

The hens with long, deep, rectangular bodies and parallel top and bottom lines.

The hens with large, bright eyes, active appearance and short well-worn toe nails.

The hens with dusty, worn feathers, especially worn tail feathers, but having a bright healthy look.

The hens that molt late and those that molt rapidly.

The noisy, happy, friendly hens.

The early risers and those late to roost.

The vigorous hens with the faded beaks and shanks.

The hens with thin pelvic bones spread wide apart.

The early-hatched, well-grown pullets.

Large, strong, active, quick maturing cockerels of desired variety type and high-producing mothers.

The hens to cull are:

Poor layers and all old hens.

Cripples, and hens with broken-down abdomens or frozen toes.

The sick, quiet, inactive hens that spend much time on the roost.

All "crow heads" with long, slim heads and beaks.

The large, coarse-headed hens with sunken eyes.

The large coarse-headed hens with feathers extremely heavy for their breed.

All late-hatched immature pullets and those that are early hatched but much undersized.

All hens that molted before August 1.

The persistent sitter.

All hens with solid, fat abdomens.

All hens having bad habits (cannibals, feather-pullers, egg eaters).

All cockerels not needed for breeding purposes.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

Crate Fattening Is Not Best Way to Get Results

Every year, inexperienced folks try the produce houses' game of putting some extra weight on market poultry just before selling. Generally, it doesn't work out in the way it is planned.

In a majority of cases, notes a writer in Wallaces' Farmer, the birds that are kept closely confined for a week or two fail to gain in weight. Whether this is due to the sudden change from free range to confinement, where they constantly fret and try to get out, is uncertain. It may be due to the sudden change in the ration. If the birds are getting a scanty grain and mash feed on range, and are suddenly shifted to a full feed of ground grain and a rich mash, it does not always bring the desired results.

The best method of conditioning birds is to so feed them that they are in good flesh at all times. A bunch of young stock with a good range, mash in the hoppers at all times, and a liberal allowance of whole or cracked grain at least once a day, will always be in first-class market condition if they are kept free of disease and parasites.

Hens that have been fed scantily will be much more likely to respond to a short period of wet mash feeding than will cockerels, and it probably will pay to attempt to fatten hens which are thin because of poor feeding.

Guard Against Egg-Eaters

An effort should be made to prevent the newly housed pullets from acquiring the egg-eating habit. Their nests should be well filled with litter and placed in a dark place where broken eggs will not be seen so readily. Plenty of nests, one to every five hens, should be provided so that large numbers of eggs will not accumulate in a single nest and the danger of broken eggs increased. Plenty of oyster shell should be available so that the shells will be thick, soft shelled eggs prevented, and breakage minimized. Eggs should be gathered frequently, and broken eggs should be carefully removed from the building.

Poults Need Greens

Turkeys have a digestive tract that calls for much bulk and enables them to consume large quantities of greens. Poults crave greens; they are a cheap feed, so it is advisable to add greens to the menu. But care should be exercised, warns an authority in the Missouri Farmer. So well do poults like greens that they will gorge on them, especially when confined, and unless the greens are very finely chopped a number of them will choke and some may die.

Milk for Chicks

Milk has a recognized value in the rearing of chicks as a superior source of the animal protein to supply the body needs, says a writer in the Rural New-Yorker. It is generally recognized that at least a part of the protein from animal sources—found elsewhere in the meat and fish products fed—should come from one of the milk products. It does not appear to make any material difference whether the milk is fed as whole milk, skimmilk, buttermilk, semi-solid milk.

Fewer Aches and Pains More Health and Pleasure

PAIN drags you down—physically, mentally, morally.

Why continue to endure it? Try Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills for Headache, Neuralgia, Muscular, Rheumatic, Sciatic, and Periodic Pains. They seldom fail.

Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills are pleasant to take and prompt to act. They do not upset the stomach, cause constipation or leave you with a dull, depressed feeling.

Ask your druggist or any of the hundreds of thousands enthusiastic users. Probably you too can find relief.

I think all Dr. Miles medicines are wonderful, but Anti-Pain Pills are my favorite.
Mrs. Doc Blankenship, Stamford, Texas

I have used your Anti-Pain Pills only a short time, but they have given me prompt relief. They did for me in a week more than any other medicine I had taken for a year. Phil Goller, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

I am never without Anti-Pain Pills. I think they are much better than anything else I have ever used. Sometimes when I am tired and nervous, and feel like I would go under, I take two Anti-Pain Pills and in a sort time I feel like a different person. Mrs. S. Tidabach, Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania

Your Anti-Pain Pills have been used in my home with wonderful results. I recommend them.
Maggie Belle Dudley, Vanceboro, N. C.

Your Anti-Pain Pills helped me a great deal. I have used them for years. I carry them everywhere in my purse and always keep them in the house. They have saved me a great many sick headaches.
Mrs. Jennie Neill, Coronado, Calif.

DR. MILES' ANTI-PAIN PILLS

NOTICE to Farmers of Shelby County

We have added to our force Mr. Frank Beane who has been connected with the Memphis Cotton Market eight years. He will do grading and stapling of cotton at the Mill and will buy cotton at the Mill platform. We will pay the farmers the highest market price for good cotton, such as we can use in the Mill. Mr. Beane will be ready to start buying Monday, September 16th. Before you sell your cotton bring your samples by the Mill and get them properly graded and get a price on it.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

We have been especially happy this week to welcome to Columbiana an old friend and former townsmen, Walter Christian. Many residents will remember this handsome young fellow as one of the most "sought after" Beau Brummel's of Main Street, who finally capitulated to the charms and talents of Vinn Pitts and are now happily married, and reside in Greenville, South Carolina.

This is Mr. Christian's first visit back to former haunts for the past 15 years, and he says he has had to be introduced to "almost everybody"—and he could not believe he was in the "old home town"—so many improvements noted! We have not seen him since "Grand-dad" Christian, the original, originator of your little "blue letters" and mine, finished taking Walter around the grounds of the Airport, Municipal Swimming Pool et cetera. We suspect he WAS doubtful as to the vicinity he was in. However, "old friendships" cannot be out grown, out lived, nor forgotten, so we happily greeted this old friend of ours—from "way back when", and deeply appreciated his personal call to our journalistic retreat.

Miss Jeanette Niven, honor graduate of Shelby County High School, and one of the most popular members of the younger set, left Columbiana on Monday to enter Alabama College.

Miss Ruth Luck left Wednesday to enter the University of Alabama, where she will be a student next year.

Misses Jane Fowler, Charlie Verne Tinney and Margaret Ellis left this week for Alabama College.

We have felt a bit melancholy this week, and thought it was the weather—September being one of the most whimsical months of the year with its hectic days and cool nights, but we are now convinced it is the "lonesome old town" when these Collegiates say Goodbye. We personally miss them everywhere we go.

Miss Mary Moore Hurst, after a delightful visit to friends and relatives in Decatur, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Hurst, has gone to Birmingham where she is enjoying various social functions, incident to the formal opening of Birmingham-Southern College, where she will be a student next season.

L. B. Riddle, Jr., left for Georgia Military Academy on Monday. We know of no one boy who can cover more territory and "get by" with more breezy chatter than our good friend, L. B. Jr. We shall miss him "heaps", both in the office and in our home, where he has been a welcome guest on many occasions. Georgia Military Academy will be a far livelier place than formerly, and also a hippier one, for no one can withstand this pleasing personality for any length of time. Talented and "happy-go-lucky" L. B. Jr.! We are betting on him 100 per cent—and we don't mean MAYBE!

Harris Milton and A. D. Gordon have returned to their various scholastic activities at the University of Alabama.

Oscar Martin and Pierson West left Columbiana on Monday to enter Troy State Teachers College.

We have been invited by J. C. Tinney, Chairman of the Membership Committee, Men's Bible Class, of the Baptist Church, to attend their next Sunday morning meeting, and we are hoping to make a personal appearance on this occasion. We learn that two weeks ago, Judge Wallace's class numbered 16. Last Sunday, through the excellent work of his newly chosen Membership Committee, his class numbered 33. An interesting group of men compose this excellent class, and we deeply appreciate the thoughtful invitation generously extended.

Have you tried that new Cherry Custard Ice Cream John Curlee is selling? We have just finished a cone, and it is delicious.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats played to a large and appreciative group of dancers on last Saturday night. Many visitors were noted in the merry party, among them being Misses Avis and Myrtice Acker, of Birmingham, popular sisters of Mrs. John Curlee; and Miss Ruth Hamby, the attractive guest of Miss Louise Thompson. Among the out of town guests whom we all liked, were: Hubert Fayette, of West Blocton; Wood Cooper, of Sylacauga; Robert Holcombe, of Calera; John Cahoon, of Montevallo; and many others. These dances have been very popular through the summer season and we understand, when Jack Frost rules the land, and the Airport becomes too cold, another place has been found in which to continue this bi-monthly recreation.

K. C. Lott, of Birmingham, returned on Saturday night to add his unusual musical ability to enhance the beauty of the 'Ristocrat Ensemble, and his clarinet added much to the melodies offered on the Saturday night program.

The American Legion held their regular meeting on Monday night and had as guest of honor, Major McCall, of Washington, D. C.

We, of course, always welcome new subscribers, but we feel we are really "making a little niche for ourselves", when old subscribers write us such encouraging letters, and send along a little American Eagle to emphasize the statement. Being worth approximately 2 cents per week is something to be chesty over—and that's what we rate, $1.00 per year. How about it Delinquents? Write us and let us know what YOU think about it.

Of cordial interest to a large circle of friends in Shelby County comes the announcement of the approaching marriage of Mrs. Blossom Black, formerly of Wilsonville, Alabama, to Dr. J. Hamilton Rothberg, of Hollywood, California. The marriage will be solemnized on Friday, September 13, 1935.

In a letter we have just received from our good friend, Mrs. Black, she states she hopes to bring the "Doctor" to Alabama sometime within the near future. We shall heartily welcome them "HOME" again, and we take this opportunity to extend hearts best wishes across the continent for every happiness, now and through all the years to be.

INTERESTING PERSONALITIES

By

Mildred White Wallace

DR. ARTHUR FORT HARMAN

County interest and pride has long centered around our neighboring town, Montevallo. However, statewide interest hovers around the cultural halls of Alabama College. So, in answer to a number of inquiries regarding the newly elected President of Alabama College, who succeeded Dr. O. C. Carmichael, recently chosen Dean of Vanderbilt University, we happily present Dr Arthur Fort Harman.

Dr. Harman was born in Lexington, South Carolina, on August 10, 1875, and is the son of a Confederate Veteran. He received his early educational advantages in the public schools of his native state. His first college training was won by competitive examination on which he was awarded a scholarship. He is a graduate of the University of Nashville, and holds the degree of B. S. from Columbia University, New York, and an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University of Alabama.

Dr. Harman's teaching experience covers a wide range of territory, and includes the towns of Brewton, Centerville, New Decatur, Florence, and Selma, Alabama. He was Superintendent of Education, Montgomery County, for seven and one-half years; a member of the State Department of Education for two years; and State Superintendent of Education by appointment for one and one-fourth years, and by election for four years.

Dr. Harman's positions of trust and honor are too numerous to mention. He also has an enviable record as lecturer on educational subjects. His lecture engagements having taken him into 18 states, including the District of Columbia. He holds the distinct honor of having been invited to fill more lecture engagements than any other educator in Alabama. He is a member of the Phi Delta Kappa, and Kappa Delta Pi Fraternities; a fourteen degree Scottish Rite-Mason; a Woodmon of the World; and during his sojourn in Montgomery and Selma, Dr. Harman served the Rotarian Clubs of these towns as President. He is also a Ruling Elder in the Presbyterian Church, an honorary member of the Future Farmers of America, and a DEMOCRAT.

Dr. Harman laughlingly states the above facts about cover his life and work, but he is personally very proud of an achievement which occurred during his incumbency as Superintendent of the Selma Schools. During this period of his professional life, on his recommendation, the children of the Alabama Methodist Orphanage were admitted to the Selma Schools on the same terms and conditions as the children of the residents and citizens of Selma. He expressed himself as being particularly happy over this accomplishment, as it was necessary to jeopardize his official position in order that the purpose might be accomplished.

The Democrat feels it a distinct honor to have the privilege of joining legions of friends throughout Alabama, and especially citizens of Shelby County, in extending to this brilliant scholar, outstanding educator, statesman, lecturer, civic leader, diplomatic executive and Democrat, a hearty welcome to Shelby County.

South Carolina may claim Dr. Harman as her native son, but he belongs to Alabama by unanimous adoption. Alabama College may proudly acclaim him President, a signal honor recently conferred, and a worthy recognition of his ability and worthwhile achievements, but Shelby County citizens step forward with outstretched hands and grateful hearts to covet the honor of claiming this distinguished Southern gentleman as —her own, and to wish for Dr. Harman the brilliantly successful administration his excellent qualifications warrant.

Tot's Play Frock That "Stays Put"

PATTERN 9195

Is she never still a minute? Racing madly about, arms and heels flying? Then here's just the little play frock she needs, the kind that will "stay-put"—the neat little collar and tidy button-up front keep the dress from pulling askew! The little skirt, with its front and back pleat, allows for freedom—and with the matching bloomers, what matter if she does play leap frog with brother? The cute flare sleeve is cooler, but the pattern permits a puffed version if you prefer it. You could outline the scallops with bias tape to match the dots and buttons. Most practical in printed pique or percale, and daintiest in dotted swiss, or dimity.

Pattern 9195 may be ordered only in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8. Size 4 requires 2¼ yards of 36-inch fabric. Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth street, New York, N. Y.

How Will Mussolini Fight?
Airfields and Live Wires
A Teapot Tempest
Will Eugenists Explain?

Mussolini fought in the big war as a simple soldier in the trenches, was badly wounded, saw the horrors of war from the bottom.

Arthur Brisbane

Now, in command, he will see war from the top. How will he manage it? Dispatches say he must do something in a "quick drive and make big gains" before the rainy season returns, seven months hence.

Mussolini's driving power and efficiency, that have transformed the fever-breeding Pontine marshes into homes for Italian families, should need no "seven months" to produce results in Abyssinia. The thing to do is to concentrate on the "Conquering Lion of Judah," otherwise the Negus, or "Power of Trinity."

Make it clear that modern war means "the ruler of the country first, the little people afterward," and war will not last long. The "Conquering Lion" has expressed willingness, almost eagerness, to die for his country, but that must not be taken too literally.

Near Burbank, Calif., a plane crashes. Three occupants, two pilots and a stewardess burn to death, after striking a live wire.

It has been said, "Alcohol and gasoline do not mix well," meaning that men should not drive when drunk.

Air fields and live wires do not mix well either. The Department of Commerce, ruling aviation and exercising admirable rules, might include among the latter a rule against exposed live wires near air fields.

There is an unnecessary fuss about American business men having secured in Abyssinia rights to develop oil and mineral wealth. An American should be able to go shopping at his own risk and on his own responsibility, wherever he chooses, as Englishmen do, without having the State department indulge in "fits."

If one of the great American organizations, Standard Oil, Du Pont or another, undertakes to do business in Ethiopia, it will not ask Uncle Sam to send over any of "our boys" to shed their blood.

Strange sight in a New York court—one boy, nine years old, accused of killing a girl by hitting her on the head with a stone because she denied his assertion that he could eat more peaches than she could. Another little boy of twelve, also killer of a playmate, appeared in the same court.

The nine-year-old boy seemed quite unconcerned, except that he thought his dog, "Lucky," would be lonesome without him.

Prosecuting authorities accuse the nine-year-old boy of murder, but hanging or drawing and quartering for children are part of the past.

Will stirpiculturists and eugenists explain these youthful crime phenomena?

The sad death of the queen of Belgium proves that the open car is the dangerous car. The queen was thrown from the car, struck her head against a tree, and was instantly killed. Had she been in a closed car, she could not have been thrown violently, and probably would have escaped death as did her husband, who was holding the wheel.

The open car is the ideal car to see the country and the sky, but a dangerous car for those who drive too fast.

San Francisco, as old in the minds of Americans as the word "California" itself, is cheerful. The great bridge that will unite San Francisco to Oakland across the bay is progressing rapidly. And the suspension bridge is already stretching its spiderweb cables across the Golden Gate, where the Pacific ocean comes rushing in to the bay.

Thanks to good management and an excellent engineer, Mr. Strauss, this Golden Gate bridge, with its magnificent span of more than 4,000 feet, will be finished on time and for less than the $35,000,000 guaranteed as maximum price.

England wants no war, with prosperity returning and spoils of the big war not yet digested. But the wing feathers of the peace angel must tremble at sight of British and Italian fleets in the Mediterranean, near the mouth of the Suez canal.

If Britain tries to close that canal to Italy, leaving thousands of Italian soldiers cut off from their base and from food supplies, there will probably be some heavy gunfire.

It seems unlikely that devotion to Ethiopia, even though her government be a member of the League of Nations, could persuade the British to force war at this moment.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

Figs weighing one-fourth pound each are being harvested by Mrs. T. C. Thompson, of the Smilietown Community. The figs are of the large brown variety. So successful has Mrs. Thompson been in the sale of figs, that she has increased her orchard to 50 trees, with seven different varieties.

The body of an unidentified man about 60 years old was found in the Coosa River at Gadsden. The body had apparently been in the water about 36 hours, investigators said. The man was wearing khaki trousers and a blue work shirt and had some small spring scales in his pocket.

Principals of junior and senior high schools in Morgan County have organized an association for this year. S. O. Maner, principal of Falkville High School, was elected permanent chairman, and J. C. Mattox, principal of Danville High School, secretary.

The Alabama Public Service Commission has cited the operators of 50 motor carrier companies to appear Oct. 4 and show cause why their permits to operate should not be cancelled, revoked or suspended for alleged failure to pay mileage taxes.

The State Highway Department advertised for bids Sept. 17 on the construction of two blocks of asphalt paving in the town of Montevallo, Shelby County, at a cost of approximately $20,000. The paving will be laid as approaches to a bridge.

County agents, tractor operators and terracing foremen of 13 Southwest Alabama counties attended a tractor school at Auburn recently, preparatory to going forward with an extensive cooperative terracing program this Fall and Winter.

Webster Blake, Fort Payne Republican, was under sentence of from 12 to 18 months in prison for election fraud, the charge growing out of the bitter dispute between DeKalb County Republicans and Democrats last Fall.

Improvements on the Warrior River system in Alabama at a cost of $4,402,000 were authorized as President Roosevelt signed the new rivers and harbors bill. Sanction was given to a $3,500,000 dam at Tuscaloosa.

Gadsden officials have decided to ask the PWA for an armory for the two national guard units in the city and a site already has been secured. The government has proposed to furnish $46,000 for the purpose.

Oliver Wilkinson, 16-year-old Anniston boy, who could not swim, waded into deep water and was drowned at Hunter's Pond. Sidney Cates, one of the boys on the bank, leaped in, but was unable to rescue him.

The biggest monthly gain in postal receipts in Birmingham in several years was recorded when Postmaster Cooper W. Green announced that August had yielded 14⅓ per cent greater receipts than August, 1934.

Rep. Joe Starnes announced that the Postoffice Department would open bids Sept. 30 for a proposed three-floor addition to the Gadsden Postoffice. Work is expected to start in October or November.

The annual conference of the Southern Building Owners and Managers, an organization composed of building owners and managers in the 11 Southern states, will be held in Birmingham Jan. 20 and 21.

A $199,000 stadium at Alabama Polytechnic Institute, to seat 11,500 persons, is being sought through a Federal loan and grant in time for completion for the 1936 football season.

The opening gun in the state's campaign to control tuberculosis was fired when ceremonies dedicating the new Morgan County Tuberculosis Sanitarium were held at Flint Sept. 12.

Dr. O. C. Carmichael, former president of Alabama College, has gone to Nashville, where he is to be dean of the Graduate School and Senior College at Vanderbilt University.

Hal Lawson, of Cedar Grove, near Stevenson, was instantly killed when struck by a fast freight on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway tracks at Mud Creek Bridge.

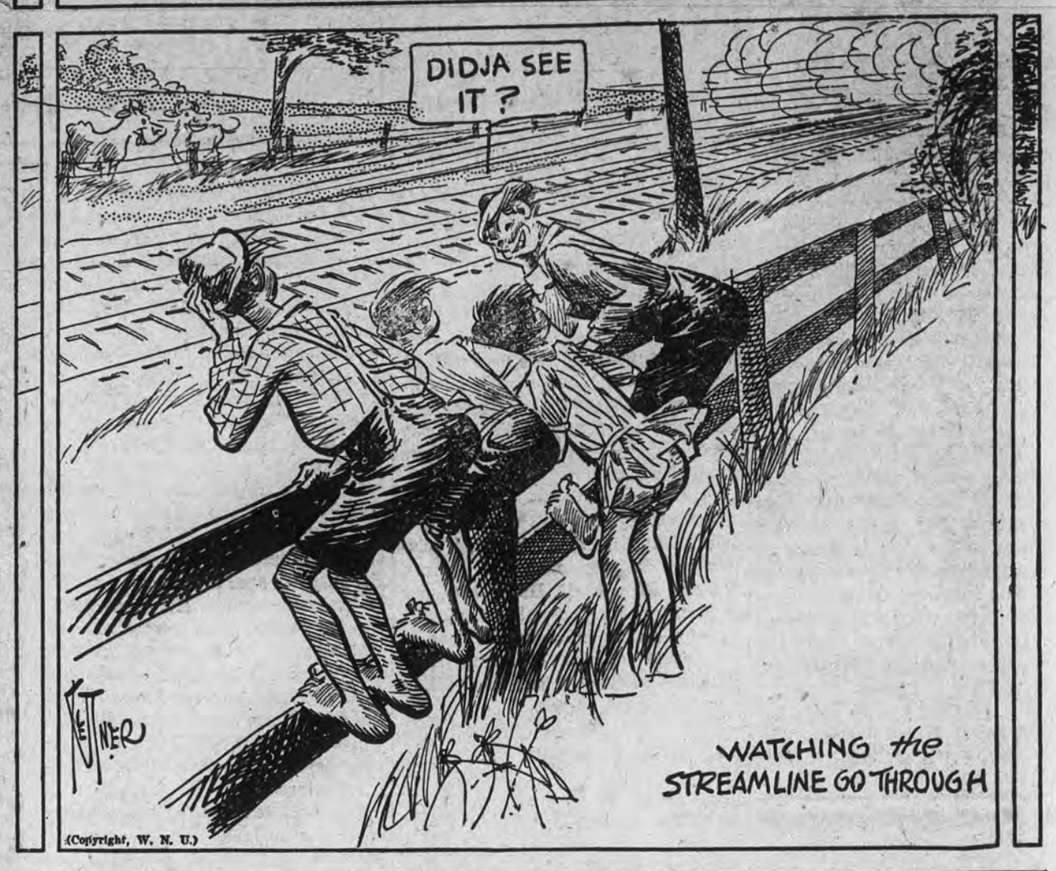
John McGee, former director of the Birmingham Little Theater, has been appointed assistant administrator for Federal theater projects with headquarters in Washington.

Civilian Conservation Corps workers—400 strong—have begun work on development of a "Garden of the Skies Park" atop Monte Sano Mountain near Huntsville.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration paid Alabama farmers $9,780,926 in rental and benefit payments during the 1934-35 fiscal year ended June 30.

Fourteen hundred workers in the Merrimac Mills at Huntsville have returned to their posts in the big plant, terminating a strike that began June 24.

Appointment of Miss Ruth Dunn, of Montgomery, to succeed Porter McKay as deputy clerk of the Alabama Supreme Court has been announced.



Names of Negroes are being included in the new list for the Morgan County jury box, which will be refilled in about three weeks.

John Bryan, superintendent of Bessemer City Schools, has been named as National Youth Administrator for the Birmingham district.

The 52nd session of the Jacksonville State Teachers College, Jacksonville, is scheduled to begin Sept. 16.

Long-Term Contract

More Velvet Than Ever in Fall Mode

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WE ARE going to be more elegant in dress this fall and winter than ever. All the pre-showings of advance fashions declare for greater luxury in jewels, in furs, in fabrics, in costume design. Where there is luxury and elegance in apparel there is velvet. Which leads to the message we would convey —the outstanding importance of velvet in the mode.

There is simply no limit to the enthusiasm which style creators are expressing for velvet this fall. It's velvet everywhere this season.

Apropos of the craze for velvet which is sweeping throughout the world of fashions Paris cables the news of tailored cloth suits which are styled with velvet collars and revers. Several suits shown in early contour showings have velvet skirts with cloth jackets often of rough surfaced, bright colored novelty woolen.

The girl planning her going-away-to-school wardrobe will adore the new velvet-plus-woolen outfits. Consider, for instance, the cunning ensemble shown to the right in the picture. It is a style-elect when it comes to assembling the college girl's wardrobe. The dress is of stiff deep red (red of the Italian master paintings) velvet. The bodice is designfully stitched in squares. The cloth cape in matching red has velvet buttons and velvet flowers at the throat.

Black velorganza, which is a thin velvet pile on an organdie base, fashions the handsome costume to the left in the group. Note that the flaring jacket is lined with the same gay printed organdie as makes the blouse. Linings which correlate the ensemble into an harmonious unit is a pet theme with fashion this season.

There is a boldly picturesque note about the so-named "pirate" dress centered in the trio. The unique bodice is of green mat velvet. The skirt is of non-crushable heavy white linen strikingly printed in green.

Velvet has become almost inseparable with black when it comes to talking from the viewpoint of daytime fashions. However, it is a little newer this year to introduce color—any of the dark warm colors that are booming for fall, particularly the wine purple and rich green range reflecting the Italian renaissance influence.

The favorite velvet suit for all-around wear during the daytime activities is linked with fitted lines. The very short jacket is apt to have almost a basque trimness, with its neatly buttoned-up-the-front closing, and intricate seaming and gores for the skirt.

The shirtwaist in velvet, begun by Mainbocher, is contributing a subject of exciting interest to the new style program. Speaking of color in velvet this trend is particularly noticeable in many of the early fall hats which are of velvet in delectable warm autumn hues. The little chapeau in the inset here shown is an ultra smart plaid velvet toque with a green feather curled to the left. The new berets of deep wine green or purple velvet are decidedly picturesque, some of them big floppy affairs dipping down over one eye, others with the new triangular and squared contours which are decidedly smart and effective.

READY FOR SCHOOL

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Coat fashions for the junior miss should be considered as "first aid" to preparedness in the matter of school girl wardrobe needs for fall. The model pictured is highly significant as to certain style trends that are outstanding in the new autumn and winter modes. Note a slight flare from the hipline. Double-breasted in somewhat of a coachman style this coat takes on a new note of chic. The fur-bordered collar carries a capelike air. The material for this attractive coat is a checked velour woolen. The hat is included in the ensemble, being made of the same smart wool weave.

Style Trend

Bows of ermine are being worn instead of buckles on evening shoes in London.

DRAPE BRIDAL VEIL IN MANY NEW WAYS

New ways of draping the bridal veil are offered the girl who is planning an early fall wedding. While in general these may be said to derive from the Russian tiara effects, they should more properly be credited to the Renaissance period. This includes the Italian, the Russian, and the Hungarian periods of corresponding dates.

One of the most charming of these diadem effects was recently constructed by Worth. Of tulle and old lace, over a stiffened wire foundation, it gains in width clear to the ears and is softened by incrusted draperies at the top in crenellated fashion.

Chanel has made a bridal head-dress which starts with a cap of tulle, embroidered in crosslines of dull silver. This silver note is recalled in the torsade which divides the upturning and downturning sections of the slightly circular-cut oureole, diminishing to nothing at the back of the head and giving full sweep to the simple tulle veil.

Knitted Evening Gown of Cellophane Is the Latest

A knitted evening gown of cellophane yarn is one of the sensations of the current mode.

We have seen knitted evening gowns before, introduced first at Palm Beach and taken up by New York and Paris. But the idea of using cellophane yarn is new.

The glittering cellophane, in black, follows the dictates of the season as to brilliance and glitter, and fits the figure like a mermaid's scales.

Knitted suits are blossoming forth in faultlessly tailored models, with contrasting linings and a distinct swagger.

Glossy Lace for Gowns

Glossy, transparent lace is used for gowns in black, navy and dark red. A pale shaded flower trims the corsage, and mittens of the lace go with the dress.

Lesson for September 15

TIMOTHY

LESSON TEXT—II Timothy 1:1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. II Timothy 2:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Boy Timothy.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Missionary in the Making.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Training for Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Training in Home and Church.

Timothy's training would be the proper training for every child. In the measure that such training be given there would be a more abundant supply of Christian workers.

I. Timothy's Parentage (Acts 16:1).

His father was a Greek and his mother a believing Jewess. On his mother's side at least, he had a godly ancestry. Usually the influence of the mother makes the son. A pious mother and a pious grandmother were back of Timothy.

II. Timothy's Training (II Tim. 1:5; 3:14,15).

A wise and faithful mother and grandmother carefully nurtured him in God's Word. Through this training, he knew the Scriptures from his childhood. The faith which came to him from his grandmother through his mother did not come through the laws of heredity, but through careful training and teaching. Grace is not received by the laws of heredity. The factors involved in his training were a godly ancestry, a home where God was feared, and a diligent study of the Scriptures.

III. Timothy's Call (Acts 16:1-3).

While on his second missionary journey in company with Silas, Paul found Timothy at Lystra near Derbe. Perhaps he had been converted on Paul's first missionary journey, but, hearing a favorable report of him by the brethren, Paul circumcised him so as not to offend the Jews because his father was a Greek. This was not contrary to the decision of the Jerusalem council. It was a case where conciliation could be made without compromise of truth.

IV. Timothy's Character.

1. Of a retiring disposition (II Tim. 1:6). He had received a gift from God at the hands of the apostles, but it needed to be stirred up; that is, fanned into a flame. Such a temperament would mature in touch with a great personality like Paul.

2. Courageous (II Tim. 2:1-8). Having been stirred up, he was freed from the spirit of fear and deliberately identified himself with Paul in his suffering and trials.

3. Faithful. He continued in the difficult field of Ephesus during many years. He was the only man of the needed fidelity to minister to the Philippians (Phil. 2:20). The secret of his faithfulness in such a position was his fidelity to the Word of God.

V. Timothy's Ministry.

1. As fellow missionary with Paul (Phil. 2:22).

2. As pastor of the church at Ephesus. Here he labored for many years, tactfully meeting the difficulties of that great church. The Christian minister must believe in the Scriptures as God's Word and be able to rightly divide them so as to meet the need of those who hear him.

VI. Paul's Farewell Message to Timothy (II Tim. 1:1-14).

1. Personal relationship (vv. 1, 2). Timothy was Paul's spiritual son, therefore a peculiar love went out to him. This strong affection was a vital factor in influencing Timothy's life.

2. Paul's deep interest in Timothy (vv. 3-5).

a. Prayer for him. While a prisoner in a lonely dungeon, he thinks of Timothy and prays for him.

b. Longed to see him. This reveals the vital reciprocal affection between Paul and Timothy, and also Paul's inner self. He was intensely human.

3. Gives Timothy Earnest Counsel (vv. 6-14).

a. To stir up the divine gift within him (vv. 6, 7). To stir up means to fan into flame. Enthusiasm of the Christian worker has a tendency to wane and, therefore, needs to be constantly stirred up.

b. Be not ashamed (vv. 8-12). He must be willing to suffer affliction for Christ's sake.

c. Hold fast the essential truths of the gospel (vv. 13, 14). This means the fundamental truths of Christianity, including the incarnation, atonement, resurrection, and coming again of Jesus Christ. These doctrines have been committed to God's servants as precious deposits. Servants of Christ are charged with the solemn obligation of guarding them as the shepherd guards his sheep or the soldier that which has been committed unto him.

Two Rules

There are two good rules which ought to be written upon every heart. Never believe anything bad about anybody, unless you positively know that it is true. Never tell even that, unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary, and that God is listening while you tell.—Van Dyke.

250 Varieties of Wheat Are Found Grown in U. S.

Wheat varieties ripening in the field may be identified without equipment other than a keen eye and a measuring rule. The key is given in technical bulletin 459, just published by the United States Department of Agriculture, which shows the differences that identify nearly 250 varieties of wheat grown commercially in the United States. J. Allen Clark and B. B. Bayles of the bureau of plant industry are the authors of this classification which supersedes and brings up to date a publication on wheat varieties issued in 1922. The new bulletin includes 77 new varieties and drops 68 varieties which have ceased to be of importance.

Contrary to popular impressions, the most distinctive difference in wheats is not the growth habit which makes one a winter wheat and another a spring wheat. In some parts of the South and in California "spring wheat" varieties are seeded in the fall and grow through the winter. Yield, hardiness, and resistance to disease, which are of great importance economically, are not of much use in classifying the varieties.

The characters used in identifying the varieties of wheat are: The presence or absence of awns, the covering, coloring and shape of the glumes, the color, length, and texture of the kernels, and the growth habit of the plant. The key to the classification is based on differences observed in more than 30,000 plantings in nursery rows, the first series in 1915 to 1920 and another series from 1930 to 1933. Other characters of value in identifying a variety are: The relative time of ripening, the form of the spike, the length and strength of the straw, and the minor characters of the kernels, but these are not so reliable because they are likely to differ as the result of climatic and cultural conditions.

For practical classification of wheats, the investigators found that nurseries in the west were most useful because of the normal development of plant characters and colors owing partly to the absence of summer rains.

In addition to the keys for common wheat and for the other distinctive botanical species the bulletin includes condensed descriptive, historical, and economic information in regard to the wheat varieties, and includes maps showing where the varieties are grown. Marquis is the spring wheat most widely sown, but in recent years Ceres has been advancing in favor in this class and is displacing Marquis in many sections. Thatcher, a new variety, developed in co-operative experiments, and distributed by the Minnesota station, may in part replace Ceres. Such shifts show the necessity for revision of the classification.

This bulletin continues the simplification of the names of wheat varieties which was a feature of Department Bulletin 1074, published in 1922. New wheat varieties registered since then have had, as a rule, simple names.

The authors have found that few of the many wheat fields examined are pure. Some fields are more or less a mixture of strains and natural hybrids that have no names. The descriptive parts of the bulletin reveal that many of the older varieties originated as field hybrids that were picked out and propagated because of desirable characteristics noted by observant farmers.

The newer varieties are the result of careful selection of parents and artificial pollination, followed by selection for the desired characters by trained federal, state, and private breeders.

RAIN OF GEESE

Hundreds of geese fell from the clouds at Veszprem, Hungary, and were picked up by the inhabitants. The birds were wild geese, and it is thought that they must have become exhausted while on their way to warmer climes.

PERSONAL MENTION

Friends of Joe Hollidaye will be delighted to learn that he is still progressing further up the ladder of success in the newspaper world. He is now holding a responsible position with the Kingston Morning Herald in Kingston, N. C., and we have enjoyed each edition of this interesting daily paper he has thoughtfully sent us. Mr. Hollidaye is a tireless worker, and enthusiastic "go getter" and we send congratulations to this former fellow traveller in the sea of printers ink.

Mrs. Dick Martin, charming and gracious young matron of Calera, was a cordially welcomed guest in the Democrat office on Wednesday.

Clay Lester, of Birmingham, spent several days in Columbiana visiting his mother, Mrs. Nora Lester. While in town, this happy-go-lucky, likable chap, paid us a personal visit, which we happily recall.

The Exchange Club of Columbiana held a most enthusiastic meeting on last Friday night at Curlee's Cafe. After the delicious dinner was served, progressive and definite plans for Civic Improvements were announced.

Fumigate Weevils To Protect Grains

AUBURN, Ala.—Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the entomology department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, is advising farmers to treat their stored corn, beans, and peas against weevils.

"Fumigate seeds by placing in air-tight containers and treat with carbon disulphide, he said. Half a cup full is sufficient to treat a barrel of seed. Place liquid in a shallow receptacle on top of seed pile and close container to make it air-tight. Allow to remain for one to two days."

Welding

. . . the best way to make a perfect union of two pieces of metal is by welding them together.

. . . and the best way to get a more pleasing flavor and a better taste in a cigarette is by welding together the different types of tobacco . . .

That is just what we do in making CHESTERFIELD Cigarettes—the three types of mild ripe home-grown tobaccos, that is tobaccos grown in this country, are welded together. Then they are welded with aromatic Turkish.

When these tobaccos are welded together you get a combined flavor which is entirely different from any one type of tobacco.

It is this welding of the right amounts of the right kind of tobaccos that makes CHESTERFIELD a milder and better-tasting cigarette.

At a recent meeting of the Shelby County Board of Revenue, Myra Hamner Miles was unanimously elected Clerk, to fill out the unexpired term of the late Oliver Miles, who was Clerk of the Board of Revenue for 20 years. Mrs. Miles has been Acting Clerk for several months, and has had many years experience in Clerical requirements. She is efficient and capable, and her many friends throughout Shelby County are congratulating her upon receiving this recognition for her conscientious work during the past few months.

Luther Fowler, who will assume the duties of Tax Assessor for Shelby County on October 1st, announces that Miss Lucile Bristow, of Shelby, Alabama, will be his Assistant.

L. H. Ellis, of Columbiana, has been appointed a Member of the State Board of Education. This is an honor position and was conferred by Gov. Bibb Graves.

Congressman George Huddleston, of Washington, D. C., was a distinguished visitor in Columbiana on last Saturday.

According to information received from Probate Judge Len C. Walker, the following scale of prices will govern auto tags for 1935: A tags will cost $5.50—this class includes Austins and T-models. B tags cost $9.50—this includes cars in the class weighing from 2,000 to 2,500. C tags cost $13.50—this includes Fords and Chevrolets weighing from 2,500 to 3,250 pounds. D tags are $18.50.

The license plates can be bought from October 1st through November 14th. If you wait until November 15, there will be a penalty added.

In addition to the above you will have to purchase a Driver's license, not only for the car owner, but for each member of the family who drives.

We heard something sometime back about a REDUCTION. We are now wondering WHERE it is. Looks like we have again been "taken for a ride".

A CLOSER TAX CHECK IS ORDERED BY THE STATE, according to instructions recently issued to Tax Assessors, which require a more definite description of real and personal property. A new form of assessment sheet is now in force and questions must be answered under oath.

Tax returns must be filed between October 1st, and December 30th, after which date a fee of 50 cents for failure to make returns will be imposed, the fee to go to the State. A penalty of 10 per cent will also be added after February 1st, 1936.

The Legislature of 1935 wrote 400 new laws on the statute books. Approximate cost to the tax payers—$300,000! The long session began on January 8th, 1935, and came to a close on the 49th day. There were introduced 1.518 bills. There are six proposed Amendments to the Constitution which will be submitted to the people in a special election to be called on December 17th, 1935.

The Tax Sale for delinquent tax payers was held on Monday, September 16th, between the legal hours of sale. There were sold to the State 130 assessments of Shelby County proverty.

Montevallo Ministers Welcome Students

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—At a special convocation program at Alabama College Friday morning in Palmer Hall, the local ministers welcomed the students to the campus and community. President A. F. Harman presided at the assembly.

Following an organ selection by H. D. LeBaron, of the school of music and the opening hymn, the Rev. A. J. Cox, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, gave the Scripture reading. The Rev. F. B. Pearson, pastor of the Baptist Church, offered the prayer and the talk was made by the Rev. I. T. Carlton, pastor of the Montevallo Methodist Church.

TO DRIVE ANY CAR AFTER NOV. 15, YOU MUST BUY LICENSE

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Governor Graves said last Thursday he would take no action towards organization of the State highway patrol authorized by the bill he recently approved which also provides for payment of a drivers' license fee by all persons who drive motor vehicles in Alabama, until the latter part of next month when a considerable amount of revenue for operation of the patrol should have accumulated from the sale of drivers' licenses.

The law specifies that fees collected for these licenses are to be used exclusively for the support and maintenance of the highway patrol, the personnel of which will be appointed by the Governor who will have full power and authority to remove any appointee at will. Drivers' licenses will be issued to owners of motor vehicles, by probate judges, when the owners obtain their 1936 motor vehicle licenses which are due October 1st and delinquent on November 15th.

For a license issued to the head of each family who drives the vehicle, a charge of 50 cents will be made. For each other member of the family who also drives it, the drivers' license fee will be 25 cents. These licenses must be obtained annually.

EXAMINATIONS TO BE HELD FOR U. S. GOVERNMENT JOBS

Alabama College Classes Started

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The first full week of classes was to begin at Alabama College Monday morning, the orientation program having been completed Saturday. Indications are that the resident enrollment, exclusive of the training school, will exceed 850 during the session. This would be the largest attendance since 1929.

Every county in the state is again represented in the student body. The largest attendance is from Jefferson, Mobile and Montgomery Counties. There are 26 out-of-state students enrolled and two students from France have registered.

The fortieth session, opening the administration of President A. F. Harman, has thus had a most successful beginning.

A complete selection of the latest Sports and Dress Shoes for Ladies await your inspection.

A. A. A. PAYMENTS BOOST INCOME OF COUNTY $71,786.85

Farmers of Shelby County who are cooperating in the agricultural programs received a total of $71,786.75 in rental and benefit payments during the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1935, reports A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent.

These payments together with the increase in prices paid to farmers for their commodities have been reflected in the larger income being received by farmers, said Dr. L. N. Duncan, President of Alabama Polytechnic Institute and Director of the State Extension Service.

From 1932 to 1934, he pointed out, the total cash income of Alabama farmers increased from $59,605,000 to $114,162,000. The 1933 income was $92,737,000.

The total AAA payments to farmers of the State during the past fiscal year ran to $9,780,926.15, divided as follows: Cotton farmers, $9,322 776.-44; Corn-hog producers, $454,221.11; and tobacco growers, $3,928.60.

Siluria P.-T. A. Will Present Play Sept. 20

By WILLIE THOMASON

SILURIA, Ala.—"See You Later", a three act musical comedy by Bruce Killian, staged exclusively by The Triangle Producing Company, of Greensboro, N. C., under the direction of Mr. C. D. Rodgers is being presented by the Siluria P.-T. A. at the Thompson High School Auditorium, Friday, Sept. 20th, at 8 p. m.

OLD AGE PENSIONS NOW STATE LAW; ACT STARTS IN 1936

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Old-age pensions and unemployment insurance became Alabama law last Saturday as Governor Graves affixed his signature to the two legislative bills before a score of spectators, including Senate and House sponsors, in the executive offices. The old-age pensions act becomes effective in 1936 and provides a maximum benefit of $30 monthly a family, while the unemployment insurance benefits with a maximum of $15 weekly for 16 weeks weeks will not be available until two years hence.

Representatives E. J. Owen and Earl McGowin and Senators Forney Stephens and James Simpson, legislative sponsors of the bills, witnessed their signing.

The unemvloyment insurance bill was officially designated the Stephens-McGowin act in a joint resolution adopted Friday, and the old-age pension bill was officially named the Simpson-Owen act.

Also signed into law Saturday was the Walton anti-rabies bill making the inoculation of dogs mandatory at a fee not to exceed 25 cents.

During late Friday, Friday night and Saturday the chief executive signed 73 bills.

WEDNESDAY SET AS 'FARMERS' DAY AT ALA. STATE FAIR

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The Alabama State Fair will play host to the Farmers of the state on Wednesday, Sept. 25th. On that day special events of interest to the farmers will be staged. The outstanding events of the day will be Harness Horse Races and the Tractor Races. Ab Jenkins, speed king, will be featured in the Tractor Races. Jenkins is known as the mile a minute farmer since he established a record for driving a farm tractor at a speed of over 68 miles an hour. Four Tractors will take part in the races in which Jenkins will be featured driving one of the Allis-Chalmers tractors.

The agricultural, poultry, fish and game, rabbits, wild duck and other exhibits will be larger than last year and naturally be of interest to the visiting farmers from throughout the state, as will be the United States Government Department of Agriculture and State Government exhibits.

Local P.-T. A. Holds 1st Meeting of Year

The P.-T. A. met Wednesday afternoon, September 11th, at the Grammar School for the first meeting of the new school year. Mrs. Cecil Duke, newly elected President, had charge of the program. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the Secretary, Mrs. Hermonie Wooley. A report was given by the treasurer, Mrs. L. C. Taylor.

Various items were up before the organization for discussion and plans discussed for the ensuing year. An executive meeting was called by the President for Thursday, Sept. 12th.

An interesting program was given with the Rev. H. M. Hurst, Prof. E. H. Childs and Miss Gertrude Bishop telling of the first school days fifty years ago, the school days following and the first day in school of a first grade child now. These talks were received with enthusiasm, each giving their subjects in their own individual way. The President's message by the National President of the P.-T. A. was read by Mrs. Howard Holcomb.

Impromter speeches were given by various members commending the new President, Mrs. Cecil Duke, for her efficiency and faithfulness to the organization.

The meeting adjourned until the second Wednesday of October.

Fiddlers Convention At Chelsea Sept. 28

CHELSEA, Ala.—There will be a Fiddlers Convention at Chelsea School House on Saturday night, September 28th. Prizes for best music rendered will be awarded.

A small fee will be charged and funds collected will be appropriated on Fair expenses. (Signed)

COMMITTEE.

STATE WILL SPEND $75,000 ANNUALLY IN T. B. PROGRAM

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Sincere interest in public welfare as shown by Governor Bibb Graves and members of the legislature in measures passed during the session which has just adjourned will result in a "body blow" to the tuberculosis menace in Alabama, in the opinion of Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer.

One of the measures providing an annual appropriation for the next four years of $75,000—when, in the opinion of the Governor, the funds can be made available—for a statewide tuberculosis program. The fund will be used to assist the various counties in caring for tuberculosis patients.

"There is every reason to believe," Dr. Baker declared, "that when the legislature reconvenes in January in special session, provisions will be made for this appropriation and then very quickly thereafter the State subsidy program, for which we have so long laboured, will likely become a reality."

Georgia, Mississippi and other Southern States are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in the maintenance of centralized state sanatoriums, but the Health Officer said that the problem can be met more effectively and more economically by the construction of small hospitals throughout the State, each serving one or more counties.

Despite the fact that tuberculosis in its early stages is usually curable, it ranks third as a cause of death in Alabama, while for the nation as a whole it ranks seventh. The concept that a certain climate or a certain altitude is necessary in order to effect a cure also has been proven false, the Health Officer said. Under proper medical and sanatorium care tuberculosis can be cured any where in Alabama as readily as in any other climate.

"It has been abundantly proven that a sanatorium properly and scientifically operated can produce results quite as satisfactory in one section of the country as in another," Dr. Baker asserted. "When the state-wide program begins, we will have made an important advance in the preservation of human life in Alabama."

Executive Meeting of P.-T. A. Held Sept. 12

An executive meeting of the P.-T. A. was held Thursday afternoon, September 12th, at the Grammar School when the President, Mrs. Cecil Duke, appointed her committees for the coming year and discussed plans for building up the local membership.

Those on the Program Committee are as follows: Mrs. Pernie Hendrick, Prof. E. H. Childs and Miss Mary Peters; Finance and Budget: Mrs. Howard Holcomb, Mrs. Luther Curlee, Mrs. N. M. Cole, Mrs. A. J. Dover, Mrs. L. B. Riddle, Mrs. Bruton Lyons and Mrs. A. C. Walton; Membership: Mrs. Henry Nichols, Miss Era Pitts, Mrs. Clark Sturdivant, Mrs. Charles Swann, Mrs. Lloyd Cole and Mrs. Homer Bearden; Publication of Parents Magazine: Mrs. MacKnight; Hospitality Committee: Misses Irene and Gertrude Bishop, Vivian Nix, Elizabeth Bell, Meroney and Mrs. Charlie Nivens; Summer Round-up: Mrs. Homer Walton, Mrs. C. H. Fore, Mrs. Charles Johnson and Mrs. Garvin Baker; Publicity: Mrs. Howard Holcomb, Mrs. E. H. Childs and Miss Woodem.

Vincent Merchants Planning Trade Day

Vincent, Alabama, is one of the most progressive towns in Shelby County. This community has recently organized a Civic Club composed of an enthusiastic group of men who are truly Civic Boosters.

A number of merchants in the town are now sponsoring a Trade Day. Watch for further details next week. Watch especially for the dates September 27th and 28th.

Assassination of Senator Long Stirs the Nation—Great Britain Ready to Take Sanctions Against Italy—Ickes Versus Hopkins.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

HUEY P. LONG, United States senator and political dictator of Louisiana, is dead, the victim of an assassin's bullet. As he passed through a corridor of the state-house in Baton Rouge, where the legislature was passing more laws to solidify his control over the state, he was shot once through the body by Dr. Carl A. Weiss, Jr., of Baton Rouge, one of the "Kingfish's" political opponents. The assassin was immediately shot to death by the senator's ever present bodyguards.

Huey P. Long

The surgeons and physicians worked unceasingly to save Long, but his strength steadily waned and shortly after 4 o'clock Tuesday morning, about thirty hours after the shooting, he passed away.

Long's body lay in state in the rotunda of the Capitol building while many thousands passed by the bier. The impressive funeral services were held on the front terrace and the dead senator was interred in a sunken garden of the Capitol grounds. Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, the young minister who deserted a rich parish in Shreveport to follow Long, was the only speaker at the funeral. The only music was the song, "Every Man a King," played in minor key and dirge time by the State University band.

Though the man who killed Long was known as one of his political foes, the real story of the assassination was shrouded in uncertainty. Earl Christenberry, secretary of the late senator, declared that Long was murdered as a result of a conspiracy; that a number of his enemies formed a "jury of death," and that Doctor Weiss was selected by lot to fire the fatal bullet. To those who are familiar with the conditions in Louisiana this story does not sound especially fantastic.

What will become of Long's "empire" is a question that agitates all his followers, and all the people of the state as well. For the present, it seemed likely, the members of the Long machine will sink their personal ambitions and try to hold the organization intact. It will be difficult for them to decide on a successor to the "Kingfish" as their leader. Gov. O. K. Allen is considered too mild and peace-loving. Seymour Weiss—no relative of the assassin—treasurer of the Long organization, is the strongest man in the lot, but he always has drawn back from holding a public position. Allen A. Ellender, speaker of the house, may be the man finally selected, though Lieut. Gov. James A. Noe is to the fore.

Political leaders of all parties expressed their deep regret for the assassination of Senator Long.

MUSSOLINI tacitly consented to the appointment of a committee of five nations by the League of Nations council to handle the Italo-Ethiopian embroglio, and after protest agreed that Great Britain and France should be among the members of that body. The other members are Spain, Turkey and Poland. Senor Salvador de Madariaga of Spain is the chairman, and he and his associates at once began the task assigned them. Each country is represented by its chief delegate, being besides Madariaga, Eden of England, Laval of France, Rustu Arras of Turkey and Josef Beck of Poland.

Salvador de Madariaga

Soon after the assembly of the league opened its session, Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary, electrified the gathering by an outspoken warning to Italy and France. He declared Great Britain recognized Italy's need for expansion and raw materials but would not admit these could not be obtained peaceably. Pounding the tribune, he said:

"Britain stands for steady collective resistance to all acts of unprovoked aggression." He paused, struck the tribune again, and repeated quietly:

"Steady collective resistance to all acts of unprovoked aggression."

Sir Samuel more than intimated that Great Britain was prepared to take sanctions against Italy in case of aggression provided all the other members of the league shared the risk; and if not, then England was prepared to isolate herself from the continent. This seemed to put it up to Premier Laval of France, to choose between the friendship of Britain and that of Italy. Laval, meanwhile, was trying to persuade Mussolini to accept another plan he had devised and postponed his speech to the assembly.

Representatives of the Netherlands and Sweden were the first to support Hoare's position, announcing their countries would fulfill all obligations, including collective penalties, if any member became a victim of aggression.

In two speeches in Rome Mussolini gave indication that he would not be diverted from his purpose to conquer Ethiopia. Though in one he said "the Italian people want peace provided it is accompanied by justice," in the other he declared "we shall march straight on." The Ethiopian government announced that "telegrams from the northern frontier show that the Italians are making important troop movements on the Ethiopian and Eritrean frontier, indicating an early offensive against Ethiopia."

Accepting the advice of his "brain trust," which includes Everett A. Colson of the United States, Emperor Haile Selassie instructed his representatives in Geneva to reject all solutions thus far offered by the powers for settling the quarrel with Italy. These are a tripartite mandate over Ethiopia, as suggested by France, with the League of Nations guaranteeing Ethiopia's independence and territorial integrity; France's proposal for an Italian protectorate similar to that of the British in Iraq, and an international police force similar to the one that occupied the Saar.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATOR ICKES and Work Progress Administrator Hopkins got into such a quarrel over the spending of the $4,000,000,000 fund that the President had to call them to Hyde Park, together with the third and neutral member of the works relief triumvirate—Frank G. Walker, the director of the national emergency council and administrator of applications.

Harry Hopkins

Others called to the important works relief parley included Daniel Bell, director of the budget; Charles West, under-secretary of interior; Corrington Gill, assistant of Hopkins; Fred Ironsides, administrative assistant of Walker, and Col. Horatio Hackett, chief of housing in the PWA.

Mr. Roosevelt was determined to have peace, and told those present that the prime necessity at this time is to make jobs quickly, always keeping in mind the idea of turning workers back to private industry as business warrants. This looked like a victory for Hopkins, who favors quick jobs, over Ickes, champion of permanent public works. The President has declared that he hopes 3,500,000 persons can be removed from the relief rolls and put to work by the first of November.

LEGAL attack on the Guffey soft coal act has been opened by 16 coal companies operating in Harlan county, Kentucky, in Federal court at Louisville. They brought suit for injunction against its enforcement, charging that it violates the federal Constitution in these ways:

1. It violated the fifth amendment, which forbids taking property without due process of law.

2. It violated the tenth amendment, which reserves to the states, or to the people, all rights not granted the federal government or forbidden the states.

3. It attempts to delegate legislative power.

4. The section levying a 15 per cent tax on all coal production, with a 90 per cent refund to producers submitting to the code provided by the act, is "an unconstitutional attempt on the part of congress, under the guise of taxation, to punish those producers of bituminous coal who are unwilling to surrender their constitutional rights."

5. Congress has no jurisdiction over and no power to legislate upon certain matters covered by the act or the code.

The companies declared they would refuse to submit to the act and the code it authorizes.

Former Federal Judge Charles I. Dawson filed the action as counsel for the plaintiffs. Judge Dawson recently left the bench to re-enter private law practice after declaring unconstitutional the NRA and other New Deal measures.

UNIVERSITY of Michigan is rejoicing over a gift of $5,000,000 for enlargement of its graduate school. The money is donated by the Horace H. and Mary A. Rackham fund, based on the bulk of the estate of the late Horace H. Rackham, Detroit philanthropist.

One million dollars will be spent to purchase a square block of land adjoining the present campus and for a new building. The remainder will be employed as an endowment. The income will be used to promote research. By the terms of the agreement the school will be known as the Horace H. Rackham School of Graduate Studies.

"The purpose of the gift is twofold," Dr. Mark S. Knapp, director of the fund, said. "First, to create a memorial, and, secondly, to place the university on a firmer foundation as one of the greater universities in this country. It will provide means for original research, funds for which have been lacking."

REACTION of American business and financial men to President Roosevelt's latest public statement that his basic program has reached substantial completion and industry will have a breathing spell ran the gamut between mild hope and downright unbelief. Those who permitted themselves to be quoted were generally extremely cautious in their expressions, but there was usually a vein of skepticism in their remarks. Wall Street brokers were gladdened by a spurt of trading at higher prices, but bankers were more than doubtful, and economists insisted that a balanced budget, which wasn't mentioned in the President's letter to Roy Howard, publisher, was a prime requisite.

Silas Strawn, former president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, said: "Business men generally will say that the improvement in some lines of business has been in spite of, rather than because of, the activities of the administration."

Politicians regarded the letter as Mr. Roosevelt's opening of his campaign for re-election, and praised or decried it according to their party affiliations. Frank Knox of the Chicago Daily News, a potential candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, called it "just another promise" and set forth the many campaign promises which Mr. Roosevelt has failed to keep. Senator Black of Alabama said the statement was "a wonderfully clear explanation of his program, its original aims and its execution. It should be a call to those engaged in business to co-operate in further national progress."

Howard had written the President that many business men had become convinced that there could be no real recovery "until the fears of business have been allayed through the granting of a breathing spell to industry and a recess from further experimentation until the country can recover its losses."

In a long letter the President replied that the legislative program of his administration had reached substantial completion and "the breathing spell of which you speak is here—decidedly so."

THREE men who made independent investigation of the deaths of 256 war veterans in the Florida hurricane reported they found no evidence indicating culpable negligence on the part of any persons. They were States Attorney G. A. Worley of Miami, Aubrey Williams, representing Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins, and Col. George E. Ijams of the veterans' bureau, representing President Roosevelt.

This finding was denounced as "whitewash" by James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; John J. Skilliman, commander of the Miami chapter of the same organization, and other representatives of veterans' societies. Van Zandt's statement called on President Roosevelt to ignore the official report and take action against "officials guilty of negligence."

RESTORATION of the Greek monarchy is coming nearer and presumably Former King George will be the man to occupy the throne. Premier Tsaldaris has put himself on record as favoring the restoration, and President Zaimis has indicated he will be willing to resign to make room for a king.

Tsaldaris said in his statement:

"I attribute the nervous tension at present existing in public ranks and the army to general anxiety concerning the question of a constitution. I consider democratic royalty as the natural regime for Greece, and ask the people to vote for it in the impending plebiscite."

"WE WENT to war on foot, and we're joining the parade the same way," declared about 150 of the grizzled veterans who attended the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in Grand Rapids, Mich. So these sturdy old men marched in the big parade while the rest, numbering some 250, rode in automobiles. Here were all that remained of the hundreds of thousands who answered the call to the colors in Civil war days, save for a few who were kept at home by extreme age and illness. Some of the states had no representatives in the line, but their flags were carried nevertheless. From other states there were but one or two. It was a pathetic but inspiring procession, watched by thousands whose eyes were dimmed by tears and escorted by Sons of Veterans, American Legionnaires and Veterans of the Spanish war.

Oley Nelson, 91, of Slater, Iowa, was elected commander-in-chief, to succeed Albert E. Stacey of Elbridge, N. Y. In a session of the organization the proposed reunion at Gettysburg next year with the Confederate veterans was discussed, and Commander Stacey made it plain that the affair would not be held under the official auspices of the Grand Army. The plan originated in Pennsylvania.

EDWARD L. DOHENY, one of the wealthiest of America's oil magnates, died in Los Angeles at the age of seventy-nine years, after a long illness. His oil interests were mainly in California and Mexico. In 1924 Doheny and his old friend, Albert B. Fall, secretary of the interior under Harding, were involved in the investigation of the government's leasing of the Elk Hills naval oil reserve in California to Doheny for exploitation.

Doheny was twice tried and twice acquitted, on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government and of giving a bribe of $100,000 to Fall. The latter, however, was found guilty of taking a bribe and went to prison.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Black rust in the Northwest, particularly in the Dakotas and Minnesota, and to a lesser extent—due to less rain—in Montana, is going to upset a lot of AAA calculations on wheat this year. For example, all government figures so far are very misleading, in that they estimate bushels of wheat, but take no account of the fact that due to the peculiar type of ravaging black rust effects, the same number of bushels of wheat will produce less flour.

Conservative estimates in Minneapolis and St. Paul, for example, are that from 40 to 50 per cent of the wheat crop expected in the whole Northwest will be unmillable. That is, it would not, in the normal course of events, be ground into flour. This is complicated further by the processing taxes.

The processing tax is based on the bushel of wheat that goes into the flour mill. Now a bushel of wheat which has been affected by black rust will produce only a fraction of the flour that a normal bushel of wheat would. In ordinary times, this would be carefully calculated, and would be reflected in a much lower price paid for that wheat by the miller. But the fact that the processing tax is based on the bushel of wheat, not on the barrel of flour, upsets normal calculations.

Black rust strikes the wheat on one side—always the southern side. If the weather is dry, it does not spread around the kernel. If the weather is damp, it does. It makes a ring all around, and as most of the nourishment comes up near the circumference of the kernel, instead of through the center, the food of the kernel is choked off. This means that in a bushel of rust-infected wheat, there is an unusually large percentage of bran, and an unusually small percentage which can be ground into white flour.

Canada Also Hit

The duty on wheat from Canada is 42 cents a bushel. Canada also suffered from black rust this year, but Canada has a tremendous carry-over—considerably more than 100,000,000 bushels, which is not affected by black rust. Moreover, the government of Canada has decided to liquidate this wheat, which it has been holding in much the same way that the United States government held cotton, and as the Brazilian government held coffee.

This hold-over Canadian wheat, experts say, can easily pay the 42 cents duty, and the processing tax, and still be a bargain for Minneapolis millers in contrast with about one half of the northwestern wheat. This is due to the complication of the processing tax, plus the fact that half or more of the northwestern wheat assays such a small proportion of flour.

Predictions by experts are that at least 50,000,000 bushels of this hold-over Canadian wheat will be bought by United States millers, and probably nearer 100,000,000 bushels.

The rust-infected wheat thus driven out will have to be sold as cattle feed. But there enters another complication. There is already in the Northwest a great plenty of cattle feed. All forage crops were good this year, due to the very moisture which hurt the wheat. Forage crops, due to their bulk as compared with their value, cannot be hauled economically for long distances. Which means that if they are to be consumed at all, they must be consumed in the northwestern states.

From all of which experts predict that there will be tremendous buying of young pigs for fattening, and young cattle, in the Dakotas, Minnesota, and Montana, this year, and that while the production of beef may not affect prices before 1937, the price of pork will be forced down by next summer, no matter what the AAA may do.

Atlantic-Gulf Canal

Aside entirely from the question of whether the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf canal across northern Florida will ruin the fresh water supply of that portion of the state south of the proposed ditch down to Lake Okechobee, the proposition is really on all fours with the much talked about Passamoquaddy.

It has been considered for many years. Always it has been rejected, after study by engineers. Always the reason has been the same. It is entirely practical as an engineering project—indeed it presents few real difficulties from that angle, if this contamination of Florida's fresh water supply is waved to one side. But is it economically sound? The answer has always been "No."

Careful study, even this time, produced a report to President Roosevelt that if the total volume of business which might be expected should materialize, still the proposition would not pay interest on its cost and operating expenses. There is no hair line about this. The experts had no doubt about it whatever.

But there is an even gloomier angle. Three-fourths of the present tonnage moving from Gulf ports to North Atlantic American ports, and across the Atlantic (tonnage for South Atlantic ports of course would not use it) consists at present of oil. No one is in a position to state how long this tonnage will continue so to move. Oil fields now shipping by way of the Gulf may continue shipping for many years. On the other hand, their production may slump any time. Also it is always possible that pipe lines may be found more economical for moving the product.

So that no one knows at what moment three-fourths of the existing tonnage that this canal might expect may be cut off.

Can't Foretell Tonnage

Against this the contention is made in defense that no one can foretell what business may arise to provide plenty of tonnage for the canal. It is quite possible. Many railroads doing a large business today, and serving very real needs, were constructed to accommodate traffic which has long since disappeared—would never have been built if their builders, and the investors who provided the construction costs, had suspected that the traffic they were built to handle might evaporate.

The immediate pressure for the canal, of course, is to provide some useful work for idle men—something that will not be mere boondoggling. On the theory that this work may be useful—may even prove profitable for reasons not now realized—the work is justified by its defenders. And it is a real job. The canal will be 195 miles long. It involves moving almost twice as much dirt as was involved in digging the Panama canal—slides and all. Though on account of the difference in terrain, climate, etc., the expense will not be anything like as great.

Incidentally, traffic on the Panama canal is far greater than anyone at the time conceived it could be. So that there has been strong pressure economically, as well as for the more obvious reason of national defense, for a Nicaraguan canal. Engineers, leaving out of consideration the question of keeping a canal open despite air raids and sabotage in war, would like to double the number of locks at Panama, thus doubling the amount of tonnage which could move through it.

About Politics

It is an old saying in politics that the man "out in front" in the race for the Presidential nomination of a big party—six months before the convention—is bound to be killed off. The theory is that all the other candidates are shooting at him. Also that the public is highly changeable, and forgets easily.

There are exceptions to all rules, as evidenced in this case by the present incumbent of the White House, Franklin D. Roosevelt, was well out in front for the Democratic nomination for 18 months prior to the 1932 Democratic convention. He sprang into the lead when he was re-elected governor of New York, by a tremendous majority, in November, 1930. His boom defied all traditions by staying there, despite all sorts of ups and downs, right through the whole period. To use a racing term, his boom was never headed. There was never a day from November, 1930, until his nomination in June, 1932, when fair betting odds would not have favored him against any other candidate. Or for that matter, against any two other candidates.

Politicians of both parties are wondering if an exception will come this time in the Republican party. At present the two leaders, so far out in front that it seems hardly worth while to figure who is third and who is fourth, are Senator William E. Borah and Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News.

Almost any politician, familiar with national politics, will tell his friends confidentially that if either of the two is nominated, it will be Knox. This theory is also based on old fixations, which may easily be proved wrong. Stripped down to its essentials, the theory on which these politicians eliminate Borah is two-fold. First, that he is too old. Second, that the "regulars" have never wanted Borah, and hence would not want him now.

As to Borah

That is one of the reasons the recent poll of Republican local leaders by Robert H. Lucas was so interesting. Apparently these local leaders thought Borah would make a very strong candidate in their communities, whether they personally would prefer another type or not.

As to his age, Borah is in marvelous condition considering his 70 years. Friends are fond of saying he has all the Mormon virtues. By which they mean he uses no tea, coffee, tobacco or alcohol. He is a sparing eater, and has kept up his horseback riding even in Washington. He insists on his beauty sleep every night, cares nothing about society, never subjects himself to any undue strains. For example, even when he was tremendously interested in filibusters, he never made the long, grueling, time-killing speeches for which some other senators are famous.

All his life he has been a lone wolf in politics. In the senate he has never been a cog in the machine. He would never be "regular."

The strength of Colonel Knox, as shown in various polls, is simply revolutionary from a political standpoint. One has to go back to Horace Greely for a precedent, and even that is not a good one.

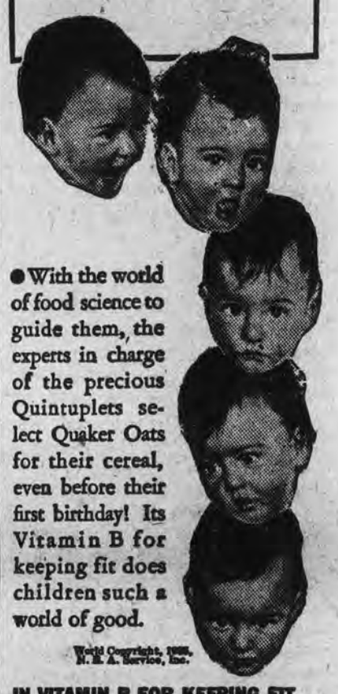
King Who Reigned 10 Days Left 10 Tons of Books



The libraries formed by Henry V, of France, and by the Empress Elisabeth of Austria, have been acquired by a famous London bookseller and will probably be exhibited to the public this fall.

Henry V, of France, who reigned for ten days in 1830 and died as the Comte de Chambord in 1883 was Henry, Duke of Bordeaux, a grandson of Charles X, of France. His magnificent library, consisting of ten tons of books in 87 huge cases, was eventually left to the son of Don Carlos—Don Jaime, Duke of Madrid. After negotiations lasting over a year it has been bought from his heirs and removed to London from the Castle of Frohsdorf, near Vienna.

Many of the books have superb Louis XVI bindings, and a feature of the library is an extraordinary collection of French pamphlets written between 1820 and 1875, for and against the monarchy.

The library left by the Empress Elisabeth consists of a huge number of volumes in lavish bindings. Liszt's Coronation Mass, 1856, is in a specially ornate binding of salmon pink, embossed with the arms of the empress.

OLD HALIFAX PARK SHUT; GUARDED BY TROOPS ONE DAY

Once each year all the entrances to one of North America's most unique and beautiful parks are closed to the public and placed under military guard for 24 hours. This lovely section, Point Pleasant park, is located on the tip of the peninsula on which lies Halifax, the capital of Nova Scotia.

The park is theoretically under the control of the federal government to whom it was granted by the British crown when the Dominion of Canada took over the defense of the nation at the beginning of the present century. Federal authorities have leased it to the city of Halifax for an indefinite period at the rate of a shilling a year. The park is closed for 24 hours and all its entrances guarded by troops once each year to maintain the rights of ownership and to prevent any possibility of its being claimed as a public right of way.

It is thickly beforested with a rich variety of stately trees, contains a maze of mossy footpaths and is filled with romantic old forts reminiscent of Indians on the warpath and revolutionary privateers on the rampage. Automobiles are taboo here.

Within the park is the Martello tower, built in the last decade of the Eighteenth century by Queen Victoria's father, the duke of Kent, who, with Indians and Americans in mind, thought it prudent to construct strongholds to defend the city of Halifax against mythical invaders. It holds a labyrinth of gloomy passages and rooms within rooms. A deceptive stairway leads to the roof where the visitors can gaze through slits made for oldtime snipers. On the point itself are the remnants of batteries and entrenchments dating back to the 1700's, when Halifax was a military center and these fortifications were needed to guard the entrance of the famous Northwest Arm of the Sea. Here, too, the visitor will see a great rock, locally known as "Chain Rock." This was the terminus of a great iron chain which once stretched across the mouth of the Arm to prevent hostile ships of war from entering its waters. In this vicinity, too, there is a quaint little cottage from which a ferry is run for those who wish to cross the arm and stroll on the other shore. In this house one family have dwelled for generations, their sole occupation the operation of the ferry.

Fear Fat?—Count Calories

Anti-Fat claims that blacken the nutritional reputation of certain foods may be grossly misleading. Average individuals grow fat or thin according to the total number of calories they eat a day. The one rule for reducing is to cut down on the calories but include enough of all the food essentials.—Bureau of Home Economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Constipation
Relieved Quickly, Easily

Mrs. B. G. Brown, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I take Dr. Hitchcock's All-Vegetable Laxative Powder for dizziness, biliousness and sick headaches caused by constipation. I have never found anything better. The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The Boston Lawrences came to California at the beginning of the gold rush, but the holdings of the family have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars. Dick Stebbins, who has been admitted to the bar, has the case against Ariel dismissed. Gail suddenly realizes that she loves Dick and not Van.

Phil came in at nine, and they talked idly until the clock amazed them by striking ten. Then every one was up at once, and Gail went to the telephone. If Ariel was as late as this, Phil must go get her. Poor Phil, who looked so tired!

"Let me run upstairs, Gail," Edith pleaded, "and see if she hasn't slipped in and gone to bed! She can't be at the Vails' this late."

"She's there if old man Vail has gotten started on the Civil war," Sam muttered.

They were still laughing at his tone when Edith came downstairs with a letter in her hand, and a whitened face.

"It was on her pillow, Gail."

"What!" Gail whispered. Without moving her eyes from Edith's, she tore open the sealed envelope.

"She's gone!" Phil said.

"Eloped with Van!" Sam suggested.

"Read it," Gail whispered, handing the written sheet to Phil.

Phil read it slowly, aloud:

"Gail dearest, and all of you: Forgive us. We had to do it this way for reasons we'll write you.

"It's always been Dick, Gail. I think Ede knew, months ago. Knew how I felt anyway. But I never knew how he felt until lately.

"We're going to Los Angeles, and we'll be married there. I couldn't stand the gossip at home, and having no money for clothes or anything.

"I've told every one that I have an aunt down South—it's true—and that I'm going to try to get into the movies.

"Please tell every one that. At least until we're married, Gail. If there is any hitch, I never can come back. But there won't be. Dick says there won't be. We'll write you everything, and where we are, and everything.

"Don't tell anyone—don't tell anyone, Gail. Just tell them I'm trying to get a job in the movies, and let it go at that. If I don't make good, Dick'll bring me home.

"Expect a telegram tomorrow. I do love you, Gail, and I'm sorry."

It was signed, "Ariel."

"My G—d! Dick Stebbins!" Phil said, in a long silence.

"Gail, don't look so!" Edith said trembling, crying. "She's safe with Dick! Maybe—maybe it's the best thing that could have happened!"

Gail moved her lips as if she were about to speak, swallowed, shook her head. She got up and went to the sink and took a glass of water, her back turned toward the room.

When she turned about her face seemed oddly changed. It was white, it was older, somehow, and infinitely weary. Her hand wet with the cold water, she brushed her hair feverishly from her forehead; her lips were wet with water, too, as she spoke.

"Well," she said quietly, in a conversational tone, her heavy brows knitted in a faint frown. "Well, that's that. Isn't it? That's that."

* * * * * * *

Edith and Gail had the Wilcox cottage at Carmel for two dreamy August weeks, easily managing to stay under their table allowance of ten dollars a week, and reveling in the atmosphere of pines, sea air, golden dunes, and charming, friendly, informal neighbors.

Carmel abounded in interesting folk, who found Gail and Edith interesting in their turn.

These were peaceful days—definitely happy days.

"I feel as if I had gotten my soul back again," Gail said. "I never thought, somehow—I never saw myself, somehow, at twenty-six, contented to be a Clippersville old maid," she mused, as if half to herself, as if thinking aloud.

Edith was silent a minute.

"You don't have to be a Clippersville old maid, Gail," she said then, lightly, but with a touch of pain in her voice.

"I suppose not." Gail paused in her turn. "You mean Ollie Chase?" she asked indifferently.

"Ollie. Or Gregory. You could be Mrs. Gregory Own-Your-Own-Home-in-Westgate Gray," Edith said.

Gail mused on this, her heavy brows drawn.

"Somehow it doesn't click, Ede. Somehow—well, it would have driven me out of my senses with joy, at twenty, to have two or three of Clippersville's rising young citizens want me. But now it just—doesn't click, that's all. I'm vaccinated."

"Was it Van, Gail?"

They had been to the edges of this ground before many, many times. But in the more than two years since that fatal Christmas night that had ended one phase of the Lawrences' life forever, Edith had not quite dared this much before.

"Yes, partly, I suppose," Gail answered simply.

"You did care for him, Gail?"

"Oh, no; not that!" Gail laughed a little wearily, without much mirth. "No," she said thoughtfully. "He wasn't the sort of boy for whom one cared. But I rather went crazy that summer, Ede, and it's that that I hate to remember.

"I was sick of Clippersville and poverty and dish washing, and when Van came along I sort of lost my bearings. I thought you could force your—well, your fate. Grasp what you wanted. I did everything he wanted me to do, went about with those rich people although I knew all the time I didn't belong there, and that they didn't want me. And in the end, I had nothing to show for it."

"As if that wasn't natural enough, Gail, for a girl your age!"

"Oh, it was natural enough. But if I didn't have much sense at twenty-three, Ariel was only a baby at seventeen. She saw me discontented and reckless.

"It was half a joke with me. But it was deadly serious earnest with her. She wasn't going to be caught in the trap you and I were in—perfectly respectable, and not having any fun!"

Her words carried Gail over that wearisome road her thoughts had beaten flat in the last thirty-odd months, and she could not go on. Jealousy and pain mingled together like suffocating fumes in her heart.

Ariel, Dick's wife. Ariel for more than two wonderful years Dick's wife—sharing his breakfasts, meeting him at the door at night, close in his arms when fires were lighted on winter evenings, and happy on the front seat of Dick's car when summer expeditions were afoot. It wasn't fair—it wasn't fair.

These agonies were routine now. She knew how long the spasm of sheer physical wretchedness would last, how long it would take her to return, sane and weary, to the routine of library and kitchen, Clippersville streets and the company of old books again.

From Dick there had come but one brief letter, received on the New Year's day just one week after he and Ariel had gone away. Ariel was well, the letter had said, and they were to be married tomorrow. There had been delays because of residence, and other legalities; they would write full particulars in a day or so. Meanwhile the family was please not to say anything about it. And he was as ever theirs affectionately, Dick.

And after that the long months had spun themselves to a year, to two years, to more, and there had come no other word. Clippersville was perfectly satisfied to hear that Ariel Lawrence was staying with an aunt, down Pasadena way, and working hard to get into the movies. There was nothing to bring Dick back to the home town, with his father dead, his mother living with a widowed sister 'way up North, and the Stanislaus place rented to strangers.

So Clippersville dismissed Ariel and Dick as separately solved problems; Edith and Phil philosophized about having the youngest member of the family settled, and it was only in Gail's heart that the pain and the sense of loss lived on.

When Phil, only a few weeks before these happy holidays at Carmel, had told his sisters that some time this summer he was to be married to Lily Cass, widowed now, it was the usually quiet Edith who broke into tears, protest, and pleading, and the usually impetuous and proud Gail who said gently:

"If you love her, Phil, Ede and I wouldn't want anyone who—who loved anyone—really truly loved her—to be unhappy."

"Gail, you're so sweet!" Phil, taken unawares, and completely disarmed, had said gratefully.

"So that's the next thing we have to face!" Edith had said when the sisters were alone.

"I suppose so."

"I'd like to know how he thinks we're going to manage financially!"

"Oh . . . Perhaps renting the corner to the gas-station people."

"Which we'll never do!" Edith had said hotly. She had hesitated, surprised at the expression on Gail's face, and had added, quickly, "You wouldn't, would you, Gail?"

"Well, we're getting more and more into the downtown streets, Ede. We're going to be forced out, some day. And a hundred a month is big money for that empty corner.

"If Phil marries Lily," she went on, after a thoughtful interval, "I mean to act—well, with all the character—I mean with all the—well, philosophy I can scrape together. I'm going to act as if she wasn't Lily Wibser of Thomas Street hill, but Phil's wife. Not the one we would have chosen, maybe—"

"Gail, you're so wonderful!" Edith said passionately, as she paused. "I think you're the most wonderful woman alive!"

"I used to think I was unusual, Ede," Gail had said in a sudden humility. "I couldn't help it—the way things went at school, the literature prizes, the grades I skipped. But if I am, what has it gotten me?"

"Oh, Gail, you can't tell what's ahead! We don't know what's coming!"

"I know I'm twenty-six," Gail had said seriously.

CHAPTER VIII

They came home on a hot Saturday afternoon, wearied, sunburned, and content from their vacation at Carmel.

"It's good to get home!" Gail said, luxuriously unpacking, undressing, bending her slender body double to brush her inverted fluffy mop.

"But I could live at Carmel forever!" Edith said.

And then suddenly there was Phil flying upstairs, and the thunderbolt of the news. Phil married! He and Lily married this morning, partly because Lily's house had burned down yesterday afternoon with all her clothes and all the children's clothes. And Phil only waiting his sisters' return to invite his wife and the three tiny stepsons into the Lawrence house for the time being, anyway, "until we can find some place. . . ."

Lily helped Gail get supper that evening. Wolfe, Miles, and Daniel Cass played in the Lawrences' side yard, under the willow, where Phil and Gail, Edith, Sam, and Ariel had all played a few years ago, and their father before them.

Lily was nearly thirty; she knew little of books, art, culture, social fineness. But about other things—men, life, wifehood, motherhood—of course Lily knew a great deal. Between her and Gail, as they worked together, there rose a strange wall of silence. Their conversation became monosyllabic, careful, considerate.

Gail was very gentle; she was conscious of an inner trembling. There was a jar, a shock in Phil's marriage, but it was a fact accomplished now, and Phil must not ever know how his sisters felt. She and Edith must just make the best of it—Lily and the children would not be under their roof for long, anyway.

The children were round, shaggy little fellows, with Celtic blue eyes and dark hair. Dan, the three-year-old, still retained a certain babyish uncertainty of outline, his wet little mouth hung open, his face, hair, hands were caked with dirt. His blue eyes were affectionate, hopeful. As he ate his supper he leaned comfortably against Gail's knee. Gail, peeling apples, found the feeling of the soft, warm, boneless little body rather disarming.

It seemed utterly unnatural for life to go on in its old grooves—the old grooves that were so incredibly the new. To dress and breakfast and walk to work with Edith every morning, leaving Lily Cass pretty and complacent in the home kitchen, simply was not a possible situation. Gail felt disturbed and nervous, she began to hate to go home.

Even Edith, whose main effort was to preserve peace in these troubled days, found Lily's self-satisfied young wifehood trying beyond bearing.

Phil saw nothing of his sisters' attitude; he was in a seventh heaven of happiness. But Lily saw enough to convince her of Gail's and Edith's contempt and dislike, and, having the whip hand, took her revenge in a hundred little ways quite invisible and unimaginable to Phil.

"We can't stand it!" Gail said to Edith, lunching with her at the Woman's exchange.

"Well, why don't they find a house?"

"Oh, I don't believe they're even looking!"

"Why should they? They're perfectly comfortable, and you and I do all the dinner dishes!"

"Has Phil gone crazy?" Gail would ask gloomily. "What does he think we are, to put up with it?"

"You know what she said, after that very first night. Remember when she came down to the library and said, 'Phil and I intend to get out of here at the first possible moment'?"

"I remember. But then she told Sam yesterday that the house was as much Phil's as ours."

"Well, it isn't!" Edith said stubbornly and fiercely.

"I suppose it is." And Gail would shut her lips in that new, firm line, and knit her thick Lawrence brows until they almost met.

"What can we do, Gail? We can't go on like this."

"I don't know what we can do," Gail would ponder darkly. "No use in the world appealing to Phil!" she said more than once.

Little Lights on LIVING

POWER AND LIGHT

EMBLAZONED across the sky at night, sometimes far distant, one can see when approaching a town, the great bright letters of an electric sign, bearing the words, POWER AND LIGHT SERVICE.

What an eternal truth and spiritual message our public utilities are writing across our skies—that power and light brings service! Dean Inge of London has said that as man's love for light progressively increases his need for government progressively decreases. Light is truth, and education is the process of determining truth. Knowledge is power but wisdom is light. Education must include both, that is why true education builds character. Power with light is character and character manifests itself through service, that great vital force of the human heart. Light is truth, where there is no light there is no truth. The Master said, "I am the way, the truth, and the light."

Power without light is a blind unguided force, while power with light builds the human race. As the human family receives more light through education and culture, it will also receive more spiritual guidance to manipulate those powerful forces which science has discovered in our mechanical age and it will learn to use them for the benefit, and not for the destruction of mankind. Light comes through education and acts of the human heart much as brakes check speed on a high powered car.

War for instance, is power without light, for its goal is selfishness, not service. High powered explosives are made to kill. Chemistry in the hands of a militarist kills, in the hands of a physician, cures. What is the difference? One is power without light—selfishness, the other is power with light—service.

A European scientist was once working in his laboratory on a God-like experiment, hoping to eradicate much of the disease of the world through his discoveries. Suddenly one day without warning he was commanded by his government to come into its laboratories, to discover gases for the next war. His laboratory was power with light, the other power without light; his was for human service, the other for human slaughter.

What would become of our modern methods of living if this public utility-power and light—service were to be removed? And what would become of the human race if this spiritual truth—service from power and light were removed? Perhaps we should better ask, what could not the potentiality of the human race really be if this truth were put into practice in men's hearts?

SYMMETRY IN LIVING

THERE are two symmetries in life which each individual must master, if he would adapt himself to the fine art of fine living. The first one lies within himself, which gives him perfect equilibrium of spirit. This comes from a deep assurance and certainty that his life is built securely on the fundamentals of right living.

I regret for our youth today, that our older generation has failed to pass on to them this sense of security and beauty of symmetry in our modern expressions of living, such as our unexplainable modern art, some of our dissonant music, and our silver screen distortions of sex, love, and home life. Our barren current literature, too, has had its part in taking away what little security might be left to youth by featuring such phrases as "Time of Great Moral Uncertainty," "Morals in a Day of Relativity," "The Changing Moral Trend," and "An Unmoored Age and the New Morality." Mathew Arnold said—"Culture is contact with the best that has been thought and said."

The love of beauty in the ancient Greeks caused their time to be called the Classic age, because it has endured throughout the ages. Standing on the Acropolis one full moon night, I say the silvered Parthenon, I should rather say I felt it in my heart. That was only symmetry in cold stone, how far greater when found in human life. Plato's matchless words bespeak it thus: "Culture is that thing that brings to body and soul all the beauty, all the perfection of which they are capable."

Four avenues we have for self-realization, which must precede our self-expression, if we would have symmetry in living. They are, "work, play, emotional control and spiritual nutrition." Our inner symmetry must balance all of these. If we be weak in any one, we are only as strong as our weakest point. It is not what we do but what we are that brings us to our highest level. "We are so busy doing, that we haven't time to be," and yet the symmetry of life is found in Personality. The second of the two necessary symmetries of fine living lies with the world outside. Enrichment of life is useful only when shared, then others catch its radiance. This must be passed on to youth if our race is to continue to improve, for it isn't "What life is made of, but what life is made for," that counts. Eternal love of beauty that comes from the depth of a human heart to the world outside, brings symmetry in living.

DOG GONE

Skippy, the wire-haired terrier of Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Curtis of Kansas City, mysteriously disappeared, but they could still hear his whining about the house. After 35 hours of searching and growing belief in spooks, they found him. He had gone into the attic and fallen down an air chute behind the bathroom wall. They lifted him out by catching his foot in a noose.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

A MODERN MOTHER'S PRAYER.

They are so small, dear God!
The school is blocks away—
Their steps so prone to lag—
At bits of color down the street—
Make keen the eyes of drivers,
Stay
The grinding wheels of trucks—
Spare us from tiny splintered bones,
From flesh like blossoms,
Crushed upon the stones.

We hope every automobile owner and TRUCK DRIVER in Columbiana, will "slow down" long enough to read and re-read the above poem with its poignant appeal for the "little ones".

Perhaps because our desk faces one of the most dangerous corners in Columbiana, we are ultra cautious in our repeated remarks urging the drivers of automobiles and delivery trucks to be more careful in rounding this particular corner, for we daily see many accidents narrowly averted. The STOP signs, it is true, are plainly visible, but are seldom read—or if read—are not heeded. It is a wonder to the writer that these little "living miracles" ever make it safely across the street and home alive. However, we personally believe these "fragile beginnings" of a mighty end, "deserve a chance to take a part in this "speed-mad" world if they want it"—but while happily swinging their books along, an epitaph is likely to be written, reading something like this—A LIGHT OR A LIFE—and it won't be as long as it has been—if YOU don't watch out!

While Civic and County improvement plans are being carried out, a LIGHT on Main Street at this intersection would be money well invested. "They are so small——their steps so prone to lag at bits of color in the street" — Guard well their safety Mr. Auto Driver — PLEASE SLOW DOWN!

E. H. Childs, Principal of the Shelby County High School, who has made many friends during his brief sojourn in Columbiana, draws his chair up into the friendly circle of Democrat readers this week, and is given a rousing welcome by hundreds of subscribers to Shelby County's leading newspaper. We personally extend our sincere thanks to this gentleman for his spoken cooperation, and herewith tender him the use of the columns of this paper to foster his many progressive educational ideas which, when carried to completion, will go far toward raising the standard of the High School to the heights it should attain under his leadership.

Messrs. Ira Sharbutt and Jimmy Gorman, prominent merchants of Vincent, were in Columbiana on Monday transacting business. We acknowledge personal calls from these gentlemen in our office, and we enjoyed hearing of their plans for boosting Vincent. Nothing like Civic Pride in the town in which you live. Watch for the Trade Days these merchants in this wide-awake burg are sponsoring.

Frank Graham, popular business man and prominent Legionaire of Vincent, Alabama, was a visitor in Columbiana on Thursday, and we acknowledge with gratitude a personal call from this gentleman, also a renewal of his allegiance to the Democrat.

Here is an account of a "modest and modern wedding", free from frills and furbelows and written by a —MAN REPORTER:

"It was wonderful wedding! The girl was as sweet as any girl who ever lived; but MODERN. As she walked up the aisle on her father's arm, her lips lightly tilted at the corners with a happy smile, she was a picture of modest beauty. Her filmy wedding gown and gossamer" veil floated around her fair blonde head like a halo. She was as nearly an angel as girls get to be in this world. At the altar as she passed from her father, the man she always loved, to the other man to whom she would devote the rest of her life, her dainty slipper touched a potted lily resting on the floor and turned to the dear old pastor waiting at the chancel and said, "That was a hell of a place to put a lily".

"The Last Rose of Summer" has never bloomed sweeter nor been more sincerely appreciated than during this week, when our good friend C. E. Niven brought us, we believe, the loveliest roses we have seen all season. It may be their lingering sweetness stayed to brighten the melancholy days September has brought us. It may be just another evidence of what FRIENDS who think of us along the way mean to us—(And how many, many times through this hectic summer have we had cause to be grateful for their kindness to us)—At any rate, we pause amid a busy week to again express our deep appreciation for both FLOWERS and FRIENDS—a combination which goes far toward making life worth the living.

Keener Roberts has left Columbiana to become a member of the student body of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Alabama. Mr. Roberts is taking the Aeronautical Engineering course.

John Lehning, whose lovely tenor voice delights and charms a wide circle of friends throughout Alabama, both on the concert stage and radio, spent a few hours in Columbiana on Friday. Mr. Lehning is a native of Illinois, but for the past several years, has resided in Birmingham and is Tenor Soloist in St. Mary's Church. Personally speaking, we have heard no voice in the South which appeals to us as much, and we enjoyed our vocal ramble through Melodyland with this talented gentleman more than we can say. Mr. Lehning will be heard over the radio stations in Birmingham during the Fall, and the schedule for his appearances will be announced in this column.

Friends of Mrs. Ollie Sternenberg (Aileen McGhee) will regret to learn of her serious illness in Birmingham.

The P.-T. A. organization will serve dinner to visiting teachers on October 8th, when the Teachers Institute will be in session at the Shelby County High School.

Miss Mary Thomas Goodwin and her mother, Mrs. C. E. Goodwin, spent last week in Birmingham.

Mr. and Mrs. Felton Goodwin spent the week-end with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Edwards, of Siluria, spent the week-end with home folks.

Mr. A. L. Horton, popular principal of the Vincent Consolidated Schools spent Friday in Columbiana transacting business for furthering his various educational projects in his community.

The Civic Club of Vincent entertained with a banquet on Thursday night, and Judge W. W. Wallace and Harold Harlin, of Columbiana, were guests on this delightful occasion.

Anyone who thinks the new Text Books are a boon to humanity, need only step into Davis' Drug Store and see the anxious looks and worried countenances of many parents who are finding it rather hard to finance the expensive luxury of "new books" required. There is "no exchange"—the old books on the same subjects are to be thrown away.

Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Kimmey and John Jr., formerly of Columbiana, but who now reside in Clanton, Alabama, have been the feted guests during the past week of Mr. and Mrs. Yeager Horn. Several bridge parties and other social courtesies were extended this much beloved couple during their visit to old friends, who so happily and cordially welcomed them—HOME again.

Mrs. Dixie Shealy and Miss Agnes Wingard were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Baker in Tuscaloosa, on Sunday.

Mrs. Pearl Belser, of Greenville, Alabama, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, in Columbiana. During Mrs. Belser's sojourn in Columbiana, where she is a social favorite, many courtesies are being planned in her honor.

Coach Hosmer, of Shelby County High School, spent the week-end in Birmingham, and attended the Football Clinic held at Legion Field on Friday night. Mr. Hosmer speaks enthusiastically of his material for a football team this year, and his encouragement and whole-hearted cooperation with the boys will doubtless bring about the exact result anticipated, and that is—a WINNING TEAM for Shelby High! We have not had the pleasure of personally meeting this young fellow, but if all we have heard from his co-workers on the Athletic field is true, we will agree with the chorus—He must be the——TOP!

An interesting question came up during the course of conversation between several parties who were in the Democrat office this week—reflecting on the deaths of Huey Long and Will Rogers—the question regarding their successors, and which man of prominence would live longest in the memory of Mr, and Mrs. Public.

Was it Shakespeare who said, "The evil that men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones". We personally do not agree with this quotation, for by some kind Providence, after a man has passed on, a divine quality of forgiveness hovers near, and many of the evil deeds are forgotten after the soul has taken its flight—while the good that has been done, the many kind and thoughtful courtesies extended, live on and on in the hearts of those who remember them. One writer says on the subject: The evil Huey Long did will be wiped out in time, the world will forget it as it does the passing of a clown who has copped the show, and the goodness of Will Rogers will live on and on because his heart was pure".

Huey Long's remains lie within the shadow of a $5,000,000 State Capitol which he built, but it is a monument only to a tyranical one man rule with a cudged for a gavel to enforce it. Will Rogers left no monument of bronze and stone, but deeply enshrined in the hearts of men his name is indelibly engraven.

Mrs. Rena Phillips, of Birmingham, is visiting Miss Era Pitts in Columbiana this week.

We began this page early one morning while watching some little fellows trudging along to school. Who doesn't remember the poignant heartpang when your own portion of this nation wide pilgrimage made each September, into the various "Temples of Learning", left you, wide eyed, eager and happy in the anticipation of new worlds to conquer? Bright new books, satchels, pens and pencils, and the whole family in an uproar getting them off to school. Sure, you recall the day the sturdy little figure with his new found independence left you—WATCHING, and found you—WAITING, for his or her return. A strange tenderness marks this particular period for those of us who have silently stood and watched them go. Theodore Garrison has beautifully expressed it, and we leave this thought with you——A responsive chord will doubtless be found in the hearts of most of the readers:

"We send them off to school again today,
This cool September morning, all the street
Is musical with patter of small feet,
And little, shining faces all the way
Seem wayside posies for our smiles to greet.
I wonder if they ever guess or know
With what strange tenderness we watch them go?
Just children on their way to school again?
Nay, it is ours to watch a greater thing——
These are the World Rebuilders, these must bring
Order to chaos, comforting to pain,
And light in blasted fields new fires of Spring.
Dear Lord, Thy childish hands were weak and small,
Yet had they power to clasp the world withal,
Grant these, Thy little kindred, strength as true—
They have so much to learn—so much to do;"

Youthful Detail on This House Frock

PATTERN 9373

Instead of spending an hour at the Beauty Parlor next time you feel the need of rejuvenation, try pattern 9373 and an hour at the sewing machine!—the results will be much more lasting because you'll always look young when you slip into this practical little frock with its feminine, flattering details. Scallops agree with everyone, and when accented with bright buttons they're more than agreeable. See the sketch herewith and you'll realize why we say "spend an hour at the machine!" Make it of gay printed cotton and, if you like—bind each scallop with bias tape for a gay morning frock—choose solid color shantung if you would have it for a run-about.

Pattern 9373 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 2⅞ yards 36 inch fabric. Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Huey Long Is Dead
Power in Personality
A Ship of Horror
Bathtub Danger

Huey Long is dead at forty-two years of age.

Arthur Brisbane

The world says: "How young, how pitiful, to die without full opportunity!"

Everything is comparative, Alexander the Great, who died at thirty-two, was ruler of half the world at twenty-five; Keats died at twenty-six; Shelley at thirty. Today, men do not develop as rapidly as in old days, when Napoleon thought of suicide because he had done nothing at an age that found Alexander ruler of the world.

The death of Huey Long, regretted throughout a nation that loathes cowardly assassination, is important not alone because of Senator Long's powerful personality, but also because of its possible effect on the national election of 1936.

Senator Long is gone; his power ceases, as though he had never lived. Others will pick up the reins of power, in New Orleans and Louisiana; another will take his place in the senate. Efforts, futile, will be made to find "another Huey Long."

There is nothing left but the memory of a powerful man, again emphasizing Goethe's definition of "personality," "as the highest good fortune of earth's children."

France discourages crime, and really discourages it. The dreaded prison ship, La Martiniere, is on her way to the criminal colony in French Guiana with 773 convicts locked in eight strong iron cages in the hold, with iron bars, cement floors, wooden benches, hammocks, and overhead a criss-cross of pipes that would fill the cages with deadly live steam if mutiny broke out.

No parole board sits in French Guiana. Each man ordered to the ship receives a new suit of clothes, a blanket, an extra pair of wooden shoes. That, with perhaps a few books and packages of chocolate from relatives, constitutes his wealth as, wrists chained, the convicts march, single file, up the gangplank, between rows of bayonets.

They go to prison, to stay in prison. It is a hard system, but being murdered on the American plan is also a hard system.

Within a few days two women, one past sixty, the other seventy years old, have been found dead in their bathtubs, apparently drowned. The slippery surface of a porcelain tub is dangerous for older persons. They should observe the greatest care; a slip, the head striking the edge of the tub, can easily cause unconsciousness, followed by drowning.

Rubber factories should make and extensively advertise rubber mats for the bottom of bathtubs, with a suction arrangement to prevent slipping.

While the League of Nations talks peace and arbitration Mussolini recalls his consuls from various places in Ethiopia, reminding you of the clergyman who had a call to a large city. His little daughter said, "Papa is in his library, praying for light, and mamma is upstairs packing."

The Douglas airliner, called the "Flying Laboratory," has just flown from Kansas City to Newark, N. J., through the "sub-stratosphere," which means about 20,000 feet up. At that height very "thin" air, with engine supercharged and propellers properly "tilted," makes high speed possible. The flight was 1,125 miles, nonstop; passengers wore oxygen masks.

Mr. Max Baer, of the Jewish race, will fight on September 24 Mr. Joe Louis, of the African negro race, and already $300,000 worth of the tickets have been sold. The price for a good seat is $25.

Mr. Baer, who gave a pitiful exhibition, not long ago, when he permitted his "heavyweight championship of the world" to wriggle off of the hook, now promises to "chase that boy (Joe Louis) out of the ring in two rounds."

Publicly Mr. Joe Louis gives an imitation of "Br'er Rabbit," and says little.

Maneuvers demonstrating French war power, as it stands today, convince European experts that France possesses "the strongest military machine in the world." She possesses, also, men willing to fight, as shown at Verdun and elsewhere.

The government, floating five hundred million dollars more of interest-bearing notes, rejoices because they are snapped up "in a day." Of course they are "snapped up" under prevailing conditions. Men with money are as glad to hide it away in government notes and bonds as men in a cyclone country are glad, temporarily, to hide away in cyclone cellars.

Campus Swank Via Knitted Fashions

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FOR thrills that set your blood tingling to your very fingertips, for enthusiasm that goes skyrocketing to the heights, see the new fall knitted fashions. They are simply grand! Never has a more fascinating chapter been written in knitwear style history.

As to the college girl who is assembling her go-away-to-school wardrobe there is no more direct road to take to arrive at campus swank than via the knitted way.

The new knits are in a riotous color mood. Their bright and handsome hues are as richly colorful and fascinating as the autumnal background against which they are silhouetted. Then, too, pronounced patternings in a bewildering array of checks, plaids and stripes animate the scene in striking display. As to the styling of the new knitted costumes, designers are doing it with incomparable chic and charm. See the three modes illustrated and be convinced.

There is no doubt about the atmosphere of unusual, outstanding and undeniable style that surrounds this trio of chic autumn knits. Consider the spritely checked three-piece suit pictured to the right in the group. It is a stunning affair. It is the sort that is destined to prove the college girl's delight. For that matter every woman will realize in this model her dream come true as to the type of fall costume she has been visioning for about-town wear. Just the thing for motoring and traveling.

This entire ensemble is carried out in a hairy soft yarn in a close jacquard knit. For the knitted suit the latest is a luxurious three-quarter swagger coat such as styles this outfit. A sensible and graceful mode this, since it enables the wearing of this three-piece until well into the winter season. We see also in this model a fetching example of the plaid-with-plain vogue which is being so widely exploited.

Typical of the many chenilles for spectator sports that are seen wherever women of fashion gather, is the ravishing three-piece suit centered in the picture. Both skirt and blouse are plain, providing a perfect foil for the colorful striped jacket. Peeping out at the top is the jaunty blouse, tie knitted in a wide drop stitch. The frog fastening identifies this model as a last-minute creation in that the very newest fashions have these military-looking accents. It is also worthwhile noting that the skirt is finished with a selvage hemline which prevents it from sagging. A pert knitted hat with brim smartly angled at one side completes the ensemble.

What could be more unmistakably style-convincing than the tailored knit outfit to the left? The double-breasted jacket is cut according to best masculine tradition with wide lapels and straight neat fitting sleeves. Across the back is a yoke from which emerges a yoguish shirred fullness. A hairy yarn is used for the plaid knit coat as compared to a smooth soft zephyr for both skirt and blouse. The latter sports a crew neck and an initialed pocket. This clever tailleur is knitted in stunning color combinations.

A most important style point to remember in selecting your fall knit outfit is that soft zephyrs closely knit and worked into figure-clinging "lines" are the new order of the day.

SUEDE SUITS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's a newcomer—the suede suit. They are stepping out this fall in the most fascinating colors fancy can picture. To attract the more, they are made of suede as soft and supple as fabric and as delightfully wearable, being comfortably and pleasingly lightweight. In the model pictured the skirt has interesting panel inlays and three buttons which unfasten to allow freedom of action. Roomy pockets, wide revers and a fine finesse in tailored detail give to this handsome jacket suit an air of unusual distinction. As to the colors for the new suede jackets and blouses, suits and accessories, they are simply fascinating.

MILLINERS SHOW NEW USE OF VEILS

Milliners have taken liberties with the classic lines of hats this season with the result that some interesting and amusing new features have appeared. An entirely new use of veils has been shown and, by the way, veils have been getting coarser and coarser until they somewhat resemble fish nets.

A little sailor is shown in white grosgrain which has been stiffened to give shape to the brim which stands out at the sides and tilts slightly over the forehead. A coarse veil of black silk is attached at the center of the crown and falls in back somewhat in the manner of bride's veil. Another in coarse straw is shaped like a Mexican sombrero with an upturned brim all the way around. A fish net veil extends over the crown to the edge of the brim where it is dotted with small pompons.

Dramatic Berets Show Up on Autumn Fashion Scene

Those big berets of velvet or pliant felt, made in thrilling rich dark colors, came onto the fall style scene early, but they will be still in good order when we get into our first warmish tweeds and flannels.

They set off a cotton sports dress with a refreshing dash for the present, but they will be the handiest kind of ensembler when we begin to wear all the strange new colors which autumn models are promising.

For a peek at coming tweeds shows muddy violets and sulphurous greens on the way, and plaids made of most unusual combinations—schemes that demand just the right accent in hat and blouse to show them off. These berets have the color, and they are becoming to almost any type of coiffure, besides.

Hoods, Pantalettes

Many hooded dresses and coats are shown in Paris; also some trousered sports and street skirts. Some designers even show satin evening pantalettes instead of petticoats.

Lesson for September 22

JAMES (A GREAT CHRISTIAN LEADER)

LESSON TEXT—Acts 15:1-21; James 1:1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he hath been approved, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord promised to them that love him.—James 1:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What James Tells Us to Do.

JUNIOR TOPIC—James' Motto for Juniors.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Meet Life's Tests.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Message of James for Today.

Three individuals by the name of James are mentioned in the New Testament. In all probability this James was the brother of the Lord and the writer of the Epistle which bears his name.

I. James Presiding at a Church Council (Acts 15:1-21).

1. The controversy in the church at Antioch (vv. 1-5). A most difficult problem confronted the church, threatening its disruption into a Jewish and Gentile division. It was not a question of the admission of the Gentiles into the church. That had been settled some years before when Peter received Cornelius and his household. The question now was, on what ground could they be received? Should Gentile believers be required to keep the Mosaic law as a condition of salvation? In order to settle the matter, Paul and Barnabas were sent to Jerusalem for the decision of the mother church.

II. The Deliberation of the Council (vv. 6-21).

1. Peter speaks (vv. 6-11). He argued that God had borne witness to the acceptance of the Gentiles by giving the Holy Spirit to them as unto the Jews. Since God had not put a difference, it would be folly for them to do so.

2. Paul and Barnabas rehearsed their experience (v. 12). They told how that God had set his seal of approval on the preaching of salvation by grace through faith.

3. The argument of James (vv. 14-21). He took the fact declared by Peter and showed how it harmonized with prophecy (Amos 9:11-15). He showed that the reception of the Gentiles was not in conflict, but in harmony with God's plan. He made clear God's plan as follows:

a. To take out from among the Gentiles a people for his name (v. 14). This is what is now being done by the calling out of the church.

b. After the church is completed, Israel will be converted and restored to their land by the Lord himself at his return (vv. 16, 17).

c. This will be followed by the conversion of the world through the agency of converted Israel (v. 17; cf. Rom. 11:15). Having shown that there was no conflict with the Scriptures rightly divided, he gave his judgment that the Gentiles should not be troubled with the things that are Jewish, but should be warned against the perils of heathenism, such as meat offered to idols, fornication, and blood.

4. The decision (vv. 22-29). The mother church unanimously endorsed James' recommendation. They sent a letter stating the decision of the conference. This decision was duly delivered to the church at Antioch and was received with rejoicing.

II. James Giving Counsel to Christians (James 1:1-17).

1. Concerning trials (vv. 2-17).

a. The Christian's attitude toward them (vv. 2-4). They were to meet them joyfully because of their beneficial effects. Trials reveal fidelity, and by their effects develop the grace of patience.

b. The Christian's supreme need in these trials (vv. 5-8). It is wisdom to meet them intelligently. He makes clear that the source of this wisdom is in God and that the means of gaining it is asking in faith, and the very liberality of God is the guarantee that the needed supply will be provided.

c. The rich and the poor are sharers alike in affliction (vv. 9-11). Frequently the poor man thinks that the rich are free from testings, whereas they are usually more severely tested.

d. The blessed reward of enduring the testing (v. 12). The one who faithfully endures the temptation shall be awarded the crown of life.

e. The source of temptation (vv. 13-17). Temptations spring out of human desire. They do not come from God. Sin is not necessarily the desire, but the gratifying of it improperly. When one is thus led away by his natural desires, sin is conceived which brings forth death. In such case, sin is the gratification of a right desire in a wrong way.

Life

Life is not so complex if we do not persist in making it so. We need faith; we need to be brave, to keep the corners of the mouth turned up and not down. And after all it is only a step at a time.—Ralph Waldo Trine.

Affliction

Much of what a man tells you in the hour of affliction, in sudden anger, or in any outpouring of his heart, should be sacred. In his craving for sympathy he has spoken to you as to his own soul.

Old Fashioned Patchwork Quilts

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

From all indications quilt makers will be busy this winter making more quilts. Quilts are still very attractive for needle workers, and any suggestion on this work will be welcomed.

Patchwork Quilt making is much easier today than during Colonial days. Patches are more easily obtained. Diagrams and cutouts for patches and books of instruction are printed. All of these make the work easier and more quilts are being made.

Grandmother Clark's Book No. 20 on Patchwork Quilts contains 30 quilts with cutting diagram for patches, also several ways to assemble 12 and 18-inch quilt blocks.

This book contains information and diagrams for the quilts shown above and many other old designs. Send us 15 cents for this book No. 20 and receive it by mail.

Dynamite

In Fort Myers, Fla., O. J. Hall, fifty-one, superintendent of a light and power company, placed a stick of dynamite in his mouth and lighted the fuse. It blew his head to bits.

In Estherville, Iowa, Burt Bloom, sixty, retired farmer, placed dynamite in a rock bed, lighted a fuse and stood back. Nothing happened. Bloom waited. At last he cautiously approached the charge. As he bent over the dynamite exploded and killed him.

PARENTS SHOULD WATCH CHILD'S REPORT CARDS

"Parents should spend more time in analyzing the scholastic report cards their sons and daughters bring home," writes Don Chalmers Lyons in Hygeia in "An Analysis of the Significance of School Report Cards."

Good or bad grades are not so important as is an evaluation of what those grades actually represent as indicators of social adjustment. The grades which appear on the report card are more than mere indicators of scholastic ability; they are key letters to character and, for the parent who is willing to take the time and trouble to analyze them or to have them analyzed by the child's instructors, they may reveal hitherto unguessed phases in the child's mental, physical and emotional make-up.

Harder work and more study are not panaceas in every case of scholastic failure. Some students have only a limited mental capacity; beyond a certain point, increased study is of no value because of actual inability to assimilate and correlate knowledge. While such students can obtain fair or even good grades if they are carrying a light load of work they are almost certain to fail if they are forced to carry a heavy schedule. It is better to lighten the scholastic load and allow a pupil of this type to take an extra half year or several summer school sessions, if necessary, to complete his high school work than to make him struggle on to failure and the development of a sense of inferiority under an intolerable load.

Nature Beats Science

While South African government chemists were seeking a satisfactory poison for locusts, swarms of the insects were found dead from an unknown cause in northern Rhodesia.

MALARIA

Speedy Relief of Chills and Fever

Don't let Malaria tear you apart with its racking chills and burning fever. Trust to no home-made or mere makeshift remedies. Take the medicine prepared especially for Malaria—Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic gives real relief from Malaria because it's a scientific combination of tasteless quinine and tonic iron. The quinine kills the Malarial infection in the blood. The iron builds up the system and helps fortify against further attack. At the first sign of any attack of Malaria take Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. Better still take it regularly during the Malaria season to ward off the disease. Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is absolutely harmless and tastes good.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic now comes in two sizes, 50c and $1. The $1 size contains 2½ times as much as the 50c size and gives you 25% more for your money. Get bottle today at any drug store.

AVERAGE DAILY 7-8 INCH SPOT COTTON PRICE FOR 6 WEEKS

The daily average of the prices per pound of middling 7-8 inch spot cotton at the ten designated spot markets for the period August 1 to September 17, inclusive, has been made public by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

The daily average price was determined by daily quotations from the ten designated spot markets—Augusta, Dallas, Galveston, Houston, Little Rock, Memphis, Montgomery, New Orleans, Norfolk, and Savannah—to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Department of Agriculture.

Producers of cotton who agree to comply with the 1936 cotton acreage adjustment program and who have sold cotton from the 1935 crop will be paid under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration's price adjustment plan the difference between the average at the ten designated spot markets on the day of sale and 12 cents per pound.

For example, a producer who sold his cotton on September 4 would be due a price adjustment payment of 1.55 cents per pound up to the amount of the actual cotton sold but NOT beyond his Bankhead allotment.

On the other hand, any producer who sold cotton from his 1935 crop on any of the days when middling 7-8 inch spot cotton averaged 12 cents a pound or more at the designated markets would NOT be due an adjustment payment.

A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent, furnishes the daily average of the prices per pound at the ten designated markets as follows:

The United States Civil Service Commission has announced open competitive examinations as follows:

Public land surveyor, $2,000 a year, Field Service, General Land Office, Department of the Interior.

Medical supervisor (psychiatric), $5,600 a year, Department of the Interior.

Full information may be obtained from the Secretary of the United States Civil Service Board of Examiners at the post office or customhouse in any city which has a post office of the first or the second class, or from the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

LICENSES FOR AUTO DRIVERS OF STATE TO BE READY OCT. 1

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Automobile driver's licenses—little white slips of paper that will cost motorists 60 and 30 cents each—are in the hands of Alabama probate judges for distribution under the state's new law beginning October 1st, 1935.

The licenses will carry full description of the person to whom it was issued and on the inside of the fold there's a paragraph for the judge to fill out—what he or she was convicted of and when. Too many "judge marks" will cancel the permit.

The paper license is folded in billfold size and must be in the possession of the person to whom it was issued at all times. The law fixed the price of auto-owners licenses at 50 cents plus a 10-cent fee to the probate judge for issuing it. Persons who are not owners must pay 25 cents for the privilege to drive and a 5-cent fee to the judge.

The law will affect all drivers of automobiles — approximately 230,000 cars were registered in 1934—and truck and bus drivers as well.

As they bound the licenses for shipment, Highway Department attaches withdrew License No. 1 for Governor Graves and No. 2 for Mrs. Graves.

License funds will go to support a 200-man highway patrol.

Officers Named By Ala. College Seniors

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—At a special meeting of the Senior Class of Alabama College, Tuesday, Miss Elizabeth Pritchett, Thomasville, was elected class representative on the athletic board. Mary Nall Kendrick, Selma, presided at the meeting, which was held in the parlors of main dormitory. The other class officers, including Miss Kendrick, the president, were elected at the close of the last session.

Sept. 29th Is Pay-Up Day For Methodists

The call has gone out. You remember that next Sunday, September 29th, is Pay-Up Sunday on Benevolences. We are anxious to have the small balance cleared up at that time. We are depending on you. Do your best. Then at the District Rally at our Church the next Sunday, October 6th, at 2:30, we can report "Over the Goal" with flying colors.

Faithfully your pastor,
HENRY M. HURST.

Milling Company Now Open For Business

The Farmers and Citizens in Shelby County need not depend on a foreign market for their Dairy, Poultry and Hog Feed, for the newly opened Shelby County Milling Company, of Columbiana, is fully equipped to meet your requirements in this line.

This firm of enterprising manufacturers with B. B. Mooney, as Manager, offer you their SUNLITE products and guarantee you satisfactory results with each purchase.

We call your attention to their advertisement in this issue of the Democrat, and they cordially invite you to call to see them in their new location—the old Blue Front Store on Main Street, formerly occupied by Columbiana Cash Store.

Sacred Harp Singing Convention Oct. 6th

The First District Sacred Harp Singing Convention will be held at New Bethesda Baptist Church, six miles north of Columbiana, the first Sunday in October, 1935. Everybody is invited. Bring your song book and lunch. (Signed)

Mrs. Ward Bentley, Secretary.

LESSONS ON HOME BEAUTIFICATION IS OFFERED TO CITY

A short course of twelve lessons will be offered to the people of Columbiana on home beautification by the Vocational Agriculture Department of the Shelby County High School. I have had special training at Auburn for the past eight summers in landscape gardening and home beautification and I will be able to give to the home builders of Columbiana some practical landscape gardening that will aid them in the proper use of shrubs, flowers, trees and grasses to make their homes look the best.

Do we not enter a mans home the moment we set foot on the property, and not, as generally accepted when we cross the threshold. To get the greatest amount of enjoyment out of our homes, the walks, lawns, shrubs drives and out buildings, should be planned in their relation to the house.

We express to the passing public our taste and personality through our grounds and surroundings. It is essential therefore that our exterior surroundings reflect us truly. The owner who plans, builds and cultivates beautiful things is a benefactor, and in no channel of thought or activity is there greater enjoyment than in making the home grounds beautiful, with well placed shrubs and flowers.

Nothing is more elevating and uplifting to a community than well-arranged properties with well kept lawns and grounds. The effect of such work is magical in its influence and creates in others a desire for that which is pleasing and beautiful. Your home is a part of this community and it should contribute toward making it beautiful.

If you are interested in making Columbiana beautiful, see Joe W. Stone, teacher of Vocational Agriculture and we will do our best.

$760,000,000 Paid Out For Veterans

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Veterans Administration officials calculated Wednesday that the government is spending in the neighborhood of $760,000,000 this year on war veterans and their dependents.

The officials considered recently-restored benefits in making this calculation. The total compared with an outlay of $581,988,000 during the first year after passage of the 1933 economy act.

Although many savings made under the economy act have been wiped out by Congress and executive orders, one of more than $100,000,000 annually was shown to be intact. It is the result of denying compensation to World War veterans who have non-service-connected disabilities but are not entirely incapacitated by them.

Questioned as to whether the next Congress would be asked to restore this class of benefits, American Legion officials here expressed doubt that their national convention in St. Louis this week would make such a request.

Give Needy Children Old Clothes & Books

Through investigation of school attendance cases, I find two outstanding causes for school delinquence—Books and Clothes. I am making an appeal to the public for any clothing that might be used.

The Alabama School Attendance Law can not be enforced unless the children have necessary clothing.

Should you have any second-hand clothing to donate, please call, or leave with Miss Wingard in the office of the Supt. of Education.

JOSIE H. BAREFIELD,
Shelby County School
Attendance Officer.

SEVERAL CAMPS TO BE SET UP IN STATE FOR IDLE WOMEN

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Establishment of a camp for 70 girls and young unemployed women at Fairhope, with several others to be set up in the state, was announced last Wednesday by Mrs. Frances B. Stephenson, assistant director of women's projects for the Works Progress Administration.

The young women, from 16 to 22 years of age, were selected from families on the relief rolls of Montgomery, Jefferson, Escambia and Conecuh Counties. The camp was opened recently with 50 girls, who were joined this week by 20 others.

"The institution of this project is a recognition by our government of the handicap suffered by the present day youth, both from lack of opportunity for self-government and employment in the family resulting in a denial of self-advancement", Mrs. Stephenson said.

"This camp will provide instruction in crafts and woodwork, recreational and health study, folk dancing, physical education and other activities."

The resident director of the camp is Miss Katherine Meriwether, of Montgomery. City authorities of Fairhope, Baldwin County, made the country club house available for use as a dormitory, and the porches were screened to make room for 70 or more cots.

Mrs. Stephenson said that if the Fairhope camp proved the success she believed it would, several others would be established in Alabama.

New State School Laws Go In Effect

Collection of any fees from pupils in the first six grades of rural or city schools during the term supported by public taxation is specifically prohibited under Act 507 of the 1935 Legislature.

The act, amending Alabama's school code, also provides that the county board of education shall appoint a custodian of school funds who may be the county treasurer, the secretary to the county superintendent of education, or any other qualified person.

County and city school boards of education may be consolidated under the county board upon agreement by the two boards without the necessity of an election unless 25 per cent of the qualified electors affected shall protest in writing within 30 days after the consolidation has been agreed upon by the two boards.

The act also provides that three trustees shall be appointed for every school in the county, the appointment to be made by the county board of education from a list of six names submitted by school patrons.

Budget Warning For Schools Is Sounded

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — City and county school superintendents of Alabama were reminded today by J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, that the educational budget act, effective October 1, provides that "actual expenditures during any one year shall not exceed actual income, plus balances."

In a letter to superintendents, Mr. Keller pointed out that provision is made for the issuance of warrants to fund floating indebtedness. The budget act requires that no board of education should have any floating indebtedness outstanding at the end of this fiscal year.

F. D. R. APPROVES 3 MORE COUNTY AND 48 STATE PROJE[CTS]

Register In Chancery 7-6-36

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Another reservoir of works progress projects to provide employment in Alabama was approved last Wednesday by President Roosevelt. It embraces 48 projects in 32 counties, three of the projects being in Shelby County.

The total required for all projects is $1,492,709, of which federal funds would account for $973,579 and local contributions would aggregate $519,130.

The allotment approved by the president is $342,000, a sum $631,579 short of the total federal funds required to execute all of the 48 projects. With the money available, Thad Holt, state work progress director, is to start those projects which can be launched most expeditiously. Money for the other approved projects will be allotted later if continued necessity exists for stimulation of employment.

The three Shelby County projects approved by the president last Wednesday, are as follows:

1. Gravel 19 miles of county roads in Districts 1 and 4. Federal funds, $20,160; sponsor's contribution, $2,257.

2. Gravel 33 miles of county road in Districts 2 and 5. Federal funds, $20,160; sponsors contribution, $2 257.

3. Construct bathhouse. Federal funds, $7,426; sponsor's contribution, $1,578.

FINDING JOBS FOR 63,000 DAILY NEW TASK OF OFFICIALS

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Relief officials Friday faced the huge job of finding jobs for 63,000 each day if the transfer from dole to work-relief is to be completed by November 1.

The goal is 3,500,000 jobs by that date, but telegraphic reports from the field showed only 936,218 individuals now were on the pay rolls—2,563,762 short of the mark. More than half of those employed were in Civilian Conservation Camps and 35 per cent of the remainder were at work in New York City.

Assertedly confident of meeting the November 1 deadline, Harry L. Hopkins, works progress and relief administrator, stood by an order to close the doors of 545 transient camps and shelters to all new transients at midnight Friday.

Relief officials conceded this move would create a serious problem for the communities, but contended that all employable wanderers would have an opportunity to obtain work by November 1. A total of 170 urban transient centers are to be closed and 375 transient relief camps converted into works project camps.

At least 93 per cent of the quarter million transient now in such relief centers are employable, officials asserted. An attempt will be made to return those incapacitated by age of physical handicaps to their homes.

Chesterfield Program Offers Entertainment

In turning your dial for an evening of musical entertainment we recommend the Chesterfield Program which comes to you each Wednesday and Saturday, beginning on October 2nd, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Hearing the Chesterfield program is like attending a big Broadway show. The singers, Lily Pons and Nino Martini are popular not only with radio fans but with New York's music loving public. The studio from which this program is staged seats 1200 people, and frequently hundreds are turned away and standing room only is available.

It is not probable that many citizens of Shelby County will be travelling to New York during the coming season who could procure tickets and see these artists in person, but you can turn your dials and hear their gloriously beautiful voices in your own homes over that modern miracle known as RADIO.

All Day Services At Mosteller Sept. 29th

MOSTELLER, Ala.—All day services will be held at the Mosteller Baptist Church on Sunday, September 29th, and dinner will be served on the ground. Everybody is invited.

COUNTY IS ALMOST SURE OF U. S. PARK IF LAND IS CHEAP

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Final approval of the proposed $1,150,000 Federal recreational project in Shelby County, depends on the ability of the National Park Service to option the remaining land at reasonable prices, officials said here Tuesday.

If the land can be acquired without prolonged negotiations and price boosting can be avoided, the project will be undertaken, they promised.

Since one objective is to provide employment, it is essential that there be no unwarranted delays in obtaining the options, it was explained.

The project is being considered as a part of a program being conducted jointly by the NPS and the Rural Resettlement Administration.

Officials said the park in Shelby County is the only one now under consideration in this section, others having been abandoned because of excessive prices put on prospective sites. Three such projects have been established in Georgia and others are located in other parts of the South.

With about 75 per cent of the necessary land under option for the Shelby County Park, civic organizations can assist by prevailing on owners of the land not to boost their prices, officials said. They regard the prospective site as ideal for their purposes, since it is close to Birmingham and would provide recreational facilities for a large number of underprivileged persons.

Sen. Hugo L. Black of Alabama said he was keenly interested in the plans and would press for approval. He conferred over the week-end with officials of the RRA but said he could not predict the extent of the grogram in Alabama.

"Until the present difficulties of the entire work relief program are settled, it just impossible to gin.

Studiosis Club Holds Meeting Sept. 19th

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The Studiosis Club met in Main Dormitory of Alabama College Thursday evening.

Miss Lorraine Peter, Chairman of the program committee, reported that "Alabama" will be the topic of study for the year.

Mrs. J. Alex Moore made a general introductory talk on that subject, giving the emblems of the State and the history connected with them. A chorus, composed of Miss Katherine Farrer, Miss Honor Winer, Miss Sadie Weir, Mrs. O. B. Cooper, Mrs. I. T. Carlton and Mrs. A. W. Vaughan sang four verses of the state song. Mrs. H. D. Lebarron accompanied them at the piano.

The new members were welcomed. Mrs. Lee M. Brook, Mrs. Denson Elliott, Mrs. Burr Nabors, Miss Edith Lindberg, Miss Alexina De Mouey, Miss Lillian Worley and Miss Lennice Vaughan. Refreshments were served following the program.

Legion Auxiliary To Meet Friday, Sept. 27

The regular monthly meeting of the Shirley-Holloway Auxiliary, American Legion, will be held with Mrs. S. A. Lokey at three o'clock on Friday, September 27th.

A special musical program has been arranged with invited guests on the program, so, it is hoped that all members will be present. (Signed)

Mrs. A. C. Walton,
Sergeant At Aarms,

Crisis Nears in Italo-Ethiopian Embroglio—Mussolini Defiant, Great Britain Ready—Committee of Lawyers Hits Labor Relations Act.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

MATTERS in Geneva were rapidly approaching a crisis—a crisis for Italy and Ethiopia, for European peace and for the League of Nations itself.

Benito Mussolini

The Italian cabinet, in which Mussolini holds eight portfolios, announced in Rome that Italy would accept no compromise and would not retreat from the course it has laid out in East Africa; that its military preparations were being intensified, and that its forces were adequate "to respond to any menace whatever." Still more important, in the light of developments, was the cabinet's announcement of strengthening its military forces in Libya, where General Balbo has been establishing a strong line of air repots. This colony borders Egypt on the west, and there was immediately a lot of speculation as to whether Mussolini planned to attack the British empire in that region. Italian forces in Libya have received reinforcements of 40,000 men with tanks and field artillery, and are much stronger than the British forces in Egypt. If economic sanctions were imposed on Italy, Mussolini might well reply by threatening Great Britain in that quarter, by invasion and by arousing the native population to revolt.

Premier Laval's speech before the League of Nations was exceedingly clever but did not clear the situation sufficiently. While he gave assurance that France would abide by the league covenant and fulfill its obligations, he hinted that his government would demand in return that Britain enter a definite engagement to carry out the program agreed upon in London on February 3—an air Locarno with automatic enforcement and the conclusion of Danubian and Baltic security pacts.

One after another the nations represented in the league announced their support of the British stand against Italy. If the British do not back down—and that seems unlikely—and if Italy persists in its adventure, the league will be called on to apply article 15 of the covenant. This requires the submission of any dispute, likely to lead to a rupture, to the council which must then try to effect a settlement. The council also will adopt as its own the report of the committee of five, which has failed to find a solution acceptable to Italy. The parties to the dispute are obligated to keep the peace for three months in any event, which would prevent an Italian campaign before the rains set in again in Ethiopia.

If in the next three months either side accepts the council's decision, the other party is automatically outlawed if it starts a war at any time in the future. In that case, the penalties against an aggressor as provided in article 16 must take effect automatically.

It is believed in Geneva that the penalty easiest to apply would be a general boycott of all trade with Italy. In that case the course followed by the United States would be all important. The European statesmen feel confident that they can count on President Roosevelt, once a war breaks out, to interpret cotton, wheat, and other raw materials as war material and under the American neutrality legislation forbid direct shipment to Italy and Ethiopia.

"Take a look at this," virtually said Great Britain to Italy as she massed a great fleet of powerful warships in the Mediterranean. Many of them were at Gibraltar, others at Malta and Alexandria and yet others at the entrance to the Suez canal. Practically the entire north Atlantic fleet was concentrated in the inland sea, and there was a chain of fighting vessels all the way from there to China—and every one of them was ready to defend the supremacy of the empire. The royal air force, too, was fully represented at the naval bases, and the shore garrisons were reinforced. This was John Bull's reply to Mussolini's defiance, and it might well give him pause.

"UNCONSTITUTIONAL" is the verdict of the American Liberty league's committee of 58 lawyers on the Wagner-Connery labor relations act.

"It is our belief," said the opinion, written in the form of a brief, "that the statute unnecessarily and arbitrarily infringes upon the individual liberties of the employer and the employee and is therefore invalid."

This is the first of a proposed series of opinions on recent federal legislation by the committee of lawyers. It was formulated by a subcommittee consisting of Earl F. Reed of Pittsburgh, chairman; Harold Beacom, Chicago; Harold J. Gallagher, New York; D. J. Kenefick, Buffalo; Harrison B. McGraw, Cleveland; Gurney E. Newlin, Los Angeles; Hal H. Smith, Detroit, and E. Randolph Williams, Richmond, Va.

Copies of the opinion were sent to all members of the full committee and dissenting opinions were invited, but none were offered.

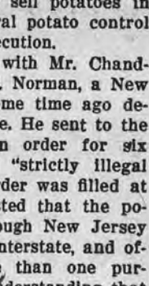
Raoul E. Desvernine of New York, chairman of the general committee, denied that it was "packed with Republicans," but he did not explain why no labor lawyers and no attorneys with New Deal leanings were appointed to serve.

Among the members of the committee are James M. Beck, nationally known constitutional authority and former solicitor general of the United States; Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state under President Wilson; John W. Davis, Democratic candidate for President in 1934; Joseph B. Ely, former Democratic governor of Massachusetts; Ralph M. Shaw of Chicago, former head of the Association Against the Eighteenth Amendment; James A. Reed, former United States senator from Missouri, a Democrat, and George W. Wickersham, chairman of President Hoover's commission on law enforcement.

Frank E. Morrison, American Federation of Labor secretary, said:

"This committee simply represents the views held by special privilege and big business, which have always opposed every piece of legislation introduced in congress and the states to bring a little more happiness into workers' homes."

A. E. MERCKER, who used to be secretary of the Interstate Early Potato committee, has been made head of the potato section of the Agricultural adjustment administration, and his troubles are just beginning. Control of the potato crop is considered a natural sequence in the policy that is being followed by the AAA, and, like other parts of Secretary Wallace's agricultural plan, it is supported earnestly and as seriously condemned. Among those who oppose potato control is Porter R. Chandler of Geneseo, N. Y., a gentleman farmer. He has advertised extensively his intention to grow and sell potatoes in defiance of the federal potato control act and invites prosecution.



A. E. Mercker

Now, co-operating with Mr. Chandler, comes Norman C. Norman, a New York jeweler who some time ago defied the jewelers' code. He sent to the gentleman farmer an order for six or more bushels of "strictly illegal potatoes," and the order was filled at once. Norman suggested that the potatoes be routed through New Jersey to make the offense interstate, and offered to make more than one purchase, "as it is my understanding that the second purchase will entitle me to go to the penitentiary."

WHILE all the nation was celebrating Constitution day, the citizens of Pennsylvania went to the polls and voted overwhelmingly against the calling of a Constitutional convention for the purpose of "modernizing" the state's basic law which was adopted 61 years ago. Since the proposed changes were to have a decided New Deal trend, the Republicans looked on the result of the referendum as a victory of national significance. The revision was strongly supported by Governor Earle and the state Democratic organization and also by organized labor.

New Mexico voters turned down a proposal to boost their property exemption to $2,500, along with four other suggested amendments to the state constitution.

WHEN the new Philippines commonwealth is formally born on November 15 in Manila, with Vice President John M. Garner officiating as its godfather, Manuel Quezon, for 20 years the leader of the fight for independence, will be inaugurated as its first president. In the recent election he and his entire ticket were victorious. The defeated rivals for the presidency were Emilio Aguinaldo, who led the rebellion against American rule years ago, and Bishop Gregorio Aglipay. They were virtually snowed under.

Manuel Quezon

Sergio Osmena was elected vice president, and victory of Manuel Roxas, Quintin Paredes and Camilo Osias assured the new president ample leadership in the unicameral national assembly, where he also will have a clear voting majority.

Quezon's term of office is six years and his annual salary will be $15,000. The commonwealth will be a ten-year prelude to complete independence from the United States. Quezon, who is largely of Spanish blood, is fifty-seven years old. He has numerous friends and acquaintances in the United States and for a long time has been a frequent visitor in Washington in his endeavor to gain independence for the island archipelago.

MARRINER S. ECCLES, head of the federal reserve system, has been re-appointed by the President, and so will be chairman of the board that will put into operation the new banking reform law. Later the President will name six other members of the board. Mr. Eccles is the exponent of the theories that monetary control must be from a "national viewpoint," that the government should spend heavily in bad times to create employment and expand credit, and that it should tax in good years to reduce debt and prevent excessive accumulation of income.

PAID advertisements in weekly magazines of national circulation are now being used by the treasury to promote the sale of baby bonds. The aim of the campaign is to interest small investors in these bonds, the smallest of which sells for $18.75, with a cash maturity value of $25 in 10 years.

SIX hundred members of the German reichstag, all fervent Nazis, met in special session in Nuremberg and at the demand of Reichsfuehrer Hitler passed two laws bearing down hard on the Jews in the reich. The first of these new statutes prescribes prison sentences as penalties for marriages between Jews and citizens of German or kindred blood, and declares such marriages void if performed in a foreign country. Extra-marital relations between Jews and Aryans also are punishable by prison sentences. Jews are forbidden to employ women under forty-five years in their households after January 1, on penalty of imprisonment. Jews are not allowed to hoist the national flag, being limited to the Zionist blue and white emblem.

Adolf Hitler

The second law provides that only a person who "belongs to the protective association of the German empire and is especially obligated to the reich" may be a citizen of Germany. This citizen must be of German or kindred blood and show that he is willing to serve the German people. Thus Jews and Germans of whom the Nazis disapprove may be excluded.

Hitler also put through a third law establishing the Nazi Swastika as the national and trade flag of Germany. The war ministry was instructed to adopt a war flag of black, white and red.

In his address to the reichstag Hitler said that by the laws adopted he hoped to deliver a fatal blow to Communism and Jewry.

THE Committee of Jewish Delegations has appealed to the League of Nations on behalf of the Jews of Germany, declaring that "the conscience of mankind will not tolerate that Jews should be degraded in this century as pariahs."

CHANCELLOR HITLER'S remarks about Memel aroused President Antonas Smetona to putting out the first interview he has granted in six years. In it he declared that Lithuania, relying to the utmost on the legality and justice of her stand and action in Memel affairs, is ready at any time to defend her position before the permanent court of international justice.

President Smetona

But should an effort be made to disregard legality and justice, in favor of force, Lithuania is prepared, stated President Smetona, to "defend Memel with all the means at her command."

Continuing, President Smetona said: "Memel is to us an economic necessity, not a political issue. We are too small a nation to engage in political bargaining, as we are too small a country to engage in contra-propaganda. Our only point is that Memel, containing Lithuania's only seaport, is an essential part of Lithuania. And the freedom and preservation of Lithuania is to her people a precious thing."

DEATH came to Jules Cambon, one of France's "elder statesmen," at Vervey, Switzerland. He was ninety years old and had lived in retirement since the close of the World war though he was frequently consulted by high officials of France. His brilliant career as a diplomatist covered nearly 50 years. He served as ambassador in Washington five years.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL MCCARL in a formal opinion held that there is no legal authorization for the federal government to pay out any funds for the construction of a furniture factory at Reedsville, W. Va. This has been a project especially favored by Mrs. Roosevelt. It was intended originally that the factory should make furniture for government offices and give employment to transplanted coal miners. A year ago McCarl refused to sanction an allocation to the factory from recovery funds. Then congress turned on the project on the ground that it discriminated against private industry. McCarl says the Department of the Interior went ahead with letting contracts for the construction, nevertheless, and the building is about 80 per cent completed.

RESOLUTIONS adopted by the Iowa Farmers' union in convention at Des Moines demand that President Roosevelt dismiss Secretary of Agriculture Wallace from the cabinet and halt "the program of hunger." The AAA was called "infamous, worthless and vicious."

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Latin-America seems to be following the example of the administration with respect to utilities—particularly utilities owned by the same general interests in the United States so vigorously attacked by President Roosevelt.

Mexico's president has called for government ownership of telephone, telegraph and railroad lines—the last an extra added feature, not on the New Deal agenda. Chile is making trouble for American and Foreign Power, having caught it trying to smuggle funds out of Chile back to American investors. And so it goes all the way down the line from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn, with just a few exceptions, notably Brazil.

Senators just back from Cuba report that not only is there little likelihood that the Cubans will be able for some time to come to pay interest on the big bond issues floated for public improvements, but there is little disposition to pay. Privately these senators think this particular investment has just been wiped out, as far as American bondholders are concerned.

Tons of literature containing the attacks made on American holding companies in the utility fight have been circulated through Latin-America. It is blamed by some students of the situation for stirring up the present movement. Central and South American officials figure that it gives them a splendid excuse for stepping in, nationalizing the utilities, and keeping the profits—if any—in their own companies instead of sending dividends back to the United States.

Latin-American officials are quoting glibly from the attacks sponsored by the administration, demanding why their people should be taxed to pay dividends on watered stock, and to pay service charges by holding companies out of all proportion to the service rendered!

Coercion Not Expected

They feel confident that no strong arm methods will be used to coerce them, or to protect these American interests if the plants are taken over by the government. Further, they feel that the Roosevelt administration will not be harsh about it if the values fixed in the condemnation proceedings are very low indeed. In fact, they think it would be rather difficult for Secretary of State Cordell Hull to frame a strong argument against valuations so low that the American investors would think they were being murdered.

But that isn't all the gloom from the investor's standpoint. Plans fairly under way in some of the Latin countries contemplate making payment for such utility plants as may be taken over by governments in bonds, issued of course by the government, federal or local, which takes the plant over.

No stockholder in any of the big American companies with investments abroad would throw his hat in the air over the idea of taking payment for anything in bonds of the foreign country concerned. Market for any such bonds is at a very low ebb, without much prospect of improving. American investors have taken such a beating on foreign bonds in the last few years that they do not hanker for any more.

All of which presents a very gloomy picture indeed to a good many American shareholders. And bondholders.

It is a repercussion of the administration's policy, which was not foreseen by anyone. It is made possible not only by the domestic policy inside the United States with respect to utilities, but to the strong stand taken by the administration in denouncing "dollar diplomacy," and making it perfectly clear that ill treatment of American investors is not necessarily a matter that might lead to warships.

But there is another complication. Great Britain has a good many similar investments. She has railroads in Mexico, which may be taken over. And whenever the present trouble between Italy and Ethiopia is over Britain may be much more interested in what happens to her investors than the American government is in its.

Which would bring the old Monroe doctrine up for another dusting off.

Textile Troubles

A net loss of $438,062.92 despite the largest sales in the company's history, nearly $29,000,000 while taxes amounting to $1,874,765.62 were paid, is alleged to be typical of the entire textile industry. This is the report of the Pepperell Manufacturing company, with headquarters at Biddeford, Maine, regarded as one of the most successful textile concerns in all New England.

These operating results, Treasurer Russell H. Leonard said, are "typical of the industry as a whole for the same period" (fiscal year ended June 30 last), and moved him to ask the stockholders "wherein lie the reasons for an essential industry remaining profitless under a governmental plan presumably dedicated to its rehabilitation?"

Overproduction, Mr. Leonard said, was the major difficulty of the cotton textile industry and the primary cause of its losses. He said that consumption of cotton textiles has not been far below normal.

"This economic principle was, in fact, at work in our industry for some years," Mr. Leonard's report continued. "But the National Recovery act upset the working of this principle and facilitated—indeed encouraged—increased production. Paradoxically, shortening the weekly running time to 40 hours expanded the output. Because the overhead costs of a mill on one shift of only 40 hours weekly operation became increasingly burdensome, mills running one shift per week were forced to increase to two shifts in order to compete with mills already on a two-shift basis."

A single shift of 50 hours, Mr. Leonard contended, could supply all the consumptive needs of the country.

This statement is highly interesting in view of the fact that the American Federation of Labor is even now preparing to do battle in the next session of congress for a 30-hour week law, a fight which it abandoned in the last session because the Federation for its own reasons was much more interested in concentrating on the Wagner Labor Relations act.

Great Handicap

Mr. Leonard also paid his respects to the AAA and processing taxes.

"The market prices of cotton goods during the year were so low," he said, "that it was not possible to pass all these taxes on to our customers. This recovery measure therefore was a great handicap to recovery in our industry.

"The floor stock taxes and processing taxes paid by this company since the agricultural act went into effect have amounted to about $4,000,000.

"Spindle capacity must be reduced or production of existing capacity controlled," Mr. Leonard continued, "if the industry is to become even reasonably profitable over an extended period.

"Possibly some method to solve the latter problem may yet be devised, but it becomes increasingly difficult, after surveying the maze of such experiments under the National Recovery act, to determine how even governmental planning, or planning under the sanction of the government, can make uneconomic principles work for any extended period. It is difficult for even an omniscient government to thwart economic law! Assuming that two shifts of 40 hours weekly were continued, the soundest solution that has come to our attention would be to eliminate the surplus spindle capacity. There is some disagreement as to what this amounts to, but the figures are probably around six to seven million spindles out of a total in place of about 31 million.

"A great deal has been said about the industrial problems of New England and inability of its manufacturers to compete with those in some other sections of the country in production of cotton textiles. It is certain that they cannot compete indefinitely unless the total costs, including labor, are on a competitive basis. The solution of the problem lies with the people of New England. If it costs more to produce a yard of the same cloth in Maine than it does in the South, then, eventually, the goods will be produced in the South."

Guarding Roosevelt

The shooting of Huey Long is expected to result in much more elaborate protection being forced on President Roosevelt by the secret service, whether the President likes it or not.

Present protection, officials say privately, is excellent against cranks, and has proved satisfactory for the most part because as a rule that sort of danger to Presidents comes only from cranks. The man who killed Huey Long may have developed a persecution mania, but he is not classified as a crank under the standards considered when officials are protected.

As a matter of fact, while no secret service official would say this publicly, they do not believe the shooting could have happened—that way—if secret service operatives had been on the job instead of Senator Long's bodyguard.

Had Baton Rouge been Rome, and had Long been Mussolini, the attacker could not have been in the chamber through which Long was passing. It would have been impossible. In fact, best judgment of our own officials, who have studied Mussolini's protective service, believe that he could be killed only by a rifle fired from a considerable distance.

This writer attended a session of the Italian senate, back in 1927, which Mussolini attended. The writer rode to the building in an American embassy car, with the late Warren Delano Robins, then counselor of the embassy, and later minister to Canada.

Although the embassy shield was on the door of the rather distinctive car, guards about the senate entrance were not only nervous but impatient when the chauffeur attempted to stop.

How Italy Does It

The first consideration of Mussolini's guardians was that this street must be kept open. No chance for the first car to start a block was tolerated. So even an embassy car, driving up to the normal entrance to the diplomatic gallery of the senate, was not permitted even to pause. Shouted directions, more or less menacing, kept it moving.

Thus we traversed three streets leading to the chamber. Every one of them was lined with soldiers, police, and men so obviously plain clothes operatives that the most inexperienced of crooks would have recognized them for what they were.

Moreover, on the roofs of the houses lining these three streets, men were on guard. It is an old Latin custom. It goes back through the ages. And it is very effective.

PRAIRIE SERPENT

Pollack, S. D., refuses to be outdone by Loch Ness, Scotland, and Vancouver, B. C., with their sea serpents. It has a "prairie serpent." Joe Heckelsmiller, doing his spring plowing, first saw it leisurely crawling through the grass with its head about two feet above the ground. Its track, said to be as large as that of a balloon tire, led to a lake. Ed Kramlich, G. L. Koch and Ben Miller of Mound City reported seeing the serpent swimming in Lake Campbell. They said it had a large flat head a foot in diameter and the body 16 to 22 feet in length.

SYNOPSIS

The Boston Lawrences came to California at the beginning of the gold rush, but the holdings of the family have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, twenty-five, is working in the iron works, Gail in the public library and Edith in the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars. Dick Stebbins, who has been admitted to the bar, has the case against Ariel dismissed. Gail suddenly realizes that she loves Dick and not Van. Stebbins and Ariel elope, according to a note left by the girl.

"Oh, no use at all."

"He told me that the cheapest place he could move to, with the three children—and I dare say another coming—"

"Oh, Gail, no!"

"Well, I wouldn't be one bit surprised. He told me that the only decent places he could find were sixty and seventy-five, and that he simply couldn't pay it. They ran up a bill of more than two hundred at Muller's, you know, when Lily's clothes were all burned up."

"I know. Invisible stockings and fourteen-dollar hats!" Edith said in the pause.

"And now that Joe Cass is dead and Lily getting nothing from her people, I suppose Phil can't afford it. We never had any too much, as it was, and Phil's simply added four more persons to the list."

"You'd think," said Edith in patient scorn, "that Phil might have seen that coming!"

"I try—I really do try to be decent to Lily," Gail said after awhile. "I try to think up things that will interest her, and be reasonable when she's helping me in the kitchen. But when I hear a thing like her telling Sam that Phil has as much right in the house as we have . . ."

Another silence. Then Gail added, very low, "Something rises up in my soul, and I feel that I could murder her!"

"I wish we could get away, Gail, you and I."

"Oh, I mean to!"

"If we could live in Carmel!"

"I know. And if we rented the corner for a gas station, and you and I had that, we could live there."

"Then that reconciles me to the gas station!" Edith said, fervently.

"I suppose," Gail summarized it all somberly, "the only decent thing—the only square thing—is to make the best of it. It's one of those things that would be so darned easy—so picturesque in a book. And it's—so hard—"

The voice that to Edith was always brave and gallant faltered a little, but Gail wanted no sympathy. There was a scowl between her eyes, a gruffness in her aspect that repudiated it.

"This effort to make the best of it won't get us anywhere," she said.

Yet Edith was quite keen enough to notice the courage with which Gail carried the whole situation that night. The atmosphere, which in the three weeks since Phil's marriage had been charged with dangerous electricity, cleared. Gail was not only nice to Lily; she seemed able, with her own peculiar winning sweetness, to put herself in Lily's place. It was as if she had a part to play, and was determined to play it to its utmost limits.

For the first time, tonight, she spoke of the marriage, its suddenness and surprise. If Lily suspected some lingering trace of apology in this she gave no sign, but she brightened visibly, and the dinner table was more like its old self than it had been since the Saturday of Edith's and Gail's return.

Phil, in the fatuous blindness of love, was radiant with satisfaction, and Edith felt that he would feel that they could all go on living together indefinitely—the happy family in which men are so pathetically eager to believe.

"No, he won't do that!" said Gail. "For I'm going to talk to him tomorrow, and get everything definitely settled. Then we'll only have to work toward our goal. Enough money for the smallest overhead expenses we can manage, and then you and I'll get out—out of Clippersville forever!"

"I love Clippersville," Edith said dreamily. "I don't think anyone could love a place more. I always think of Clippersville as the sweetest place in the world," the younger sister pursued.

"Just the same, I'm going to get out, Edith Lawrence!"

"And just the same, I'm going with you, Abigail!"

This on a Monday, the last of September. On the Tuesday, on the Wednesday, Gail looked for her chance to talk to Phil, in vain. On Thursday Gail went home to lunch to find Edith and Lily in a glory of housecleaning. They appeared to be working together harmoniously enough, and Gail walked back to the library at one o'clock moralizing in her own soul upon the desirability of making the best of things in this curious world, putting up with what could not be changed, enduring what could not be cured.

The only way to get past certain things in life is to plunge right through them, like them—or pretend you did—learn from them, and go on to other lessons.

The early October day was somber and overcast without rain, but equally without sun. Leaves were turning restlessly in the gardens; other leaves, heaps of them, were being raked into damp, somber piles that smoked in the lifeless, ominous air and scented the world with autumn. A strange hush lay over the town; something was expected, something was drawing nearer and nearer across the great range of the eastern mountains and under the pale cool sky.

Edith and Gail almost always walked home together. But Edith was not downtown today, and Gail had no need to stop at Muller's book department as usual. It was the third, the night they called the "house's birthday," and Gail—reflecting rather ungraciously that they might as well break Lily into some of the customs of the Lawrence household, since the poor little creature appeared to be only too anxious to copy her new family's ways and ideas, stopped at the hardware store and bought twelve new drinking glasses.

"Did you wish them wrapped as a gift, Miss Lawrence?"

"Well, yes," Gail said, with a whimsical twist to the corners of her mouth. "Wrap them as a gift."

"We haven't given Phil and Lily anything," she thought as she walked on. "Well, they didn't give us any warning. Perhaps Edith and I'll make some gesture—some day, before we leave. And Ariel—Mother's poet! To have no wedding, no fun, no beauty. And not to have loved us. She couldn't have loved us, to walk out that Christmas night and send us no word—never to write.

"It's a funny world. Things seem to happen to us Lawrences. But such queer things, and in such funny ways."

The two older Cass boys—they were to be Lawrence boys soon, for Phil, in his gentle way, adored his stepsons and was eager to have them take his name—the two older Cass boys were digging contentedly down at the end of the garden where the grass was sprouting green and pale in the shadow of the heavy evergreen fence. Gail waved at them as she followed the uneven, discolored flags of the path to the side door.

And then Phil in the kitchen chopping ice—chopping ice . . .? And Lily flying down the back stairway, with a terrible face—a terrible face.

"Gail! Edith was hurt."

"Edith!"

"She fell. She struck her head." This was Lily. She gestured with an arm. Gail ran.

Edith was unconscious on the couch, her eyes closed. Her soft tawny hair was damp, her forehead wet. A girl—Mary Rumbold—was there, white and concerned, not touching Edith.

"I thought you were the doctor, Gail," Mary said in a still voice. "We took off her shoes," she added inconsequentially.

Gail was breathing in great spent breaths. She could not speak. Her lips moved soundlessly.

"She fell—?" asked the silent, moving lips.

"No." Phil was beside his sister, his arm about her. She leaned against him, suddenly spent. "No. It was the statue—the Neapolitan Boy," he said. "One of the kids—Danny—ran against it. Mary and Edith were just going out, and Ede leaned over and caught at the pedestal—and it toppled and struck her."

"How long ago?"

"Ten minutes. We telephoned you."

"Doctor?"

"He's on his way."

"Phil—Phil—" she whispered, swallowing.

"I don't know, Gail. We don't know. Lily says that one of her brothers—"

Lily knelt beside Edith, and with her gentle, common, stubby little hands fitted an improvised ice bag on Edith's head.

"Ah, that's lovely, Gail!" Edith said unexpectedly in a clear, low, happy voice. "Are we swimming? Green—green—green water—like emeralds—wet emeralds."

She lapsed into silence again, sighing contentedly.

"She's coming out of it; it was only a shock," Phil said, frowning, with a reassuring nod and glance for Gail.

Gail was not conscious of the passing of time. She was conscious of but one thing—Edith. She must hold Edith here, by the sheer power of that sisterly love that was the strongest love in her life.

Doctor Peters was here, and Doctor Reynolds. They wanted another opinion, a man from San Francisco. Concussion, undoubtedly, and possibly fracture, but it might be that both were slight. In undertones, in the hall, old Doctor Peters told Phil of other cases—cases from which one never would have supposed that little boys could recover. But they had.

"Doctor Remsinger from San Francisco is coming," Phil told Gail when she emerged, white and dazed, from the sitting room at ten o'clock. "He'll be here about three. And Dr. Peters says that if Edith goes on all right until this time tomorrow, she's got a good chance."

The weary eyes were raised.

"Then the only thing to do is—live, until this time tomorrow."

Lily brought her warm wrapper, her slippers, downstairs, set a cup of hot coffee before her.

"Oh, thank you, Lily," Gail said, with the first honestly affectionate look she had ever given her little sister-in-law.

"Oh, Gail, if it hadn't been Danny!" Lily said, weeping.

"Poor Danny!" Gail murmured, with a steady, dry-eyed shadow of her old smile.

She went back to her post, sitting in the low chair that had been "Mother's rocker" for twenty-five years. Old Doctor Peters came and went in the quiet room. Lily was up all night; Phil and Sam kept vigil in the kitchen.

Sometimes Edith murmured. At about two o'clock she opened her eyes, looked straight at Gail, and said, in her own smiling way, "I'll tell you, Gail. I'll go first and get the cottage ready, and be waiting for you!"

"All right, my darling," Gail's trembling, tender voice answered.

"Put that comforter over her feet, will you, Lily? She doesn't feel any too warm."

Lily had been kneeling. But she was on her feet now, and as she brought the comforter a strange expression came into her face.

"Let's say some prayers, Gail!" she said suddenly, in a frightened tone.

"Ah, as if I hadn't! And she did, too," Gail whispered back. "We said our prayers together, just as we used to, a little while ago, and she seemed so sensible; just—hungry—for them."

"Doctor Remsinger is here," Phil announced in the doorway.

"Phil!" Lily said quickly, running to her husband, catching him importunately by the arm. "Take Gail away—Phil—"

"Take—?" Gail echoed. She got to her feet, looked dazedly from Phil to the doctor. The San Francisco physician was beside Edith. He had straightened up—had said something to Doctor Peters.

They were trying to make her leave Edith, and she would not go. She looked from face to face, terrified. Then she was conscious of choking, and of seizing Phil with both frantic hands and of trying to scream.

Then the room rocked and the world rocked, and there was nothing but blackness everywhere.

CHAPTER IX

Gail went to the strange country of grief. She saw the sunlight changed and sickly, the trees brassy and dead; the country town, where all her life had been spent, was a pasteboard town now, a place of unrealities and emptiness.

Every one was kind to her. She was amazed at the kindness, at the pains these good folk took, to help her through the echoing, queer days. She thanked them absently, came suddenly to consciousness, confusedly thanking them again.

Letters brought her beautiful messages; she found other beautiful words in books.

"Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."

Grandma Polk, foremost in suffrage and prohibition and social work generally for half a century, copied out a poem for her in a trembling, beautifully clear old hand.

I shall go gently, never fear—give little warning,
Say not good-night, but in some happier sphere,
Bid you good-morning.

Old Man Whitman, who had known Stevenson, sent her the exquisite verses that genius had written for one in grief:

He is not dead, this friend; not dead,
But in the path we mortals tread
Got some few trifling steps ahead, and nearer to the end.
So that you, too, once past the bend
Shall meet again as face to face this friend
You fancy dead.
Push gaily on, strong heart! The while
You travel forward mile by mile
He loiters with a backward smile
Till you can overtake
And strains his eyes to search his wake,
Or whistling, as he sees you through the brake,
Waits on a stile.

"The dove, finding no place to rest her foot, returned to him in the ark," said the priest gravely at Edith's funeral.

And browsing among the books to which she turned with the sure instinct of the living creature that must fight for its life, Gail thought in lines of music. "Oh, lyric love, half angel and half bird . . . " she whispered, walking alone to the library in the cool winter mornings. "Oh, Edith, Edith, come back to me, beloved, or I die!"

Miss Mary Tevis, the rich, eccentric old maid who had once given Edith dresses and hats, took Gail with her to Santa Barbara for Christmas. They drove down in the big Tevis car, and stayed at an enormous hotel, saw movie queens entertaining hilarious friends at dinner, spent whole mornings swimming, idling on the sand. They went to a big inter-collegiate game in Pasadena, and came back to Clippersville feeling that somehow they had cheated the year, and that there had been no Christmas at all.

Use of Jams and Jellies

Either the English have more of a sweet tooth or Americans make more of their own jellies, for studies show that America uses only one and one-half pounds of manufactured jams and jellies for each person, compared with twelve pounds for each Englishman.

Little Lights on LIVING

WHAT PLAY CAN DO

PLAY is one of the four builders of life. The other three are work, love and religion. Nations have risen like the Greeks and fallen like the Romans through their play. Play has not been given serious enough attention by modern parents, as a factor in their children's physical, intellectual and moral development. Play time has been considered a tag end usually—"run away and play" when there is nothing else to do.

Everything that functions has equal capacities for both good and evil. Food, medicine, exercise and even religion, with the fanatic can change virtue to vice. Progress of the race comes from directing all these functions properly into positive channels. When this does not occur the individual and nation alike may be retarded in its growth for betterment, or still worse may be actually irrevocably harmed. Parents probably seldom think of play and its effects on their children in such serious philosophical terms, and yet play and recreational hours have the power to make or mar young life.

Play should be part of an educationally planned program for children. Each child should be studied by the parents and helped to succeed in at least one kind of sport, or should be furthered in one hobby, whether it be making some kind of toy or collecting insects or stones. These creative loves in children should be hunted out and fostered by parents. This gives to children early in life a sense of achievement which later may grow into a habit of success.

Good sportsmanship not only implies physical skill, but also mental and moral skill, as it takes courage to be a good loser and sometimes more courage to play fair.

Planned play as an educational program will take time, effort and sacrifice on the parents' part, but in the end it brings the largest dividend of character. Parents are sometimes unwilling to give as much of their own pleasure time to play with their children, as such a play program demands. As for instance, a movie manager of one of the large theaters in Chicago told me recently, that in his opinion, the movies have become the modern nurse maids for the children of the rich and poor alike. Cars from Cadillacs to "Tin Lizzies" drive up and disgorge their small occupants each night regardless of the sex picture shown, and the parents drive nonchalantly away. In two or three hours these carefree parents return to take their children home. Some parents a few years hence will wonder why their children are different from their neighbors' children.

GOLD FOR GOD

THERE lived one time a very rich king; his wealth increased so rapidly that he began to think in terms of gold. One evening as he sat alone, long after his little daughter's good-night kiss, he felt a tiny tapping on his foot. Rubbing his eyes in the subdued light to be convinced he was not dreaming, he heard a tiny voice which said, "Thou art great, O King, and rich; my wand and I can give thee thy one heart's desire. Speak now, ere I go," the fairy said.

"Give me gold," excitedly spoke the king, "Give me the golden touch." "This will be done. At dawn tomorrow thy touch will turn each thing to gold and thou, oh Midas, will become earth's richest king." The fairy circled her tiny wand three times above her head and disappeared. "Can this be true?" thought the king.

The sun was high when the king awoke. "It is true, it is true!" he cried joyfully as he touched his kingly robes into beautiful golden fabrics. As he sat before his morning meal, his heart grew proud and haughty. But, alas, his food, too, turned to gold. "What matters that," he said—"I am the richest king on earth today!" Just then his little daughter laughing and singing, sprang into his arms for her accustomed morning kiss. He held her happy little form close to his heart. But just one moment and there lay in his strong arms, his daughter lifeless, body turned to gold! "Oh, God," he cried in anguish, "what have I done, what have I done! It is not gold I need, but God," he sobbed, falling to his knees. "Help thou me this day, the most wretched man in all my kingdom wide." Another gentle tapping on his sandal brought again the fairy to his side. "Take my gold away and give me God," he cried.

"It shall be done," the fairy said, "But tell me first, O King, wherein real riches lie." From out the depths of his agonized heart the king replied, "In the heart of man, in my fatherhood, in my people, in my honor and service to God and man. My goal has been gold, henceforth it shall be God."

Has America like King Midas been seeking gold instead of God? One statesman recently said of her, she is in "the Twentieth century scientifically, but in the Sixteenth, spiritually." America need seek the abundant life through no other path, for His is "the Way, the Truth, and the Light."

SEEK FAMOUS FILM

For the past 15 years, the British War museum has searched in vain for the motion picture photographer who made the movie of the Allies firing the last shots of the World war in Maubeuge, France, on the morning of November 11, 1918. In the excitement, he walked away and no one knows who he was or what ever happened to him or to his famous film.—Collier's Weekly.

CALERA NEWS

The second week of our school finds 394 youngsters seeking knowledge. The most pleasant thing that has come our way in some time, was the visit of Mr. McCauly, the engineer for our County board, who on Monday afternoon located and took tentative grades for the new High School unit which will be ready by September, 1936. This addition will give us room to accommodate through the Senior High grades. For the past several years our people have dreamed of this. We hope to have as good school center as the country affords, and if cooperation is any sign, our hopes will not be in vain, as we have a school minded community.

The Rev. and Mrs. B. F. Miller are celebrating their 25th anniversary on October 2nd, by keeping open house to their friends from 7:00 to 10:00 P. M.

The P.-T. A. met at the Junior High School auditorium Tuesday afternoon with a business and get-acquainted meeting. Mrs. Pete Hill, Mrs. W. Seale, Mrs. S. M. Tomlin and Mrs. E. K. Wood served punch and cake.

Robert Edward Lyman, of Montevallo, spent the week-end with his grandparents.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Holcombe's house guests this week-end, were: Miss Ada Holcombe, who is teaching in the Clanton High School; and Mr. George Holcombe, of the University of Alabama.

Misses Vera and Martha Matthews, of Ashby, Alabama, spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Norris.

Mrs. C. E. Meade and Hynes, of Helena, were in Calera, Monday, visiting friends.

Mr. J. M. Frazier, who has been sick at his home for the past two weeks, is improving.

Mrs. H. F. Blake and daughter, Lois, have returned home after a weeks visit in Birmingham with relatives.

Miss Fannie Pearl Seale is visiting friends and relatives in Selma.

The Womanless Wedding, sponsored by the M. E. Missionary Society at the Junior High School auditorium, Friday evening, was well attended. Miss Nell Gilmore, Miss Bess Rice and her chorus, and Mr. Pete Hill, presented an interesting musical program.

Mrs. Norman Peterson and son, Norman Jr., of Birmingham, were the dinner guests of Mrs. Richard Parker, Sunday.

Mr. S. D. Cowart, Miss Ethel Cowart and Miss Ida Kern, of Greenville, Alabama, have returned home after a few days visit with Mr. and Mrs. Z. S. Cowart and Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Cowart.

Mr. S. M. Tomlin and son, Junior, and Mrs. Charles Lake motored to Birmingham, Wednesday.

Mr. M. D. Crowson and Mr. A. G. Ellison were in Montevallo, Tuesday, on business.

The Ladies M. E. Missionary Society attended the Zone meeting at Siluria, Friday night.

Mrs. Jasper Holcombe and daughter, Lucy Jean; Mrs. Z. S. Cowart; Misses Lucy Bailey Bowdon, Margaret Kate Bowdon, and little Ann Salter, of Opelika, spent Saturday in Birmingham.

Miss Elizabeth Hill, of Saginaw, was the guest of Miss Zemma Holcombe, Saturday.

Mr. V. R. Cost was in Selma Saturday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Callie Wallace, of Centerville, were the week-end guests of Mrs. J. Wallace and family.

Kiddies' Kolumn

Dear Kiddies:

It is a pleasure to welcome you back into the columns of the Democrat this week, and I hope to hear from many of you in Shelby County. I have found a little poem which I thought you might enjoy reading. It so vividly describes those First Daps in School we all like to remember, and which some day will, I hope, be a happy recollection for all of you:

FIRST DAYS.

"Little red schools on a country road,
And those on a city street
Alike are echoing once again
To the marching of eager feet.
Faces with freckles and faces with smiles
Sometimes a tear in an eye,
Now and again there's a new little girl
Or a little boy starting to cry.

Oh, the road winds far when it starts to school,
And it wanders thru half the town
When a small boy chokes on a hidden lump
That wants to go up, not down.
His toys are scattered about the house
Yesterday he could play,
But he washed his face and he went to school
When the loud bell rang today.

He's finding a world that he didn't know,
He'll laugh at each glad surprise,
After the lump goes down a bit
And the tears have left his eyes
The waiting toys are as safe as safe.
It's part of an old, old rule:
Nobody likes to touch his toys,
When the last little boy's in school."

Dear Mildred White Wallace:-

I was sorry I did not get the letters in last week, but I am doing my best to get them to you in time for this weeks Democrat. I sincerely hope all the Kiddies in Shelby County will cooperate with me in making a success of this Kiddies Kolumn.

I have had a fine time this summer, but now it is time to buckle down to work, for vacation days are over and school days are with us again.

Thanking you very much for the paper, and for the honor of being selected to Edit the Kiddies Kolumn each week, I am, Your Friend,
Hazel Ruth Swann.

NOTE: After reading the above letter I am sure every "Kiddie in the Kounty" will send in their contributions to this enthusiastic little Editor. Address: Hazel Ruth Swann, Columbiana, Alabama.)

Dear Mildred White Wallace:-

Vacation days are over. School days have begun again. While I was on my vacation I visited my grandmother.

I have all of my new sixth grade books. I should think anyone could study better when they have bright new books. Your Friend,
Mary Howard Curlee,
Columbiana, Ala.

Dear Mildred White Wallace:-

School has begun. I am in the 6th grade and I like it very much. I like my teacher. Her name is Miss Irene Bishop of Columbiana.

I have lots of new books and the subjects I like best are history and geography.

I hope to see my letter in the Democrat this week. Yours truly,
Edna Chappell,
Columbiana, Ala.

Be sure to see the Democrat when you need JOB PRINTING of any kind. We guarantee satisfaction.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to express to our friends our many thanks for the kindness and sympathy shown us during the illness and death of our sister and daughter. Romayne. Especially do we thank the good people of Camp Branch Community and the Ladies Missionary Society for their faithful service. Also we shall never forget the many deeds of kindness shown us by our friends and relatives of Birmingham and Ensley. May God's richest blessings be upon each of you is our prayer. (Signed)
Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Riley and children.

TOO MANY hours in a kitchen that has perhaps become out-of-date with the passing years—a tired feeling that shouldn't be yours—backaches that rob you of rest and vitality . . . that's part of the price you're paying for not having a modern Electric Kitchen.

Electrify Your Kitchen at* SMALL COST

Under the Economy Purchase Plan you can now buy all three of the modern electrical kitchen devices—electric range, water heater and refrigerator—for monthly payments no greater than for just one of them a few years ago. Inquire at our store, or a dealer's.

WHY NOT HAVE ONE?

The prices of electric refrigerators, electric water heaters and electric ranges are now so low, and the cost of operating them under our LOW RATES is so surprisingly little, that any family—even those with modest incomes—can afford to have a completely electrified kitchen!

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

In office! Monday morning, September 23! Linotype pointing a grimy, stern finger at my late entrance. Exactly 16 galleys of type must be written for this weeks issue of the Democrat, comes the announcement from that expert manipulator of the keys known as George Richardson. Happy greeting we would say—and with moré noise in a newspaper office than any place you can even THINK of—Niagara Falls sounds like a soothing lullaby! Yet, CONCENTRATE we must! Well, so be it—let's see what has happened during the past few days in "Your Little Main Street and MINE".

The Exchange Club held a regular meeting on last Friday night. "To dunk or not to dunk" was the question, for instead of a "manhattan Cocktail", there was served in Curlee's Cafe, "POTLIKER and CORNBREAD"—just an "old southern custom", but it clicked 100 per cent with the Exchangeites. In fact, one prominent member made a motion to appoint a "Permanent Pot Liker" Committee whose duties would be to see that this "vegetable beverage" was served at each meeting of this congenial group of business and professional men. It was unanimously adopted, and regarded as the most important business attended to on this happy social occasion.

The last dance of the season in the Airport was staged on Saturday nite by the Rhythm 'Ristocrats—unless a suitable place can be found for continuing these bi-monthly dance programs which have been so popular through the summer season. This talented group of musicians, however, will continue their weekly rehearsals, and will be open for special engagements through the winter months between football schedules and other activities which are now claiming their attention.

We gratefully acknowledge a renewal of allegiance to the Democrat from our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mahan, of Montevallo. By-the-way, have you ever visited their lovely little Beauty and Barber Shop in Montevallo? It has recently been completely renovated and the latest equipment in this line has been installed. The Mahan's careful attention to the details that distinguish the most carefully groomed man or woman has won for them an enviable reputation. There is a personal interest in the quality and character of their work, and your individual requirements are studied carefully, and the advice you receive from these skilled operators will be of inestimable value to you when in need of a new Permanent Wave or a distinctive hair cut, or special treatments for scalp and skin. Our only disappointment, when we stopped for a little wayside chat with these friends of ours, was that "His Majesty", Red Mahan, Jr., had just "gone home for his afternoon nap" and we did not get to see the most interesting member of the family. However, we shall look forward to another visit when the young manikin will be present.

Montevallo is on the "up and up" no matter which way you turn. A note of prosperity has invaded the down town section, and we could not realize we were in the same town. The new Strand Theatre is a most pretentious undertaking, and when completed, will be a Cinema monument worthy of the years of hard work and conscientious effort on the part of Eddie Watson to bring to Shelby County the BEST entertainment the silver screen offers for his thousands of patrons throughout the County. We extend congratulations across the miles for the signal success which has crowned his activities.

One other attractive new place we dropped by to visit while in the town of Montevallo, was the recently opened SACHS SHOE SALON. This artistically arranged exclusive Shoe Store deserves the prestige it is now receiving. Manager Sachs expressed himself as being delighted with the reception accorded him in his new undertaking, and believe-it-or-not, one day last week the store was crowded and not a single customer missed being fitted, and PLEASED enough to leave with the package of "perfectly comfortable" shoes bought from this modern and conveniently arranged Shoe Salon. That is "batting" 100 percent and here's hoping the record will not be broken. So, if you want to make your "little footprints just right", see Mr. SACHS.

Mrs. J. R. Beavers, after a visit to her sister, Mrs. Rosa Teague, in Columbiana, has returned to her home in Birmingham.

. Mrs. Celia Turner (Celia McMillan), formerly of Columbiana, now residing in Birmingham, spent the week-end in Columbiana with her aunt, Mrs. Esther Christian.

Do you feel "down and out" after a hard days grind in a busy office or around the house? All right, here is a pleasant remedy —— Go to Louise's Beauty Salon, call for Delilah Curry and let her give you a Marinello Facial. We personally guarantee you will feel "good as new" when magic finger tips have completed their expert "manipulations". Those little tell tale tired lines will vanish, the tissues will be firm and your face will reflect a miracle of radiant freshness. Don't take my word for it, TRY IT!

A. O. Horton, principal of the Vincent Consolidated Schools, was an interesting visitor in the Democrat office on Saturday. Mr. Horton-is considered one of the best High School principals in the State and his record during his sojourn in Shelby County proves this enviable reputation to be correct. After chatting with this gentleman, we found him to have his complete program mapped out for the coming semesters, and a well-balanced budget, financially speaking, combined with an evenly appropriated assignment in each Department—Music, Dramatic Art, Physical Education, and Literary subjects, which when completed will give to each child under his leadership, a perfectly balanced education, well rounded, with no undue stress on any ONE Department. This is as it should be! We offer congratulations to Vincent for re-electing this gentleman to this responsible position.

Happily do we record Mr. O. F. Lokey's renewal subscription to the Democrat this week, and acknowledge gratefully his valuable cooperation on many occasions.

There is nothing that gives us more pleasure than in having the privilege of welcoming old friends back to MAIN STREET—especially is this true, when these "old friends" take "time out" to come by our little cluttered up office to reminisce on "days gone by". Monday morning brought such an incident when Clay Lester, of Birmingham, spent a few hours in Columbiana, and dropped by to brighten the day with his merry chatter, and also to again pull up his chair in our friendly circle of Democrat readers for another year. A round of applause greeted this young fellow who has many friends in Shelby County who are always delighted to see him in his former haunts.

Guess you knew that "NUMBER PLEASE" will soon no longer be heard over Herr Bell's trick invention in Columbiana. It will be up to YOU to find your own number, and if you can't get the little revolving disc to get the correct figure, it will be because you can't work the new DIAL system now being installed.

An entertaining letter from our friend, Franklin Norris, Jr., has just been received, and he states he thoroughly enjoys the Democrat each week——to "keep on sending it"—— Now, isn't that just the news you like to get early in the morning? I'll say it is! Mr. Norris is now making good as a Radio Engineer and Technician in WBJY, Gadsden, Ala.

Do you know your onions? A farmer friend sends in this prophecy:
"Onion's skin very thin,
Mild winter's coming in;
Onion's skin thick and tough,
Coming winter cold and rough."
Well, which is it this time?

The American Legionaires are doffing their purple and gold trench caps in St. Louis this week, as they meet in their 17th annual convention. Highways, special trains, the broad Mississippi River and other means of locomotion and navigation, were not fast enough for Walter Chancellor and Tom Rinehart who FLEW to St. Louis to greet their World War buddies on the bunting draped streets where the legion organization was born 16 years ago. It is estimated that 200,000 members will register. In our vivid imagination we can hear the sidewalks resounding under the staccato rap of thousands of smart new walking sticks and the tread of martial feet as they swing around the boulevards of St. Louis.

Thanks Mr. Walter Chancellor for your "promise to bring us home a souvenir!" While we are NOT from Missouri, we are just about as doubtful as a native—and we shall have to be "sighted before we believe it again.

Dr. and Mrs. H. T. Hamner, of Camp Hill, were guests of their daughter, Myra Hamner Miles, during the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Betts and son, Robert, of Birmingham; and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Davidson and son, Dick, of Helena, spent Sunday with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Pitts, in Columbiana.

The many friends of Walter Campbell, former Manager of WAPI, who received rapid recognition and promotion after leaving the Magic City for KOA, Denver, Colorado, will regret to learn that he passed away on last Friday at his home in Colorado, following an emergency operation.

Automobile driver's licenses are the newest auto accessories. They are little white slips of paper that will cost you exactly 60 and 30 cents per, and are on display in Probate Judge Walker's private office, for distribution under the new state law which goes into effect on October 1st.

This little "personal license tag" carries a rather full description of the person to whom it is issued, and on the inside of the fold there is a paragraph for the Judge to fill out—what he or she was convicted of—when and where etc. Too many of these "Judicial marks" will cancel your permit to travel the highway by "driving it yourself". The "little human passport" is bill fold size, and you must keep it with you all the time—everywhere you go—just like a "silent partner"—and the revenue from this particular tax affair will go to support 200 men who will patrol the highways and nab you when you "speed 'em up", or round a curve too quick or bump off somebody without "blowing your own horn." The "sale" lasts until November 14th—for the prices above mentioned. For further details, see Judge Len C. Walker.

Miss Mamie Jo Harbin and Miss Lucile Roper, of Athens, Alabama, were week-end guests of Mrs. Grace Carter.

R. J. Finley, Auditor for the Atlanta Constitution, has been visiting his father, Mr. Jim Finley, in Columbiana during the past few weeks. Mr. Finley has held the above named responsible position in Atlanta for the past 14 years, and is another shining example of a "home town" boy having made good in the "big city".

Mayor Harry Gordon's progressive spirit, energetic activities, and untiring efforts in behalf of the people of Columbiana, has won the distinction of having Broadway, New York, telephone the Mayor of Columbiana, to state that COLUMBIANA had received more improvement funds for its population than any other town in the United States. An article is being written about this achievement and will shortly appear in a National magazine. The publisher of this magazine phoned for Mayor Gordon's permission to release the article. Who says Columbiana is not on the map? And who says we haven't the best Mayor in Alabama?

A. D. Gordon, of the University, celebrates his 21st birthday on September 23rd. Mayor Gordon has sent to this oldest son of his, one of the family heirlooms, a diamond ring, to sparkle a "Happy Birthday" greeting on the joyous occasion. The diamond belonged to his maternal grandmother, and is very handsome.

The last mail in before paper goes to press brings us four renewals of which we are very proud: T. E. Watson, P. C. Wilson, E. S. Lyman, Jr., and J. A. Brown, all of Montevallo. We extend our gratitude and thanks for continued interest in the Democrat.

In 1934 there were 192 deaths from suicide in Alabama, according to complete records just compiled by the State Health Department at Montgomery. This was seven deaths per 100,000 population, slightly higher than the preceding year. Of the 192 deaths from this cause 171 were white and only 21 negro. From these figures it is seen that suicides are primarily a problem of the white population.—Alabama State Health Department, Montgomery, 9labama.

Reports of epidemics of poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) in several states have brought many inquiries to the State Health Department regarding the prevalence of the disease. Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer, answers that "There has been no material or alarming increase of infantile paralysis in Alabama during the year 1935. The number of cases compares favorably with the expected number of cases per year."—Alabama State Health Department.

Gentlemen:

The other evening when I came home from my work I walked out into the kitchen and found the maid ironing and putting the ironed clothes on top of the oven of our electric range. We always have biscuits for supper so I knew that our oven must be hot, and I scolded the maid for her carelessness. She merely laughed and said, "Put your hand on the oven, boss," and much to my surprise the outside of the oven was barely warm. Then she said, "Now open the oven door," and there was all the heat in the oven.

My wife had been telling me about how clean and cool an electric range is and I thought that some salesman had just gotten her over-enthusiastic. We agree with you when you say that electricity is cheap in Alabama.

You may use this statement in an advertisement if you like.

Yours very truly,

Frock That Puts Accent on Youth

PATTERN 9343

Always a good beginning, this youthful tailored collar on the simple yoke makes a demure foil for the dainty softness of the bodice. The prettiness of the chic frock is furthered with a graceful flare sleeve—or it may puff, if you prefer. The results are so satisfying you'll find it real fun to run up this little dress in a dainty printed silk or cotton. A soft handkerchief linen would be stunning, too, and so easy to tub. Buttons and belt can pick up a color in the print and make a striking accent.

Pattern 9343 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3½ yards 39-inch fabric. Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

Ethiopian War Fever
Not Even a Nest Egg

One hundred and thirty-nine years ago George Washington made his farewell address. It is mid-"Victorian" to drag in George Washington now, when so many are prepared to write a better Constitution than the one he signed. Nevertheless, some of the old-fashioned may tolerate a reminder that in his farewell address George Washington said:

Arthur Brisbane

"It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world."

Also, with apologies to pacifists and high-spirited young college gentlemen who say they would not fight under any circumstances, you are reminded that George Washington said in 1790:

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

If Mussolini can be scared by British gestures, he will be scared, with England sending her great battleships to the Gibraltar harbor. Other battleships and thousands of soldiers are sent to her island of Malta, and, imitating real war, she is putting "submarine booms" in the Gibraltar harbor on the assumption that wicked Mussolini might send submarines to blow up her battleships; and that is exactly what he would do if it came to war.

Mussolini is not alone in his desire for war. On Sunday in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa, according to the Associated Press, "2,000 shrieking Ethiopians," yelling "We want war," gathered before the imperial palace demanding weapons. The Associated Press says: "The scene was so violent that police confiscated motion picture films of it." That was wise, because films might have convinced the outside world that Ethiopians and Italians are much alike "under the skin."

Sewell L. Avery, head of Montgomery Ward & Co., will tell you that the work of the tax gatherers in America is done thoroughly. His company, on its regular business in six months, made $4,349,766. Taxes on this business amounted to $4,600,000, or $251,000 more than the concern earned. You might almost call that "discouraging business." When you take the eggs from the nest of the hen that would like to set, you always leave one egg, or at least a door knob, "to go on with."

Dispatches from Tokyo tell of planning political murder wholesale.

The "god-sent troops" that have committed occasional murders in highest places are tired of "occasional" murders, and decided to wipe out the Japanese cabinet in an air raid with bombs, destroy the financial district of Tokyo, assassinate hundreds of industrial and financial leaders and "reestablish imperial despotism."

The burning of buildings to put the throne and Tokyo in a state of chaos was part of the plan.

Sir Malcolm Campbell, who took his giant English-built automobile to the smooth surface of the Great Salt desert, west of Salt Lake City, and drove the car faster than 300 miles an hour, returns to New York advising motorists to "drive carefully."

Sir Malcolm, who has surpassed every speed record on the surface of the earth, selects the right place for speeding. At home he belongs to English organizations established to promote safety.

Sir James Jeans, British astronomer and physicist, whose "The Mysterious Universe" and other books you should read, has changed his mind about the age of the universe, and, like Professor Einstein, when he changes his mind he tells you.

He thinks the universe is about 10,000,000,000,000 or ten trillions of years old. That is a long time to Sir James Jeans and us, but, for all Jeans or anybody else knows, it may mean less than one hour in the life of some "super-universe."

Hitler, talking to his army about "iron discipline," blames Christianity and the Hohenzollerns for the rise of Communism that "I crushed when I came to power." Whether he crushed it or not remains to be seen.

A sailor from an American ship is locked up in Germany for humming "The Internationale," Communist hymn, and making the hymn worse by saying something unpleasant about Hitler.

Palmetto, Ga., reports negro tenant farmers selling their salt pork and eating chicken instead, because prices for pork are higher than for chickens. The drouth, lack of feed and the professor who invented the idea of killing mamma pigs before the little pigs were born are highly appreciated by Georgia's "hog raisers."

As to College Wardrobe, Here's What

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A LOGICAL way to assemble the all important "back-to-school" wardrobe is to divide it into two types—the "musts" which are absolutely necessary, and the "would like to haves," which make clothes a thrill and a venture.

In the "musts" smart shirtwaist frocks in the new silk weaves should alternate with sweater and skirt outfits. We speak particularly of "new silk weaves" because that's what they really are—"new." Handsome, practical, dependable-wearing silks which have the "look" of wool, are the last word in smart fabrics. Don't overlook, especially, the new spun silks which have a rustic-looking rough-surfaced texture. These noil silks, as they are sometimes called, are practically crushless, and though they look like wool they are much cooler for early fall days and steam-heated class rooms. They launder nicely, too.

The girl seated in the little inset picture is off to class in a strictly tailored frock of plaid noil silk which, to look at, you would think was wool. The dress buttons down the back and has cuffs and Peter Pan collar of pique.

The shirtwaist dress is full of bright ideas this fall. Round yokes, jeweled or fancy metal buttons, fur Peter Pan collars glorify the new silk models. Skirts have silk pleats; box pleats placed just above the knee all around are new and girlish looking.

The two-piece type of dress vies with one-piece styles. Perfect for campus wear is a two-piece frock as pictured to the left in the illustration. It is made of one of the chic tie-silks which are having such a pronounced vogue. This one is wine color with green dots. The blouse has flap pockets and the skirt buttons all the way down the front.

Prom-trotting daughters can really let themselves "go" on the subject of clothes. They can be glamorous and exciting and sophisticated and gloriously young, too, in satin, silk velvet or one of the new metal silks. This year's evening frocks go in for molded bodices and waistlines, wide belts or sashes and fullness spreading gently from the waist. Bodices are tricky. Sometimes they are merely a straight band of the fabric held up by camisole or "shoestring" straps. Again they are built up to cover the front of the throat in elaborately twisted, draped and winged treatments, with low-back decolletage.

Girls adore black. Let your daughter wear black in gleaming slipper satin or black velvet and then tell her to have her beau send her flowers for her hair instead of her corsage if she wants to be swish. Daughter will be very grand in a black slipper prom frock as pictured. It has the high-in-front winglike effect above mentioned, contrasting the low-cut decolletage at the back. The shiny belt is allover-stitched, which is the latest wrinkle for belts.

If your young hopeful is going to a co-ed college, she will want a few soft dressmaker-type afternoon dresses. For tea dancing nothing could be more ideal than a black silk-satin ensemble. Don't merely ask the salesman for "satin." For satisfaction in wear and appearance specify silk satin and insist upon it. The dress should have a cowl neck—that means glittering clips to daughter. The jacket should be cut on the classic lines of her sports jacket, with patch pockets and notched lapels. The skirt should come just below the break of the calf. Worn with one of the new baby bonnets of black silk velvet with ostrich plume tips, daughter will be devastating to her "date."

EVENING ENSEMBLE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Velvet for evening, velvet for daytime, velvet, velvet, velvet! All signs point to a velvet season. The evening ensemble pictured is of deep red stiff velvet—a Chanel model. Luxurious marten collar and cuffs add to the glory of this superb creation. Note the button fastening of the gown. Many of the Paris dresses show a down-the-front button closing. Often on sheer or lightweight materials dozens upon dozens of tiny buttons are placed as close as possible and the effect is utterly feminine and charming.

FASHION SIGNALS GREEN FOR AUTUMN

Yellow, the sun's own color, is usually a summer favorite. This year has been no exception; yellow with brown, yellow with black and yellow with green is yellow still. This brings to mind that green is being wagered on as the follow-up color.

When utterly satiated with the idea of current fashions it's a relief to be able to peer into the future. On a recent peek behind the scenes the discovery was made that green looked good to many manufacturers whose fall lines are in preparation. And why not? It's one of the Renaissance colors and a change from the inevitable browns, reds and rust. Each autumn brings a change also from the blues in which we have been steeped all summer.

There are a number of likely looking green woolen dresses ready to make their shop window debuts. Some of them are sure to win applause. It won't be long now before shopping throngs will flatten their noses against the plate glass front which shields the cloth-clad mannequin from the street.

Green, White Jade Having Tremendous Vogue in Paris

Green and white jade is having a tremendous vogue of popularity in Paris now. One-third of every jewelry shop window is devoted to fascinating carved necklaces, pins, clips and earrings, while fat rounded bracelets of uncarved jade are matched by round jade rings. Knick-knacks of carved jade such as small, fat Buddhas on jet stands, ugly little monkeys and awkward elephants are made in green and white jade and vary in size from tiny miniatures to statuettes of 8 or 10 inches in height.

Fall Fabrics

Materials used by smart designers for evening clothes include velvet, lame, metal fabrics, "cellophane" mixtures, brocades and lace.

Lesson for September 29

JOHN (THE MINISTER AND HIS PEOPLE)

LESSON TEXT—Third Epistle of John.

GOLDEN TEXT—Beloved, imitate not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God: he that doeth evil hath not seen God.—III John 11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Letter From John.

JUNIOR TOPIC—With Ink and Pen.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making Our Church Friendly.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Friendly and Hospitable Church.

I. Personal History.

1. He was the son of Zebedee and brother of the apostle James (Matt. 4:21). The implication is that his father was in easy circumstances, for he had boats and hired servants (Mark 1:19, 20).

2. He was a disciple of John the Baptist (John 1:35-40). This was a most valuable training, for John was a man sent from God (John 1:6). The fiery eloquence of the Baptist no doubt profoundly impressed him.

3. He was called to follow Jesus (Matt. 4:21, 22). He was first called into the relationship of a disciple. As a disciple he came to know Jesus personally.

4. Appointed as an apostle (Matt. 10:2). Having been tested as a disciple, he now is appointed as an apostle (Mark 3:13-19; Luke 6:13-16).

II. His Character.

1. He was reserved. That is, he was decidedly reticent about himself. He speaks of himself as "the disciple whom Jesus loved" and "that other disciple."

2. He possessed a rare gift of penetrative insight. The truths set forth in his writings did not come as a result of reasoned judgment, but of penetrative insight. He was indeed a seer.

3. He was thoroughly masculine. Christian art does him a thorough injustice in portraying him as effeminate. He was intense, vehement in his temperament. He was truly a "son of thunder," as Christ declared (Mark 3:17).

III. Some Instances of Behavior.

1. Intolerance of irregular service (Luke 9:49, 50). There was a certain disciple who seems to have been intelligently witnessing and God had honored his testimony with power to cast out devils. John forbade him because he was not working with them.

2. His righteous indignation displayed (Luke 9:51-56). When Jesus had set his face toward Jerusalem some Samaritans refused to extend hospitality to him. This treatment of his Master so aroused the anger of John and James that they desired to call down fire from heaven to burn them up. This action grew out of John's great love for his Master.

3. John's care of Christ's mother (John 19:25-27). From the cross Jesus beheld his mother and committed her to the tender care of John. The intense love that he had for his Lord would move him to express the tenderest affection for his mother.

IV. His Third Epistle.

This is one of the three private Epistles of the New Testament and gives us a look into the early church life and also a picture of the aged apostle. This Epistle consists of the following parts:

1. The salutation (vv. 1-4). This letter was addressed to Gaius, with the fervent wish that his temporal prosperity and physical health would be measured by the measure of the increase of his spirituality. His supreme joy was to hear that his children were walking in the truth.

2. His praise for Gaius (vv. 5-8). This praise was for the hospitality which Gaius showed toward some traveling evangelists. In spite of the opposition of a certain prominent member of the church, Gaius received these preachers into his home. To receive God's messengers into our homes and send them forth on their journey is a deed worthy of God. One of the best ways to help the truth is to show hospitality to its messengers.

3. His condemnation of Diotrephes (vv. 9, 10). The sin of this man was his over-weening self-confidence and arrogance. He loved to have the place of pre-eminence; therefore, for that reason he refused to receive these traveling evangelists and expelled from the church those who had received them into their homes. He even maliciously attacked John the beloved pastor. His spirit of pride moved him to acts of tyranny toward others.

4. His commendation of Demetrius (v. 12). Demetrius was perhaps the bearer of this letter. John gives the assurance that Demetrius was of good report among all men. His life of good deeds proved that he was in fellowship with God.

Joys

We should publish our joys and conceal our griefs.

The worse the passage, the more welcome the port.

Joy and sorrow are next-door neighbors.

Joy which we cannot share with others is only half enjoyed.

Enthusiasm

To have true enthusiasm, we must have faith, assurance, hope, reliance and confidence in our own loyalty and ability.

HITCH-HIKING FLY SPREADS DISEASE

The common house fly is a hitch-hiker. However, the fly doesn't bother to jerk a thumb and ask a ride; it flies into moving autos or even trains or airplanes without permission and often travels hundreds of miles before leaving its chosen vehicle.

This habit of flies traveling great distances on other power than their own has made local fly eradication campaigns less effective than the campaigners hoped. Cases have been found where a fly carried disease germs on its legs and body for miles and infected people in the community where it settled. No previous cases of the disease were in existence in the new community and health authorities could find no other source of infection than flies.

Repeated warnings of physicians and health officials have apparently failed to instill a proper fear of the house fly in the average mind. However, a more thorough knowledge of the habits of a fly would increase the respect for this tiny insect, according to authorities on the subject.

Decent cleanliness in any home requires protection against the menace of flies. Whether a fly is home-born or a hitch-hiking visitor, he is a danger. Fortunately, an effective fly-killing program can be conducted in any home by the use of a reliable fly spray containing an ample quantity of Pyrethrins, a product derived from Pyrethrum flowers, which is death to flies, when sprayed in a fine mist.

Haste at the Wrong Time Often Fatal to Motorists

A motor accident never occurs if it can be avoided. Drivers do not deliberately crash into each other, skid off the road, run into trains at grade crossings or swerve into trees. Traffic mishaps occur only after it is too late to prevent them. Reduced to a fundamental, they are almost always the result of too much speed in the wrong place.

Speed in itself is relative. A speed of three miles an hour is too much if it carries a load of people onto a grade crossing in front of an oncoming locomotive. A speed of 70 miles an hour, or even 80, under the proper conditions, with car mechanically perfect, brakes in good working order, driver alert, road wide and smooth and the way ahead clear of traffic for half a mile, is safe enough.

Rather than put all the blame on speed, perhaps it should be placed on haste, which is speed at the wrong time. The proper conditions for speed, of course, vary. Sometimes the conditions demand unusually slow driving. Sometimes they permit of unusually fast driving. But drivers, if they will remember that any speed which places them in danger or causes them to be dangerous to others is too much, can often avoid accidents before they are in the midst of them.

Rats Kill Ferrets and Cats

Tistan da Cunha, the world's loneliest island, is trying to find a way to rid itself of he-man rats which swam ashore from a wreck. The invaders have multiplied, and both cats and ferrets have been sent at various times to exterminate them. But there are no cats, and no ferrets on Tistan da Cunha today. The rats have eaten them all.

HALF-AND-HALF LAW CASE

When a Dutchman refused to cross the frontier into Germany to give evidence, a strange court was held near Elten. The Dutchman was willing to give evidence, so the court removed to the Dutch customs house on the frontier, a little way from Elten. There a table was placed half in Dutch and a half in German territory. The witness, standing on Dutch land, made his statement to the German judges sitting in Germany. —Tit-Bits Magazine.

"I've discovered Calumet's big, new 10¢ can!"

"No more 'by-guess-and-by-golly' baking in this house now!"
says Mrs. Owen H. Fleming, 1235 Judson Ave., Evanston, Ill.

Mrs. Fleming was one of the first women to get the big, new 10c can of Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder.

"No need for any woman to take chances with her baking now," she says. "That new 10c can of Calumet certainly means that the very best can be bought at a bargain."

Ask your grocer to show you the new, bigger 10c Calumet can!

A SIMPLE TWIST . . and the Easy-Off Top lifts off. No spilling, no broken finger-nails!

WHY DOES CALUMET give such astonishing "baking luck?" Why is Calumet different from other baking powders? Because Calumet combines two distinct leavening actions. A quick one for the mixing bowl. A slower one for the oven . . . And Calumet's famous double-action is so perfectly balanced and controlled that it produces perfect leavening—every time.

All Calumet prices are lower! Calumet is now selling at the lowest prices in its history. The Full-Pound Can now sells regularly for only 25¢. And if you want a smaller size—get the new, big 10¢ can—a lot of good baking for a dime—with Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder.

Plant Oats Early And Treat Seed For Smut

AUBURN, Ala.—Oats should be planted early and the planting seed should be treated with a formaldehyde solution to prevent smut, advises J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist.

Experiments show that early-planted oats produce almost twice as much as do late-planted oats. Sow 2 to 3 bushels of turf or Red Rustproof strains.

Mr. Lowery says that oat smut can be controlled very easily and cheaply by treating the planting seed as follows:

1. Buy a one-quart atomizer-type sprayer from a drug or hardware store. (Cost about 50 cents).

2. Get from a drug store one pint of formaldehyde (40 percent) solution for each 50 bushels of seed to be treated. (Cost about 50 cents).

3. Pile oats to be treated on a clean floor, canvas, or in a tight wagon bed.

4. Pour formaldehyde from the bottle into the sprayer; fill the bottle with water and pour it into the sprayer.

5. While the oats are being shoveled from one pile to another give one good squirt of the solution to each shovelful of oats as they are moved.

6. Round up the treated pile of oats and cover with bags which have been sprayed inside and out with the solution in order that the formaldehyde gas may be retained and penetrate the entire pile.

7. Leave the oats covered five hours, or over night.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

The old Temple of Justice is having its face lifted this week and a new coat of paint will soon adorn its walls and copper dome. Every thing and everybody seemed to be on the "up and up" around the Judical emporium when we made a quick circuit through the corridors. By-the-way, have you seen the President of the Board of Revenue, Hon. J. M. Lyon, in his new Fall attire-chapeau and accessories? For the latest in neck wear, we refer you to this distinguished gentleman, who really is sporting a "tie that binds" this week. The hat, too, is the snappiest we have seen here or elsewhere this season. Do not depend on this news item—go by and look him over. He may "roar" at you a bit, but it won't amount to much. He is elated over the progress being made on various highway projects in the County, and we hope the Board will allow C. R. Tinney to continue his excellent work on the Chelsea road which, in our humble opinion, when completed, will be worth more to Shelby County citizens than any project we have yet viewed. Mr. Tinney is doing his best toward improving this section in his District, and deserves the full cooperation of every citizen in this County to put this project over the top.

On Tuesday morning L. C. Abbott assumed the responsibilities of Tax Collector of Shelby County. Mr. Abbott needs no introduction to citizens of his native County, and the flatttering vote he received in recognition of his ability, during the last election, is a worthy tribute to his genuine worthiness. His unusual efficiency, combined with years of training in both the Tax Assessor's and Tax Collector's offices peculiarly fit him for the acceptance of the honor so universally bestowed upon him. County-wide congratulations and good wishes were showered upon this popular official on Tuesday.

Mr. Dixie Bates Shealy who received the appointment to the Tax Collector's office from Gov. B. M. Miller, has bbeen chosen Mr. Abbott's assistant.

Luther Fowler, Editor for the past twelve years of the Shelby County Reporter, is by no means a stranger to Shelby County citizens. His legions of friends through the County were proffering congratulations, Tuesday, upon receiving the title of Tax Assessor of Shelby County and assuming the many duties incident to this important position. Mr. Fowler has been prominently identified with the civic, political, religious, social and educational life of Shelby County for a number of years, and has a wide following of interested friends who heartily wish him a successful term in office. He will continue to dictatc the Editorial policies of the Reporter, and Mrs. Lucile B. Blackburn will assist him in discharging the many duties incident to the Tax Assessor's office.

Mrs. Esther Christian, who has so capably filled the Tax Assessor's office for the past four years, states she will enjoy a rest from the heavy responsibilities of her official capacity. We are personally afraid she is contemplating another trip WEST. However, a visit to this fascinating country is O. K.——but for a permanent sojourn, we vote—"NO".

Mr. Will Pope, of Wilsonville, was elected Chairman of the Shelby County Board of Child Welfare, at a meeting held in the Courthouse on Monday.

Mrs. Lera Holcombe, of Calera; J. T. Lee, of Pelham; and J. M. Frost, of Montevallo, have received appointment to serve as members of the Board of Registrars for Shelby County.

Judge W. W. Wallace held a pleading term of the Circuit Court in Rockford on Tuesday.

FARMERS ADVISED TO PLANT VETCH & PEAS FOR RICH SOIL

To grow livestock and poultry successfully in Shelby County, most of the feed must be grown at home, and to produce the necessary feed on the average farm requires rich land. Vetch and Austrian Winter Peas are the answer to this problem.

One acre of good vetch or peas turned under in the spring will increase the yield of corn on that acre on an average of 20 bushels; it will cost about $2.50 for seed and inoculation to plant the acre.

A crop of oat and vetch or oat and Austrian pea hay will take care of the feed needs in areas where the drought cut the feed supply. To seed a crop of such hay 1 1-2 bushels of Fulghum oats and 15 pounds of vetch or 20 pounds of peas per acre should be used.

To make a success of growing peas or vetch, I would like to suggest the following points:

1. Use 20 pounds of vetch or 30 pounds of peas per acre.
2. Commercial or soil inoculation is necessary; commercial inoculation should be used according to instructions of the box.
3. Plant in the drill or broadcast, and cover 2 to 3 inches deep.
4. Fertilize with 400 pounds of basic slag or 300 pounds of acid phosphate per acre when the land has not had an application of phosphate for the last year or two.
5. Plant from now until the early part of November for best results.

If I can be of any help in this important work, please call on me.

NEW LOVEMAN STORE TO HAVE MANY CONVENIENCE FEATURES

Comfort of Public and Employes Adequately Assured—Continuation of NRA Hours Carried Over Into New Store.

With the opening of the new Loveman, Joseph and Loeb Department Store in Birmingham, around the middle of October, Alabama will boast the South's finest and most modern retail establishment.

Scores of innovations will be introduced in the new building, features seen for the first time in the South, most of which are designed to increase shopping comfort and convenience for the public, and better working conditions for the store's hundreds of employes.

Designed to increase ease of movement from the first to the second floors is a modern escalator, or moving stairway, the firs' to be installed in the Southeast. This will be supplemented by a battery of quiet, swift elevators to all floors.

Twelve-month air conditioning—the first year round system in the South—will be installed. This plant, the same as that in the huge Rockefeller Center in New York City, is scientifically arranged to avoid the sudden changes of temperature experienced in many of the temporary (hot weather) installations.

Rest-rooms for the public will be splendidly equipped—large, and comfortably furnished, increasing the popularity of Loveman's as the place to meet your friends while in Alabama's largest city.

Separate rest-rooms for employes will be the finest of their kind in the South. A feature of the new Loveman's is the installation of separate splendidly equipped hospitals—one for white employes, and one for colored employes. This is in line with the policy of Mr. Joseph H. Loveman that it is the duty of modern retailers to care for employes as painstakingly as for the public.

"I am one," said Mr. Loveman recently, "who greatly regrets the official passing of NRA. So far as this institution is concerned we hope and intend to hold for our employes all the gains made in wages and working conditions under NRA. It is our intention to continue these conditions in our new building, as we have since the beginning of NRA."

Visitors to Birmingham will find the new Loveman's one of the showplaces of the South. Constructed of Alabama steel, and concrete, finished in Alabama limestone, and equipped with fixtures furnished by Alabama manufacturers it will stand as a monument to Alabama energy, and initiative—an institution as truly representative of our State as the Jones Valley bed-rock on which it is erected.

INTERESTING PERSONALITIES

By Mildred White Wallace

RUTH WARREN

The following letter received by Miss Agnes Wingard from her friend, Miss Ruth Warren, former County Supervisor of Schools of Shelby County, whom many friends will happily recall, is so interesting and instructive, we have asked Miss Wingard's permission to publish under our Interesting Personality Sketch series. Miss Warren is now teaching in an American School in India.

Hello! India speaking!

I'm going to tell you a little about my trip "out". Ione saw me off in New York, and if you want to know how I felt as the boat left, just take such a jaunt yourself sometime!

I stayed in Naples three days then crossed by train to Brindisi, a ten hours ride. I was told that I would not have to change trains. Two Italian men in the compartment when I told them by signs that I was going to Brindisi made me change trains at Bari, otherwise I don't know where I would have gone.

There were four people to get on the boat at Brindisi, an American going to Allahabad to teach, two Indians, one had been in Chicago studying radio and the other in Germany getting his Ph. D. and I. We four made a table in the dining room. From the Indians I learned much about India. They were keen bridge players and we played often. There were many Chinese and Indian students returning to their native lands. I was the only American woman and my two cabin mates were the only English women in tourist class, there were other women, German, French, Austrian, Chinese and one Hindu woman who had been in London studying to be a teacher.

At Brindisi, amid much cheering music and black shirts, Italian soldiers marched on the boat. It was very exciting knowing that they were bound for Abyssinia. They embarked at Massowah and we were warned not to take pictures of that port!

I was glad to see Bombay, the Red Sea was hot and the Arabian was rough, so land looked good even if it were the most foreign looking place I'd ever seen. I was entertained while in Bombay by the President of the Woodstock board of Trustees and his wife. They have a lovely home (a high wall around it) in the midst of the most thickly populated area in the world. They put me on the train for Delhi (Del-i), where I changed trains. I was fortunate to go as far as Delhi with one of my cabin mates on the Conte Verde. Her friend, an English officer, met her in Delhi and they helped me transfer my baggage. There were three Hindu women and a child in the compartment with me. They were dressed in their native costumes and when venders would come to the windows to sell things they would pull their saris over their faces. There was no sleep for me that night, I was simply petrified! I didn't seem to worry them for they curled up in a ball and went to sleep. They got off early in the morning at Hardwar, the Holy City of the East. They were on their way to bathe in the Ganges. How they needed it!

To get to Mussoorie from Dehra Dun (train station) you come part of the way by auto, the rest by rikisha. One coolie brought my large trunk up the mountain on his back! This is a very popular health resort, many people come to avoid the extreme heat of the plains. Saturday I went to the Bazaar (town) to shop. I saw a Hindu public letter writer, writing letters; a cobbler sitting by the roadside with his tools mending shoes; a durzie (man who does the sewing) holding cloth with his toes while he sewed, they say the butcher cuts meat that way too! I haven't seen that! The mode of travel here is by rikisha, dandie or foot. I've tried all three!

School is fine! I have English, American and four native children. Most of the children are American and it is wonderful the American training they get so far from home. Some of the teachers are English so they get English training also. School takes up at 9 o'clock. At 11 o'clock I have a 40 minute rest period, 45 minutes for lunch and school is out at 2:45. The children have such English and Yankee accents I wonder that they understand me! They live in various parts of India and are very bright (most) and interesting. When native servants come to the door they have to interpret for me. The teachers have all been nice and considerate to one so new to India.

The hills are covered with wild orchids, lily of the valley and ferns. This is the monsoon season.

I have a fire most every night. Did you think India was hot? Not up here anyway! Excuse typing, I did it.

My address: Woodstock, Mussoorie, U. P. India. Aug. 21, 1935.

Sincerely, RUTH WARREN.

P. S. If you can't "come up to see me sometime", write a letter!

Kiddies' Kolumn

At School.

Dear Mildred White Wallace:-

My Pa, he takes the DEMOCRAT and I read the Kiddies Kolumn every time and sure do enjoy the letters the kids send in. I sure would be proud if my letter would get in the paper.

I go to school in Columbiana, and Mrs. Niven is my teacher. I sure do like her. She wants my letter to get in the paper, too. I study Reading, Geography and Arithmetic, and Spelling is my favorite subject. Dogs are my best pets.

Please publish my letter.

I Love You, Ezra Mason.

(All right Ezra there you are! I want to also thank you for your letter. It is individual, original and entertaining all rolled up into one grand little letter which we happily publish so that the Kiddies can enjoy it as we did here in the office. Best o' luck——and let us hear from you again. Yours, M. W. W.

ROMAYNE RILEY IS CALLED BY DEATH THURS., SEPT. 12TH

Received In Chancery 7-5-36

Romayne Riley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Riley, of the Camp Branch community, passed away on September 12, 1935.

Miss Riley was a devoted member of the Camp Branch Church and a talented vocalist. The Rev. W. L. Thompson conducted the funeral services from the Camp Branch Church. The music was in charge of the Westover quartette.

Miss Riley possessed many friends throughout the County who have enjoyed hearing her lovely voice on many occasions and who will regret to learn of her death.

The Democrat joins friends in extending sincere sympathy to the family.

1,667 Bales of Cotton Ginned In County

ALABAMA COLLEGE TO SHOW EXHIBIT FROM GUATEMALA

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—An exhibition of Guatemalan textiles and costumes, with their modern adaptations, will be brought to Alabama College through the National Alliance of Art and Industry October 6th. Its only presentation in the state has been arranged by the home economics department here.

The varieties of weaves of native craftsmen and the fashion content of the contemporary designs make this one of the outstanding foreign collections of the year. The exhibition consists of approximately 250 pieces of carefully selected Guatemalan textiles, supplemented by a number of costumes typical of villagers of the highland communities.

Other features of the exhibit include photographs of Guatemalan landscapes, paintings of the natives in their costumes and hand-woven adaptations.

In 1934 the Carnegie Institute of Washington sent Miss Ruth Reeves, widely known textile designer, to Guatemala to study the historic and contemporary designs and to make the collection of native arts in textiles and weavings. Regarded by many as the most effective imported display since the art center showed the Mexican craft material in 1927, the exhibit comes here from San Francisco. It is to be sent from Alabama College after October 26 to the Addison Gallery of Art, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.

Great Rally At Local Methodist Church

"Sunday afternoon, the hosts will gather at the Methodist Church, for a rally of the Churches included in the Vincent Circuit, the Wilsonville Circuit and our own Church at Columbiana," states the Rev. Henry M. Hurst. The purpose of this rally is to bring reports in on the Benevolences which promise at this time to be paid in full. At this writing, the Columbiana Church is near the goal and the pastor states that if every one does his best that Columbiana Church will be over the goal before the end of the week.

Conference Lay Leader Harry Denman, of Birmingham, will be present, as well as Presiding Elder Cooper. This meeting convenes at 2:30, and everybody is invited.

Harry Denman will speak at the Methodist Church Sunday evening at 7:00 o'clock. Do not fail to hear this forceful speaker and prominent young churchman. Dr. Cooper will conduct the last quarterly conference at the close of service.

On Monday evening all the Stewards of the above mentioned churches will gather at the Methodist Church for a Stewards' Institute to be conducted by Mr. Denman.

METHODS OF SOIL BUILDING WILL BE TAUGHT FARMERS

The Vocational Agriculture Department of the Shelby County High School offers to the following communities a series of meetings on soil building starting Thursday, Oct. 3rd.

Kingdom School House — 7:30 Thursday night, October 3rd.

Shelby School House—7:30 Saturday night, October 5th.

Shelby Springs Church—7:30 Monday night, October 7th.

Fourmile School House—7:30 Tuesday night, October 8th.

Chelsea School House—7:30 Thursday night, October 10th.

Calera School House—7:30 Saturday night, October 12th.

Wilsonville School House — 7:30 Monday night, October 14th.

Mt. Era Church House—7:30 Tuesday night, October 15th.

In Shelby County we have many of our farmers still cultivating poor land, when our best farmers started using winter legumes 18 years ago. Farmers that continue to plant poor land are destined to fail. Poor land prevents profitable farming, increases cost of production, makes the farm work harder, and prevents the use of livestock as a profitable sideline. In fact poor soil is responsible for conditions that exist in our communities economical and social.

We find corn production going from 18 bushels per acre to 28 bushels per acre with the use of vetch and the cost dropping from 89 cents per bushel to 23 cents per bushel.

Cotton with the proper fertilizer and legumes went from one-fourth of a bale to a bale per acre and the cost dropped from 10 cents per pound to 4 cents per pound.

If you have some poor land you should be interested in this series of soil building meetings. We can only prosper to the extent that we can make our lands produce.

(Signed) Joe W. Stone, teacher.

Parent Education Is Radio Club's Course

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — The Alabama College Radio Club has announced courses will be offered in parent education. Listening groups, will use the talks as material to guide discussion on practical problems.

The lecture in connection with each lesson will be broadcast by Mrs. Pearl Crawford, field worker in parent education, over Station WAPI, Birmingham, each Monday afternoon, beginning at 3 o'clock. Arrangements are planned for extending this service also through Stations WSFA, Montgomery, and WDOX, Mobile.

Questions and references will be provided for those who wish to prepare for the discussion. These guides may be obtained on sending names of the members of the group to the Alabama College Radio Club.

Parents whose attendance has been satisfactory may take an objective examination with the view to getting certificates of merit in their work in child study.

The courses will begin October 7. On Mondays from 3 p. m. to 3:15 the general subject is to be, "The Young Child." Under that heading the following programs will be presented in order through Nov. 15: The Healthy Child, the Busy Child, the Happy Child, the Nervous Child, Giving the Child Responsibility, the Only Child, the Questioning Child and the Child and Religion.

Teachers Institute Set For Monday, Oct. 7th

The Shelby County Teachers Institute will be held in Columbiana High School Auditorium on next Monday, October 7th. All teachers in the county are expected to attend. Supt. J. L. Appleton, Mrs. Zera Walton, of Columbiana, and N. F. Greenhill, of the State Department of Education in Montgomery, will have charge of the days program.

Hobo, Tramp, Bum—They Are Different

Very Distinct Class Lines Drawn Among These Groups.

To the average man the words hobo, tramp and bum are synonymous terms, used to designate a type of foot-loose, homeless specimen of the genus hobo. They are terms of derogation and opprobrium.

Not so! Before calling a hobo a tramp, or either man a bum, be sure you say it with a smile. For there are very distinct class lines drawn among these groups of unskilled and itinerant workers.

A hobo is a hard worker of the migratory type. He is possessed of a keen sense of his own importance and value to the world that would suffer without his services. The wheat fields of the Southwest, the timberlands in the Northwest, the fruit lands in various parts of the country could not show a profit without the presence of the hobo at strategic moments. To displace him in the economic scheme of things would be to keep on hand well fed and employed the whole year around, thousands of men whose services are only required a few weeks or months a year. Another distinction: The hobo travels on wheels, although the ticket office is not always a part of his traveling experience.

The tramp, on the other hand, migrates according to whim or chance. And he walks, always. Having nowhere in mind to get, he gets there at his leisure. If he works, as he does now and then, it is because of necessity and not through any sense of personal responsibility to society at large. In the mind of the self-respecting hobo, the tramp is distinctly an inferior.

The bum is looked down upon and dispised, both by the hobo and tramp. The bum travels nowhere, does nothing and is nobody. He is a parasite of the city, begging, borrowing, stealing, loafing.

Clip this out and paste it in your book of etiquette. You may need it sometimes to save yourself from one of those embarrassing moments, warns the Knickerbocker Press.

Indian Summer

Indian summer usually begins some time in October, but it may not begin until November. According to the United States weather bureau it is not a definite period occurring regularly each autumn, and is not based on accurate meteorological data. Indian summer varies greatly in duration. It may occur once or several times during the fall and early winter, or it may not occur at all, and if it does it may last a day or two or several weeks. And in some years there are more than one of these periods of hazy, tranquil days.

Mineral Water Plentiful

In some countries mineral water costs more than wine, but at Altheide in Germany it is so plentiful that the streets are sprinkled with mineral water.

Glacier Advances

The glacier at Jacobshaven, Greenland, is advancing 62 feet a day.

Find Out

From Your Doctor if the "Pain" Remedy You Take Is Safe.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

League of Nations Council, Still Hoping for Peace, Moves to Curb Italy—American Legion Condemns All Un-American Isms.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

ITALY having rejected the peace plan proposed by the League of Nations committee of five, and Ethiopia having accepted it, the committee reported to the league council that its efforts to solve the problem were futile. The council thereupon held a public meeting and adopted unanimously the recommendation of its president, Enrique Ruiz Guinazu of Argentina, that it proceed under article 15 of the covenant, drafting a report and recommendations for settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian embroglio.

Anthony Eden

As they did once before, the Italian delegates walked out of the meeting, and a spokesman explained that this was because they "would not sit at the same table with Ethiopia." With other prominent Fascists, the Italian representatives repaired to the lobby bar, ordered drinks and rather ostentatiously consumed them and marched out.

In a secret session the council drafted its report and framed its recommendations; but it also asked the committee of five to reconstitute itself so it would be ready to take advantage of any opportunity for mediation that offered in the near future.

A feature of the council's session was an address by Capt. Anthony Eden, British minister for league affairs. Conversations in Rome between British Ambassador Sir Eric Drummond and Premier Mussolini had led some to think Great Britain was weakening, but Eden announced his government was "steadfastly determined to abide by its policy" as previously declared. He said in part:

"In addressing my colleagues at the council on September 4 I expressed the view that it was our duty to use the machinery of the league that lay to our hands.

"Such is still my view. I therefore support without qualification the proposal of the president of the council, since we are now working under article XV, that the council should draw up a report of the recommendations provided for in paragraph IV of that article.

"So long as the council is engaged in drawing up a report of the recommendation the work of conciliation can continue and it is clear that no opportunity for such conciliation within the terms of the covenant should be missed."

Eden's attitide was supported by Peter Munch of Denmark and Maxim Litvinov of Russia.

On the whole, prospects for settlement of the African affair were very dim. It was reported that Mussolini had said to Count Charles de Chambrun, French ambassador to Rome: "I will invade Ethiopia on the date I fixed a month ago."

Emperor Haile Selassie wired the league requesting that in view of the "increasingly provocative attitude of Italy" neutral observers be dispatched to Ethiopia to establish responsibility in case a clash occurs.

Great Britain informed Italy that her tremendous naval concentration in the Mediterranean was not ordered with any aggressive motive but because of the violent anti-English campaign carried on by the Fascist press of Italy. The massing of the British warships at Gibraltar, Malta, Alexandria and the Suez canal continued, and Italy responded by rearranging her naval dispositions.

One result of the supposedly improved relations between England and Italy was the cancellation of the sailing of 10,000 more Italian troops to Libya, which colony borders on Egypt.

PREPARING for the imminent probability of war between Italy and Ethiopia, Secretary of State Cordell Hull established an office of arms and munitions control to carry out the provisions of the neutrality act and direct federal control of the munitions traffic.

The office is under the direction of R. Walton Moore, assistant secretary of state. Joseph C. Green is chief of the office and has as his assistant Charles W. Yost.

On recommendation of the board President Roosevelt proclaimed that hereafter manufacturers, importers and exporters of six categories of war implements must obtain licenses for exports and imports. The articles named comprise only weapons and other articles used in actual combat such as guns, war vessels, military aircraft and poison gas.

Secretary Roper told reporters that the munitions control board is studying the question of whether certain raw materials should also be classed with munitions.

AMERICAN Legionnaires in convention in St. Louis adopted with shouts of approval a resolution for active opposition to "nazi-ism, fascism, communism and other isms contrary to the principles enunciated in the Constitution." Still cheering, the delegates followed that up by asking the withdrawal of United States recognition of soviet Russia.

The veterans commended recent legislation for national defense and called for a larger army, continuation of the officers' training camps, the C. M. T. C. and R. O. T. C. in schools, and for a navy equal to any in the world. They asked all nations to work for world peace, and approved the neutrality resolution of the last congress.

Cleveland, Ohio, was awarded the 1936 annual convention after four ballots. The national American Legion band championship was won by the Chicago Board of Trade post musicians. Franklin post was second, Omaha third, and Mineral Springs, Texas, fourth.

At their final session the veterans elected J. Ray Murphy of Ida Grove, Iowa, national commander, and passed a resolution demanding immediate cash payment of the soldiers' bonus. Vice commanders chosen were: Raymond A. Gales of Virginia, W. E. Whitlock of South Sarolina, Whitney Godwin of Florida, Oscar Worthwine of Idaho, Lou Probst of Wyoming.

Mrs. Melville Mucklestone of Chicago was elected president of the American Legion auxiliary.

SOFT coal miners were victorious in the negotiations for a new wage agreement, and resumption of work in the mines was promised for October 1. The men were out on strike for eight days. Operators yielded to the union demands when they learned that relief officials would aid the strikers.

AUBREY WILLIAMS, first assistant to Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins, said in an interview that the unemployment problem will not be solved by a business pick-up unless industry "shares increased business with the workers." He asserted that the present gain in business has put few more people to work, and explained this fact by attributing it primarily to increased efficiency which permits employers to produce more goods than before with fewer employees.

Aubrey Williams

Williams said there had been a drop in the number of people on relief, but he attributed this largely to a "hard-boiled" policy under which the rolls were combed of ineligibles.

"As fast as they go from relief to jobs, we get as many new ones on relief who have exhausted their savings," he asserted. "We have become pretty darned hard-boiled on relief.

"Even the National Industrial Conference board says there is more unemployment now than a year ago," he continued. "Business absorbs new business without increasing employment. They get a dividend out of it, but no new jobs are given. We are not feeling any benefit as far as most of our clients are concerned."

By executive order the President added $800,000,000 to the sum which Harry Hopkins has to spend as PWA administrator, making the total at his command $1,375,000,000.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT cleaned up most of the official business on his desk and started on his vacation trip to San Diego, whence he will return through the Panama canal. Mrs. Roosevelt and a large party of officials accompanied him on the special train to the coast. At the last minute the President decided to speak to the midwest farmers, and this address was delivered Saturday at Fremont, Neb. The program called for a set speech at Boulder dam, another in the Hollywood bowl at Los Angeles, and one at San Diego. In addition the Chief Executive talked to the gathered crowds at many of the operating stops made by the train.

REPUBLICAN national committeemen met in Washington and began the serious preparation of the Presidential campaign. It was decided unanimously that the party efforts in the western states should be most vigorous and should begin immediately. Headquarters will soon be opened in Chicago with National Committeeman Harrison Spengler of Iowa in charge, and funds were allocated for its expenses.

The committee did not discuss candidates or the selection of a convention city. The latter will not be chosen until the winter meeting. At present Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City are the leading contenders, with the last named in good position because of its new air conditioned convention hall.

Rumors that the Republicans would attempt to hold their convention after the Democratic convention next summer were discounted for the reason that the Democratic gathering will be merely a ratification meeting for the renomination of President Roosevelt, which can be held any time next summer or fall, whereas the Republicans wish to get their campaign under way early next summer.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Tammany Hall, so vital to any plan for carrying New York for Franklin D. Roosevelt next year, has not the slightest reason at the present moment for desiring the President's continuance in office. It has gotten so little patronage that it is inconsequential. On the contrary, most Tammany leaders feel that it was Roosevelt and James A. Farley who were responsible for Tammany's not having the tremendous New York city patronage at the present moment. For it was a Roosevelt lieutenant, Joseph V. McKee, who ran with the tacit blessing of the White House and the more open support of Farley for mayor on an independent ticket, thus bringing about the election of Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia. And the President has been almost as friendly with La Guardia since the latter's election as he has with certain other Republican Progressives, notably Senator Robert M. La Follette.

Even this is not all that Roosevelt and Farley have done to Tammany. When Roosevelt was governor he went after the administration of Mayor James J. Walker, aided in its being shown up in spectacular fashion, and finally forced Jimmy Walker out.

Tammany never held this against Roosevelt. Its leaders are always practical. They knew there was nothing else Roosevelt could do, unless he abandoned all hope of becoming President. They knew that to pick a fight with Tammany has always been good national politics. And besides, while many of them were sorry personally about Jimmy Walker, they put their own man in as mayor, and the Hall continued to flourish.

But it must be remembered that for the two years preceding this, Tammany had been deprived of any share of state patronage. Tammany rather expected this of a Presidential candidate, but when Roosevelt's protege, Herbert H. Lehman, continued to starve the tiger, despite the fact that Al Smith had supported Lehman, the grievance bagan to grow.

This would have made no difference if it had not been for the La Guardia election, which left Tammany without federal, state or city jobs to dispense, in fact, at the lowest ebb of its power since the Civil war.

Always Dangerous

But that does not mean that Tammany will be weak in the next election. By no means! If the record of past campaigns is a safe guide, Tammany when furthest from the patronage trough, is always the most dangerous. Nor is this due to desperation, or to the idea of fighting with one's back to the wall. It involves other elements which very few people out in the country, to whom the very word "Tammany" is one of approbrium, understand. But it is a thing which a very brief conversation with any old New Yorker will confirm.

The point is that when Tammany is in power at the city hall everything that goes wrong is blamed on the Wigwam. By the same token, when Tammany is not in power at the city hall, everything that happens which does not appeal to the voters is an asset for Tammany.

Moreover, and this will surprise folks west of the Mississippi especially, most people who have lived in New York for a few years, and have had a chance to contract its administration with that of other cities, believe solemnly, whether right or wrong, that the taxpayer in New York gets more for his money than do the taxpayers of most other cities in the United States.

The writer is not attempting a statement of the merit or lack of merit of this contention. He is stating a political fact, which can be easily demonstrated by a few conversations with New Yorkers on your next visit to the metropolis.

Hope for Bonus

Payment of the bonus in full not long after congress meets in January, while not a certainty, is considered at least probable. President Roosevelt has made no definite commitments, despite the face that certain American Legion leaders have been giving that impression. No one really doubts that he will again veto the measure. The change in the situation as compared to last session is that the President is not expected to turn on anything like the heat to prevent his veto from being overriden that he did last time.

Without so much Presidential pressure, congressional experts say, there is not much doubt that the senate will follow the house in overriding the Chief Executive's disapproval. In fact, this theory is commonly accepted in congressional as well as Legion circles. In short, official Washington believes the bonus will be passed months before the national conventions meet in June.

Bonus politics is one of the queer exceptions to general rules. It has come to be generally accepted that it does not hurt a President to oppose bonus payments. But just as generally it is believed that voting against anything the soldiers want is little short of political suicide for a senator or member of the house.

This theory may or may not be accurate. It has never been adequately tested.

But, whether opposing the bonus contributed or not, the sentors and members of the house who attempted to stand by Presidents in opposing the bonus were killed off by their electorates one after the other.

Curious Complication

There is another curious complication to the present situation. Several senators are known to have told the bonus lobbyists that they would vote to override President Roosevelt's veto if that one additional vote would put it over. This is not just patter by the lobbyists. Two senators, whose names the writer is not permitted to mention, have confirmed such reports. They told bonus workers later that if it could be demonstrated next time that one more vote would do the trick, they would produce.

At least two such senators, in telling about it afterward, said they would probably have to "vote with the boys" next time, adding that it is always the last vote before election that counts. Both senators in question are coming up for re-election next fall, and both are expected to have hard fights.

By making that halfway pledge they removed in advance any grounds for the Legion leaders making any drive against them. In fact, both fully expect to vote for the bonus next time, and for the bonus to pass over the Rooosevelt veto, thus eliminating any possibility of repercussions for them at the polls. But last time they did not feel strong enough to risk the President's ire when he bore down on them to sustain the veto. They were interested in bits of that $4,000,000,000 work relief, for instance. Not to mention several other possibilities of Presidential favor or disfavor.

Next time, the understanding on Capitol Hill is, there will be no threats from the White House, not even implied ones.

Morgenthau's Trip

Rumors persist that the trip of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to Europe is not just a pleasure excursion, despite his emphatic insistence. Silver senators especially attach far more significance to it. They insist he is seeking an international agreement for the remonetization of the white metal. They point out that more than usual pains were taken to hide the recent conference between Mr. Morgenthau and Montagu Norman, famous and mysterious head of the Bank of England.

This visit is alleged to have occurred at Bar Harbor, Maine. Montagu Norman slipped into that Down East resort with not even a society column mention of his movements. At the same time Morgenthau, always a dutiful son, realized that he had not seen his father for several weeks. Henry Morgenthau, Sr., by a curious coindence, was also at Bar Harbor. So the secretary of the treasury slipped up to Bar Harbor and paid his parent the long deferred visit he owed.

So much the silver senators know. They add that they also know that the British financier and the head of Uncle Sam's treasury had a protracted talk—so protracted that it was the subject of much clatter in the servants' quarters all over Bar Harbor next day.

Nobody even claims to know what they talked about. Montagu Norman is famous for saying absolutely nothing in his interviews. Morgenthau is not quite so taciturn—but almost.

Shortly thereafter Morgenthau announces a pleasure trip to Spain. What the silver senators think is that some very important financiers, and some of the leading finance ministers of Europe, will also suddenly decide that a brief rest in Spain—away from all the excitement about Italy and Ethiopia—is just what the doctor ordered for them.

What they earnestly hope is that Morgenthau will be able to persuade them how much it would be to the advantage of all concerned for there to be an international agreement on silver.

Silver Program Bogs

Behind this desire on the part of the silver senators—and behind the possibility that Mr. Morgenthau may be going to attempt just that—is the discouraging fact that the administration silver program has rather bogged down. It is perfectly true that the United States treasury has acquired an enormous quantity of silver at very low prices. It is true that even at the present world price for silver the United States treasury has a handsome profit on what it has bought. But it is also true that the present hopes for a greatly higher price in the world market are not particularly bright.

The language of the famous silver act directed the treasury to buy silver until either (1) the price was $1.29 an ounce, or (2) the value of the monetary reserve behind the United States paper currency was one-third that of the gold so held.

Actually, of course, the silver senators cared nothing about the actual quantity of silver the federal government might acquire. Especially as the treasury, by paying a fixed price for all newly mined silver, took care of that angle. What they were very much interested in was to have such buying force the world price of silver up to $1.29 an ounce.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The Boston Lawrences came to California at the beginning of the gold rush, but the holdings of the family have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. Phil, twenty-five, is working in the iron works, Gail in the public library and Edith in the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars. Dick Stebbins, who has been admitted to the bar, has the case against Ariel dismissed. Gail suddenly realizes that she loves Dick and not Van. Stebbins and Ariel elope, according to a note left by the girl. Phil and Lily, now widowed, are married and Lily and her three children make their home in the Lawrence house. Edith is fatally injured in an accident for which little Danny, one of Lily's children, is innocently responsible.

The oil company began to build a trim little station, all red-and-white paint and fences, on the corner of the Lawrence place, and Phil spent his Saturday afternoons and Sundays clearing the overgrown garden at the other side of the house, chopping down moldy old shrubs and trees starved and cramped for light and air. Sunshine flooded the house that had been robbed of it for forty years; the rusty marks of the vines showed on the shabby paint.

The trees fell with long crashes in the hot January sunshine, and lay prone across the pampas grass and verbena bushes. Light streamed oddly into the dining room, and into the downstairs sitting room, where Edith had lain muttering on a chill October afternoon. The old house seemed shabbier than ever in this humiliating undressing, and yet it was good to have the great oaks on the western side of the garden exposed in all their stalwart beauty, and to obliterate the old paths with their bottle borders, and roll the tortured and raked earth smooth for a lawn.

Phil and Sam toiled and sweated happily at the changes; the small boys tumbled ecstatically, like worm-hunting robins, in their wake. Great brush fires smoked up into the clear warm spring air, and the ashes sifted softly upon Lily and Gail, who sat on the steps of the side porch and gave general directions as to the pruning of vines and the lopping of branches.

The heavily massed foliage gave way, parted, fell in great clumsy masses to the ground. Sometimes both men got tangled in it, and had to be helped out, with panting and laughter.

"They are happy," Gail thought, seeing Phil grow younger, simpler, more contented every hour. The disreputable old house, weather-beaten without and within, was heaven to him. Lily, paler now than she had been, her slender shapeless body already rounding out toward motherhood again, held in her stubby little common Wibser hand the keys of life for Phil. He had never been ambitious, socially or in a business way; what other men did, what the neighbors meant, signified nothing to Phil.

"They are happy, and I mustn't spoil it. Sam will marry here in Clippersville, just as Phil has, and they'll always be friends. And when I can I'll go away, I'll find my sort of living, too.

"But until I go, I must add to their happiness. Nobody—nobody ought to suffer, if there's any way out!"

If Lily had ever annoyed Gail, she did not annoy her now. Lily's complete lack of culture was nothing — Gail never thought of it. Lily's little airs and graces as Mrs. Phil Lawrence passed unnoticed. Lily could go to the movie with Phil, at the end of the long, busy day; there was no imposition in leaving the children with Gail, for Gail was at home anyway, and the children adored her.

She spent a wet March evening pasting pictures in her camera book, turning the pages backward, lingering against her will over the little prints.

Ariel, about ten, a fairylike little creature, with ringlets. Edith, in her white sweater, laughing and holding the dog—what was his name?

"Phil, what was the name of that mongrel we had for awhile?"

"Bim?"

"Bim."

Pictures taken out on the Stanislaus place with the Stebbinses. Dick, a rough-headed, long-legged fellow of twenty, little Sam all freckles and elbows.

Picnic pictures, up at the dam. Edith, quite a little girl, laughing, with her eyes glowing under a broad straw hat, and in the gingham Miss Lotty had made her. Pictures with Papa in them: Papa opening a bottle of olives—Papa going off bicycling with Doctor Smith.

And Edith again—and again—and again: in her bathing suit; in a kitchen apron, with a big spoon; in her kimono, with her drying hair all over her shoulders.

"I think I could bear it better," Phil," Gail said sometimes, "if Edith had had the beauty and sweetness she wanted to—if she hadn't had to plug to Muller's day after day, in her shabby little corduroy dress!"

"But she was happy, Gail. She was one of the happiest girls I ever knew. If she could just have you—"

But this would be too much. Gail must flash from the room, flying, hurrying bowed before the storm.

On a certain March Sunday Phil asked Gail rather timidly if she thought it would be a good day to take their luncheon up to the dam.

Gail looked up with her perplexed little smile, bringing her thoughts home, drawing her thick dark brows together for a second. Then her serious face brightened.

"Oh, Phil, it'd be a marvelous day for it!"

He looked at her as if he had never seen her before, although he gave no sign of finding a change in her. But there was something actually beautiful in Gail's face now, something disciplined, spiritualized, something for which Phil this morning found the word "noble." Somehow he felt a blur over his eyes and a certain dry thickness in his throat, as she began, with all her old readiness and easiness, the familiar preparations.

"Of course you never saw any sandwiches like them, Milesy, because I invented them. When Uncle Sam was only a little boy, he and my sister Ariel . . ."

Stab, stab, stab at her heart. Her voice went on.

"He and my sister Ariel used to ask for 'heavenly' sandwiches, and I used to make them this way—deviled ham, and jelly, and cheese, and anything else I had—all together."

Her mild, sweet-tempered look went kindly to the little boy. Her skillful hands went on slicing the big loaf, trimming crusts, pressing the filled halves of the sandwiches together.

"See if there are any of those paper napkins on that shelf, Phil."

She looked up, caught her brother's gaze.

"What is it, Phil?"

"Nothing!" Phil said.

If the sight of the shining dam, surrounded by feathery spring greenery, hurt her when she and Phil, Sam, Lily, and the children reached it at a glowing noontide—if the sight of it hurt her, she gave no sign. Phil noted that her thick dark eyelashes were wet, and her eyes ringed faintly with umber. Busily, efficiently, she set out about the preparing of the luncheon, she and Lily murmuring as they made coffee and toasted little sausages on sharpened sticks.

Afterwards the children dug and splashed in the creek, and their elders grouped themselves on the shingle, talking of Clippersville affairs and Clippersville folk.

Lily had the peculiar quality, not unusual in women of her alert, keen type, of being able to make even the most casual gossip interesting. What she did not herself know about the old families in town, her mother and grandmother did, and Lily had been listening to Ma and Gram all her life.

Gail listened fascinated to her stories. They were never sensationally told, although they dealt with murders, mysteries, feuds, crimes, life, and death. But there was something in the details, in the general pictures Lily painted about them, that Gail found inexhaustibly entertaining.

"Old Mrs. Peevey," Lily would recount, "always felt that Jim Canna was there the night Belle White was killed—or knew something about it anyway—and she used to go to the courtroom. . . .

"Ma had gone over to get a cup of yeast risin's from Lizzie Gunn . . .

"She says 'Do you s'pose you have a piece of that gray volle in your piece bag, Mis' Wibser?' . . .

"Ma didn't have her clothes off for four nights. She always sets up with the Rogers family when they die. . . .

"And old Mrs. Gansey tore her hair—Gram says she just twisted it like it was so much cotton yarn—and she says, 'It was them boots drug him to his death!' . . .

"They say when Old Man O'Connor was dying he kep' sorter groping on the bed, and Daisy—she was expecting any minute then—Daisy says, 'Do you want your big blackthorn stick, Pa?' 'Yes,' he says, 'I don't know where I'm going, Daze, and I'd just as soon have my stick in my hand!'"

Just now, when the waters of her own soul were running so low, Lily's stream of conversation had its uses; it soothed Gail, it diverted her from too constant a contemplation of the dark current of her own life.

It was all real, all human; Gail was conscious of a little thrill of pleasurable anticipation when Lily got into a narrative vein.

And of course there was always plenty to talk about in Clippersville. There was always a fire, an accident, a marriage or divorce to supply interest and to lead the conversation off into countless collateral and connected lines.

Today there was the astonishing fact of the Wilcox baby to discuss. An eight-pound boy normally born to a normal and happy mother, and putting on an ounce a day—nobody in Clippersville could believe it, least of all the happy parents.

"He acts," Gail said, "like a person in a dream."

"Ma and Gram," said Lily, "went over to see the baby because Gram nursed Mrs. Wilcox's mother for seven years—she was a paralytic—and she says that Mrs. Wilcox was crying, and she ast her would she look at Sterling—what do you know about Sterling for a name!—and she says, 'Shall we call the doctor?' she says. 'He's been lying like that for fifteen minutes!' and Ma says, 'All he's doing is snoring, Louise!' and honestly," said Lily, with a pathetic, serious look at the others—"honestly I thought my grandmother would pass quietly out of the picture, I honestly did!"

And when Gail, who laughed so rarely now, would laugh, Lily would look surprised. But she liked to hear Gail laugh, just the same, and Phil always rewarded his garrulous little wife with a look of gratitude.

Today they also had to discuss, as did all Clippersville, the amazing, the sensational bankruptcy of the Murchison Flour mills. Rumor had been playing with this possibility for some time, but Clippersville was as full of rumors as an army camp, and nobody had taken seriously the idea that the invincible Murchison fortune might fall.

But fallen it had, completely, entirely. The Clippersville mills, the Salinas offices, the New Jersey plant had all passed into other hands, the Chipps' mansion was for sale, and the Chipps were going to live, without a servant, on the Los Gatos ranch and try to make it pay.

It was all too bewildering! Why, the mere name Murchison had been one with which to conjure for a generation, and for years everybody had told everybody else that they had been "coining" money, that they had "scads," that they were "made" of it!

The Murchisons and the Chipps, with their trips to New York and their fashionable affiliations with San Francisco and Burlingame! This was a tumble for them, sure enough. "They say that Arthur Murchison could have been sent to jail!" Clippersville said, not without satisfaction.

"What d'you suppose will happen to Van, Gail?"

"I was thinking. He was working at the New Jersey plant, the last I heard."

"I thought he was abroad?"

"He was—with another boy. Or he was going. Mrs. Chipp told Edith—"

A pause. Gail saw Muller's book department, and the fashionable, white-gloved Mrs. Chipp pausing to patronize grave little Edith in her corduroy dress.

"He'll have to get to work now!" Phil said, with a chuckle.

"Every penny he had came from his stepfather," Gail added, "and if Mr. Murchison really is down and out, Van will have a hard time!"

"Prob'ly the best thing that could happen to him!" Lily opined heartlessly. They talked of other things, but they always came back to the Murchison failure.

The March day grew very hot at the dam; there was no wind. Lily's three little boys after lunch crept into the shade near the grown-ups, and laying whining, panting, and fretting, their faces flushed and wet with heat.

Dreamily, as if absently, Gail began to tell them a story.

"Well, once there were three little boys, just the ages of you and Miles and Danny, Wolfe. Their names were Hammy, Jammy, and Sammy—Hammy, Jammy, and Sammy Formaldehyde."

"They were relations of the immortal family?" asked Phil in the pause, his heart beat quickening. Gail had fallen to dreaming, with her eyes far away.

"They were—" She roused herself, smiled a little. "They were Monica's children."

"Oh, Monica married then?"

"Monica married a sewing-machine agent."

"Oh?" said Phil. A look of peace came into his kind, worried eyes. He settled back. "Go ahead!" he said.

The hot spring sun beat down upon the sapphire waters of the dam, but where the creek widened and spread at its mouth the shade of the redwoods fell, and there was greenness and coolness. Only the dragonflies were moving in the fragrant March world; there was no cloud in the Italian blue of the sky, no splash of fish in the dam.

Up on the surrounding ring of the guardian hills the lilac was still blooming, in pale blue plumes; the manzanita streaked the summits with creamy lines; even the bay trees bore golden tips. A bluejay screamed like a bullet through the air, and was gone. Then silence, and the ripple—ripple—ripple of the water that accentuated the silence once more, and Gail's slow, rich, hesitating voice beginning the new chronicles of the Formaldehydes. But no Formaldehyde story had ever affected Gail before quite as this one did. This was new. This was creation.

The hour marked a change in Gail, and she felt it without realizing just what it meant. She knew, vaguely, that everything was different, on this March Sunday—the sky bluer than she had ever known it before, the buttercups more mysteriously golden, every new leaf, every crystal shadow in the dam or flash of diamonds in the creek penetrated with new meaning, with unearthly light.

Phil, in his shabby old clothes, Lily, already a little clumsy and slow in movement, seemed to thrill and throb with the cosmic pulse of the whole great world, and more than all—more than sky and trees, creek water and blossoming spring—Gail felt herself alive, alive with everything that lived. Gail Lawrence, nearly twenty-seven years old, tawny-headed, blue-eyed lithe, strong, adequate—feeling, remembering, acting, loving and suffering—was living at last!

The miracle of it remained with her as they went home in the late afternoon; stayed with her illuminating, interpreting, changing all the commonplaces of life into glory. Gail felt dazed with felicity; it must not stop, this penetrating, poignant sweetness. She knew it would not stop.

She went through a week of floating, of dreaming.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Little Lights on LIVING

THE MASTER TOUCH

THE chemist estimates the material worth of man about 98 cents—possibly as low as 68 cents since the depression. Some one has said man has enough iron in him to make a few nails, lead enough for a few pencil points and calcium perhaps to whitewash a fence. Man who has flown higher than the clouds, sailed under the sea and called light from Arcturus to light the Century of Progress is worth in material inventory but 98 cents!

It is said the English artist Turner when showing a lady visitor through his studio, paused before one of his inimitable seascapes, which he had recently finished, to catch her first words of praise. He was surprised to have her ask indifferently: "How much is that one worth?" "A thousand dollars," he said. "What, a thousand dollars for just paint and canvas?" she exclaimed. "If you wish just paint and canvas, madame," Turner responded, "I can sell them to you much cheaper than that by the tube and foot from my supply room." What made the difference in price between paint and picture? Just one thing; the artist had put his soul into the sunset reflection on the sea! The supply room paint had not as yet received the master touch.

When man grows to his full stature in culture and character he reflects God, his maker, and when this happens, he, too, becomes, as did the artist's picture reflecting its creator—a matchless creation, beyond price. Man has received the master touch in all creation but ofttimes he fails to measure up to it. Instead of being worth even 98 cents he becomes a heavy liability to society, for it costs the government somewhere near $300 to keep a criminal in jail one year, and only $150, half the sum, to keep a boy in school one year.

Not long ago I read of a judge who was asked to dedicate a new Y. M. C. A. building, costing around $1,000,000. While speaking he said. "If this building is instrumental in saving the character of one boy it will justify the expense." This statement was questioned by one of the judge's friends the next day as being too extravagant. "Not so," responded the judge, "if that boy were yours or mine!"

Like the artist's canvas, the undeveloped years of childhood need the Master Touch in training for culture and character, as each young life is worth not 98 cents but a million to the individual, the home and the country. This should be given by parents before the age of six if fairness be done to the child.

IF

IF, IF, if, one of the smallest words in the English language, is the greatest stumbling block known to man. Some people have built their lives around this principle of "if" and as a consequence they have been uncertain, full of doubt and wavering perplexity, through the years. Doubt is lack of faith. It is a form of worry. Worry is the arch-enemy of mankind. Repeatedly have I heard people of unsettled mind say: "If I were only sure; if I had thus and thus; if I were you; if I could only begin again; if I hadn't done that; if I were young again; if such a thing hadn't happened!"

Usually following an "if" comes its close sequel—regrets. For as the poet has expressed it—"Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these, it might have been." All these "ifs" piled high are not as effective as one definitely planned course of action, taken with a courageous step, a brave risk as to the outcome and a spirit of a good loser, come what may. If one has done his best, angels can do no more. This is where faith begins, for if our faith is worth anything at all, it should strengthen our belief in the promise that "all things work together for good to those who trust in God."

The "if" philosophy has unfitted potential leaders for public service, lives that were meant to be strong builders of the nation, all because they could not hurdle some insignificant but tremendous "if" in their lives.

During the depression, in many homes, some of these "if" nightmares have really come to pass. But, strange to say, we find we are all living, loving and laughing in the same old way in spite of the fact that the bank went under carrying our life's savings and perhaps our next winter's coat. Something has come to us in return, perhaps it is more gratitude in our hearts for what is really left us than we felt before our loss.

When we live on a material plane these "ifs" bother us most like mosquitoes. If we step to a higher intellectual plane they come less often into our minds—when we even toucn the spiritual side of life, they come not at all into our lives, the "ifs" are gone, for we attain a tranquility that passeth human understanding. It is akin to God.

Eradicate the "if" philosophy from your life today, whether you are fifteen years old or fifty years young, and substitute in its place, the peace giving assurance of: "I trust in God and all is well."

Opportunity

No man knows the heights or lowths of his character until the occasion reveals them to him.

Stop Chills and Fever!

Rid Your System of Malaria!

Shivering with chills one moment and burning with fever the next—that's one of the effects of Malaria. Unless checked, the disease will do serious harm to your health. Malaria, a blood infection, calls for two things. First, destroying the infection in the blood. Second, building up the blood to overcome the effects of the disease and to fortify against further attack.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic supplies both these effects. It contains tasteless quinine, which kills the infection in the blood, and iron, which enriches and builds up the blood. Chills and fever soon stop and you are restored to health and comfort. For half a century, Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic has been sure relief for Malaria. It is just as useful, too, as a general tonic for old and young. Pleasant to take and absolutely harmless. Safe to give children. Get a bottle at any drug store. Now two sizes—50c and $1. The $1 size contains 2½ times as much as the 50c size and gives you 25% more for your money.

Nervous, Weak Woman Soon All Right

"I had regular shaking spells from nervousness," writes Mrs. Cora Sanders, of Paragould, Ark. "I was all run-down and cramped at my time until I would have to go to bed. After my first bottle of Cardui, I was better. I kept taking Cardui and soon I was all right. The shaking quit and I did not cramp. I felt worlds better. I gave Cardui to my daughter who was in about the same condition and she was soon all right."

Thousands of women testify Cardui benefited them. If it does not benefit YOU, consult a physician.

Personality

Personality is still the most potent factor in the world.

Quick, Complete Pleasant ELIMINATION

Let's be frank. There's only one way for your body to rid itself of the waste matters that cause acidity, gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts—your intestines must function.

To make them move quickly, pleasantly, completely, without griping. Thousands of physicians recommend Milnesia Wafers. (Dentists recommend Milnesia wafers as an efficient remedy for mouth acidity).

These mint flavored candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly in accordance with the directions on the bottle or tin, then swallowed, they correct acidity, bad breath, flatulence, at their source and at the same time enable quick, complete, pleasant elimination.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48 wafers, at 35c and 60c respectively, or in convenient tins containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately an adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores carry them. Start using these delicious, effective wafers today.

Professional samples sent free to registered physicians or dentists if request is made on professional letter head.

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY

"You come too late—my need for you has gone;
For I have triumphed over time and pain,
And learned of sorrow how to stand alone
And smile and face the world again.
My soul the wine, my heart the broken bread.
You feasted lightly and as lightly went,
And left me here with something in me dead,
My life is empty now and cleansed of grief;
I rise again—the pride of life is strong,
And in the place of love and old belief,
Courage goes marching with a merry song.
Come in, my friend, but do not hope to find
A trace of anything you left behind."
—(Selected)

If there is a bit of gypsy in you and the call of the open road becomes insistent, for sheer majestic beauty and unexcelled scenic effects, we strongly recommend a trip to Shelby County's most pretentious project—Double Oak Mountain Park. The winding roadway will carry you far. The end of the Rustic Trail is well worth following. We thoroughly enjoyed this trip on last Sunday afternoon, and when the leaves begin to bid those tall oak trees "Goodbye", and pastel shades of summer are changed for the golden hues of Autumn, we shall return, and "BY A WATERFALL" attempt to verbally sketch this wonderfully glorious section of Alabama. In the meantime, take a trip and see for yourself just what this group of CCC boys have done to make this spot one of the most "talked about" Federal projects yet attempted.

On last Sunday morning, the Men's Bible Class of the Baptist Church chalked up another victory in the Membership Campaign now being enthusiastically waged by its personnel. From a beginning of 16 members there were present on this occasion 43 members. Judge Wallace expressed his sincere appreciation for the wonderfully cooperative spirit manifested by his class, and several members have been in the office this morning to state, that on next Sunday there will be present the desired goal of 50 members.

E. S. Lyman, Jr., prominent young business man of Montevallo, brightened Saturday's dull moments with a personal call to our little journalistic domain—and we thoroughly enjoyed the "conversational treat". Come again "Fee", we much prefer "chatting" to "writing" about it.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Hill, of Los Angeles, California, were distinguished guests in Columbiana during the past week. Mr. Hill will be happily remembered as one of the most spectacular athletes produced by Shelby County High School, and since leaving his native county, has won world wide recognition in the field of Archery. At the present time, Mr. Hill is making personal appearances throughout the East in connection with the picture "The Last Wilderness", in which his ability as an Archer is featured. While in Columbiana, he appeared before the student body of his Alma Mater and gave an exhibition of Archery, which startled "Young America" of to-day. He will leave for Siberia in January for a stay of two years. While there he will be engaged in making pictures in which his skill as an Archer de luxe will be further exploited by Warner Bros.

Mrs. Hill (Elizabeth Hodges) was a former instructor in Shelby County High School, and very popular thruout the County. Their many friends in Columbiana extended a welcome royal during their brief sojourn here and the good wishes for continued success and happiness followed them as they sped away from our little Main Street in their motor, for their home in California.

Mrs. Minnie Crim, of Longview, Alabama, was a welcomed visitor in the Democrat office last week. We appreciate the many encouraging messages she gave us regarding the reception of the Democrat in her community each week, and the writer is personally grateful for some valuable newspaper clippings which she sent me. They lie close, very close to my heart, for they speak of those olden golden days of my childhood, and my appreciation for them cannot be expressed verbally. I shall treasure them always!

WANTED—Some Fern Cuttings for window boxes. Call at Democrat office!

Mims Roberts left Columbiana Monday morning to accept a Government position with the Department of Interior. Mr. Roberts is a finished draftsman and has had years of experience in his line of work. He will be stationed in the office located in Birmingham for the present, after which he will be assigned to some of the Federal Projects requiring expert engineering ability and draftsmanshiv. His many friends throughout the county will be delighted to learn of this promotion to Mr. Roberts in his chosen avocation.

Miss Myrtle Miles was called to Montgomery on Monday and placed in charge of the Writer's project sponsored by the Federal Government. This type of work peculiarly suits Miss Miles as her journalistic ability has been recognized by the leading newspapers in the North and South where, for a number of years, she was employed as a feature writer.

A Chest Clinic was held by the Health Department on Monday and Tuesday of this week. A number of applicants were present to take the Tubercular test. The Clinics were held in Columbiana and in Montevallo.

The first game of the Football season for Shelby County High School was unfortunately scheduled with a team which far out played the boys from Columbiana. Lineville, the opposing aggregation, came very near copping the state championship last season, and losing several of the best players on Shelby County High School's team this year was rather "tough" on the eligible players in pitting their strength against such a well-oiled machine as the Lineville team proved to be. However, we hear you fought a good fight—and that's something. After all, it is "HOW YOU PLAYED THE GAME" that counts. Better luck next time, and here's hoping that when football schedules are being arranged, teams of equal strength can be pitted against each other and in this way, foster good sportsmanship so necessary on the Athletic field. In other words, it is no fun to know you are "licked" before the first kick-off occurs. It rather knocks the zip and pep out of a fellow not only in football but in all lines of endeavor. The next game of the season will be played in Sylacauga on Friday afternoon.

Grady Cleveland, right hand man of Col. Page Bunker of the Forestry Department, Montgomery, spent a few hours in Columbiana on Monday, and was cordially welcomed in the Democrat office. Mr. Cleveland spoke enthusiastically over the contemplated plans for Double Oak Mountain Park, and urges all citizens to acquaint themselves with this project which, when completed, will be one of the most beautiful parks in the South. Options are now being obtained for 10,000 acres of land necessary to obtain this Park site for Shelby County. A letter to your Congressman and the concerted action on the part of Civic Clubs will be a large factor in swinging this deal.

P. C. Wilson, of Montevallo, spent a few hours in Columbiana on Monday. We acknowledge with pleasure a personal call to our little printing establishment.

When OPPORTUNITY comes aknocking at your door, it will pay you to "let him in". Watch the Democrat next week for further information.

Mrs. John Batson (Elizabeth Smith), of Bessemer, was in Columbiana on Monday. One of the prettiest brides of the season, and her many friends were delighted to see her. She is the guest of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. T. O. Smith in Wilsonville.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Hoynes (Katherine Parker) announce the arrival of a son. Mr. and Mrs. Hoynes are now residing in Indianapolis, Indiana.

Mrs. Rosa Teague will leave this week for an extended visit to her son, William Teague, in Kingsport, Tenn.

Mr. G. T. Phillips, of Siluria, was greeting his many friends in Columbiana on Tuesday. We acknowledge a happy hour of chatter in the office with this busy man, who is leaving for Washington and Boston on the 15th to transact business personal, and for the Buck Creek Cotton Mills of which he is Manager.

Clay Lester and Mrs. Dottie Wiegand, of Birmingham, were visitors in the Democrat office on Tuesday.

Jimmy Gorman, prominent merchant of Vincent, of the firm of Gorman Bros., was in Columbiana on Tuesday, and stated that Vincent enjoyed the most prosperous Sales Day ever promoted in this vicinity last month. This town with its progressive spirit and energetic Civic Club recently organized, are planning to continue these Community Days each month. Look for Bargain Days on October 11 and 12.

The Shelby County Milling Company of which B. B. Mooney is Manager, is steadily forging to the front, and adequately meeting a long felt demand for an enterprise of this kind in Columbiana. You can now go by and watch their own mill grind out a delectable meal for "Bonnie" or "Bessie" Cow, or Piggy, or Chick-a-dee——and it won't be long now before Old Fido can come in and call for his particular menu—mixed and crushed and ground in the correct proportions. Go by and call on Mr. Mooney today and give him your order. We personally guarantee you that he will be equal to the occasion. and the animals and poultry around the barnyard will, in their own way, sing a happier song on account of your visit to this up-to-the-minute Milling Company's establishment.

Do not fail to visit the Columbiana Leader during this week and take advantage of the gigantic sale now going on in every department of this dependable store. Max Lefkovits has long been identified with the Eastern markets and he knows WHEN to buy and HOW. See the large stock of goods he has purchased from a Chicago Manufacturing Company and profit by his years of experience. The store will be closed all day on Monday, October 7th.

Hectic Days Sleepless Nights

Miss Currier relieved of nervous days and sleepless nights.

IF YOU are nervous today, you probably will not sleep well tonight. If you don't sleep well tonight, you will probably be nervous tomorrow.
Don't allow yourself to become nervous. Take Dr. Miles Nervine. It will relax your tense nerves and let you get a good night's sleep.
Irritability, Restlessness, Sleeplessness, often lead to Nervous Headache, Nervous Indigestion, Hysteria—sometimes to a nervous breakdown and organic trouble.
Some of the people, whose letters are printed below, were as nervous as you are—possibly more so—yet they have found relief.

Christene Lanier finds Nervine best nerve medicine she ever used.

Three years ago I was so nervous I could not bear to go out in company and could not sleep nights. A friend recommended Dr. Miles Nervine. I now enjoy myself thoroughly and sleep every night. Miss Juliette Currier, New Market, N. H.

I have used Dr. Miles Nervine in liquid form and find it the best medicine for the nerves I have ever used.
Christene Lanier, Middleton, Tennessee

Miss Redman takes Dr. Miles Nervine whenever she feels restless.

Whenever I have over-indulged and feel restless I take one or two Nervine Tablets just before I retire. In the morning when I awake I feel like a new person and can go about my work as usual. Dr. Miles Nervine Tablets quiet your nerves, brace you up and are the simplest, most convenient tablets to take I have ever found.
Miss Grace Redmann, St. James, Minn.

Mr. Redding His family appreciate his improved disposition.

Before using your Nervine I was very nervous and irritable. Since I have started to take it I feel so much better that my family notice the difference. I still take it from time to time and the good result is wonderful. J. H. Redding, 1027 18th Ave., Rock Island, Ill.

Make Jabot Solve "Weighty" Problems

PATTERN 9339

Our stylist had leisure hours in mind when she designed this graceful afternoon frock for the woman of larger proportions. The soft jabot cascades down the bodice in graceful folds, concealing those extra pounds and curves! The bodice gathers in front to a double-pointed yoke, another slenderizing feature with its diagonal lines. Medium-length sleeves puff, then hug the forearm below the elbow. Crepe is a perfect medium for this pattern, but in satin you'd have an all-season "best dress." Do choose sparkling novel buttons and buckle.

Pattern 9339 may be ordered only in sizes, 16, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 4 yards 39 inch fabric. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Who Is the Man?

Not much Ethiopian news. You could hardly expect it with our own white-black prize-ring war competing. Whatever happens, Ethiopian tribesmen will benefit. The emperor, Haile Selassie, is working on reforms, doing away with abuses that Mussolini pointed out and promised to cure.

Arthur Brisbane

He opened a substantial concrete jail outside of Addis Ababa to replace the old jail. There, according to Mr. von Wiegand's cablegram to Universal Service, "live prisoners sometimes remained chained to those who had died for days."

Newspapers in Pennsylvania, 265 of them, have celebrated "press prestige" this week. Governor Earle tells the editors, presumably shivering with delight and surprise, about "the important part that newspapers play in the lives of our people." It is as important as the part played by the people's eyes and ears, and might be taken for granted by now.

Napoleon knew about it when he said that, if he allowed freedom of the press, his power would not last six weeks. Stalin, Hitler and Mussolini could make speeches about it.

The newspaper is a mirror in which the public sees itself, the newspaper's owner and the civilization of the moment. Interesting reflections of that civilization may appear soon in dispatches from Ethiopia and from London in case Mussolini should send his first 500 airplanes in the direction of Buckingham palace, the house of commons, Downing street and the Bank of England, with the message: "What do you think of explosive and mustard gas sanctions?"

The pathetic thing in journalism, as in politics, is the lack of names that the people know. Millions of Americans read newspapers with no faintest conception as to the character of the man whose newspaper they read. It might be called "anonymous nonentity." There are exceptions.

The most important and influential newspaper by far, in proportion to circulation, is the so-called "country newspaper," smaller dailies and weeklies.

Their readers know who runs them, and those readers, not living in city apartments, with a can opener, buy everything from the paint on the roof to the cement in the cellar floor, from the piano and radio in the sitting room to the car in the garage.

Berlin says the Nazi party plans, forcibly, to buy out all Jewish firms and businesses, suggesting that "ambitious Aryan business men will get great bargains." One idea is to allow "Aryan" employees to take over Jewish businesses with government backing. They might take it over, but what about running it? Anybody may buy a business; making it pay is another job.

The Republican committee will have "an important meeting" now, a really big, first-class, "bang-up" meeting in December, to put "pep" into the 1936 campaign.

The question is, "Who is your man?"

Americans want to yell for somebody.

They have not been trained to yell for an idea.

Who is your man? What is his name?

Amusing situation in Europe: England sends her gigantic fleet to the Mediterranean, heaviest dreadnaughts, submarines, airships; parks them around the rock of Gibraltar and at the entrance of the Suez canal; sends additional soldiers to the Island of Malta.

Mussolini puts his convenient island, off the coast of Greece, in a state of siege, with submarines, airplanes, cutting the Mediterranean in two, isolating the big English fleet in the western end.

Then England, having shown an ardent desire to fight Italy, sends official word that she really hadn't any war with Italy in mind, her feelings were hurt by the Italian newspapers. That is why she sent her fleet.

DeWolf Hopper is dead at seventy-seven, too soon. He worked to the last, talked over the radio in the afternoon, and was dead at 6:30 next morning. He should find a good seat reserved for him in the entertainment that lasts forever, in a better world. He spent his life working to make people smile and forget their sorrows.

At Council Bluffs, Iowa, John Slattery, seventy-one, and at present "on relief," sits in his one-room "shack," covered with tar paper, wondering what he will do this winter with twin daughters, that his twenty-four-year-old wife added to the earth's population ten days ago. He married her when she was seventeen and he sixty-four.

Dull Effort

Accent Is on Costume Suit for Fall

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SO MANY women do not think they can wear suits, because, unless one be slim and svelte, a blouse and skirt are apt to prove a problem at the waistline. To such "cheerio" is the message for designers of vision and inventive genius have taken the matter to heart and have come to the rescue of despairing ones. They have surmounted the difficulty via that which they are pleased to title in fashion's vocabulary as the "costume suit." Needless to say the new costume suits carry the promise of a foremost vogue, autumn and winter through, seeing that they are proving as effective as a strict reducing diet in slenderizing the figure.

The idea is to top a slim frock of some one or other of the incomparably handsome wools or wools-and-silk, such as are glorifying the current fabric showings, with a varied length coat to match. The fact that intriguing fur trimmings are playing such an important role in present-day styling adds to the glamor and prestige of these voguish costumes.

In tuning the theme of these slenderizing suit effects to the individuality of the wearer, much depends upon the coat to "turn the trick." The accompanying illustration of a trio of molds recently shown by style creators of the Chicago wholesale market district demonstrate the point better than words can tell.

If your ambition is to arrive at slimness and height, the costume to the left in the picture will help you make dreams come true. The slightly full-below-the-elbow sleeves, with just the right length to the coat, combined with fitted bodice lines and slender hipline trend to accentuate a slenderized silhouette. The simple gored lines of the skirt also trends to the straight slim look.

The bright metal touch which is so dramatically enhancing the new fashions is present in the double collar and pointed vestee front. The collar is of black lynx as is the banding at the bottom of the coat.

For the tall stately woman or the slim older woman who aspires to added slimness, an answer to her longings is given in the smart restaurant costume as pictured in the center of the group. It reflects influence of the Italian renaissance especially in the grandiose royal purple velvet which fashions it. The rich and beautiful reds, purples and greens of early Italian painters are the featured kind this season. Fitted basque with snug little waistline, trimly fitting hips and flaring-below-the-knees skirt are all flattering. The glaringly new details, however, are a youthful peplum flare of the jacket together with full sleeves that are fitted in at the wrist to be very flattering to the hands. The pillow muff which she carries is also significant, for it has been quite some time since this type of muff was in fashion. The fur is a shaded krimmer and its manner of bordering the edges emphasizes a high-style trimming note.

From Russia comes the suggestion for the fitted town suit shown to the right. It registers as very "young" for its flared tunic line a la Russe makes it youthful. It is flattering to either the tall or short slim figure, depending upon the length of the coat. Mahogany rush a new rich tone not too reddish, is the color of the cloth. Tailored bandings of beige krimmer make this costume suit look all the more Russian. The frock underneath, however, is quite American with its simple tailored lines and amusing pockets and novel wooden buttons.

WITH A HOOD

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's a youthful and ultra chic evening wrap. Hoods and head coverings are still going strong in the mode. This one is a red-riding hood type, one that Gladys Swarthout, of opera fame, has selected as part of her wardrobe of evening wraps. It is of brown velveteen and is worn over a powder blue silk sheer gown which has skirt fullness and the new tailored top. It would be handsome in black velvet—why not for your party wrap this winter?

PLEATS DOMINATE STYLES FOR FALL

They've taken a pleat in fashion this fall, and the results are both numerous and startling.

Pleats turn up at the most unexpected places in the new fall frocks, cropping out anywhere from skirt to neckline.

Pleated sleeves are among the newest wrinkles of the mode, these being large and loose in the new manner, drawn into a cuff at the wrist. They're effective in black chiffon, combined with a black crepe dinner gown.

Pleated blouses, in soft, sheer fabrics, are drawing ecstatic "ah's" and "oh's" from shoppers, who are buying them for wear with the new velvet cocktail suits.

Some of the newest evening gowns are all pleats, from neck to hem, done in soft, slinky fabrics that manage to outline the figure in a most seductive manner, keeping their classic lines as well.

Intriguing Styles in New Handbags for Fall Season

Bags are shown this season in new and intriguing leathers and combinations, such as frogback antelope (a pebbled suede), puffed and quilted calf, saddle leather, alligator, pigskin and ostrich, all often combined with patent leather.

Top handles are new and important. Bags are roomy and soft, with fewer rigid frames; square and oblong shapes are the most popular, and there are many new tricks in fasteners and monograms.

The Schiaparelli handbag, fastened with gilt padlock and key, is the tops for the miser girl, guaranteed pickpocket proof. Metal rimmed keyholes also are used, as are metal buttonholes.

The "mad-money" bag, of suede, has an outside change purse trimmed with a small gold coin on a gilt chain.

Lesson for October 6

ISAIAH PORTRAYING THE SUFFERING SERVANT

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 53:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. Isaiah 53:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Best Promise.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Isaiah Foretells Jesus' Coming.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Our Salvation Cost.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Suffering Savior.

The prophecy of Isaiah is the grand center of the Old Testament. It pictures the Servant of Jehovah with great wisdom gloriously executing the divine purpose of redemption at the cost of great suffering.

I. The Servant's Triumph (Is. 52 13-15). The Servant here means the coming Messiah (42:1).

1. His wisdom (v. 13). He will deal prudently, for his name is Counsellor (9:6). He was filled with the spirit of wisdom and understanding (11:2).

2. He shall be exalted and extolled (v. 13). Being the mighty God, even Immanuel, Jehovah has highly exalted him (Phil. 2:9).

3. The appearance of the Servant (v. 14). Because of his marred visage the Jews, who looked for outward signs of royalty and worldly splendor were not attracted to him.

4. The issue of his ministry (v. 15) In his sprinkling of many nations he is revealed as the great High Priest sprinkling the nations with his blood and cleansing them from their sins.

II. The Servant Despised and Rejected (53:1-3).

1. The unbelief of the Jews (v. 1) They despised the words of the prophet and failed to recognize the hand of the Lord in the miracles he wrought.

2. The origin of the Servant (v. 2) He sprang out of a stump of Judiasm The sad condition of the people at that time is expressed by "dry corn." He came among his own and they apprehended him not.

3. A man of sorrows (v. 3). As the Sin-bearer of the world he suffered untold sorrows. The primary cause of his grief was their contemptuous rejection of him.

III. The Vicarious Suffering of the Servant (53:4-6).

1. His griefs and sorrows were ours Though innocent, he was loaded down with disease and pain; not his, but ours. This awful suffering was looked upon by the world as occasioned by sin

2. He was beaten for us (v. 5) That which was our due was meted out to him. Notice the four significant words; "wounded," "bruised." "despised," "stripes." The word "our" shows that his sufferings were vicarious. The full meaning of the cross is comprehended in these words.

3. The reason (v. 6). All humanity, Jews and Gentiles, had gone astray. God had laid on him the iniquity of us all.

IV. The Death of the Servant (53:7-9).

1. His strange silence (v. 7). He went as a lamb to the slaughter. How unlike men who, when wrongfully condemned, make a great ado.

2. Unconcern of contemporaries (v 8). Though dying instead of the wicked people, they failed to discern that his suffering was in their stead

3. Buried with the wicked and the rich. This was fulfilled in the crucifixion between two thieves, and burial in Joseph's tomb.

V. The Servant's Ultimate Victory (vv. 10-12).

1. His suffering expressed the divine will (v. 10). The Lord himself laid this burden upon Christ. He was delivered according to the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God.

2. A spiritual progeny resulted from his death (v. 10). Christ declared. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone." The fundamental law of the universe, which is life out of death, found supreme expression in Christ's death on the cross.

3. Through death shall come the realization of his fondest hope (v. 11). "He shall see the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied."

4. The divine reward (v. 12). The divine Conqueror shall share the spoils of victory which by a strong arm were secured. Though he took the place of a sinner, it was for the purpose of bearing the sins of many and making intercession for the transgressor.

VI. The Servant's Suffering Historically Fulfilled (John 19:17-37).

When Jesus of Nazareth went forth bearing his cross to Golgotha, where they crucified him, the prediction of Isaiah was historically realized.

Thought

In the end, thought rules the world. There are times when impulses and passions are more powerful, but they soon expend themselves; while mind, acting constantly, is ever ready to drive them back and work when their energy is exhausted.

Influence

The ministry of personal influence is something very wonderful. Without being conscious of it, we are always impressing others by this strange power

Guard Against Fleas

Fleas will breed in carpets, cracks in the floor or any other suitable place where the eggs may drop. It takes only 17 days from the time an egg is laid to produce a flea in good biting condition. The insects are renowned in scientific circles as the carrier of many diseases. The dog flea sometimes carries eggs of a tapeworm, which when swallowed causes worms in dogs. Occasionally tapeworms in children are caused by dog fleas accidentally getting into the mouths of the children.

To guard against flea infestation of dwellings animal pets should be frequently dusted with any insect powder made from dried pyrethrum flowers. This is harmless to animals and human beings. If a house becomes infested the rugs, cracks in floor and other likely breeding places should be sprayed thoroughly with any of the liquid spray insecticides.

HEALTH AND GOOD LOOKS DEPEND ON HOW YOU STAND

There's beauty in good posture, declares Jeanette Eaton in the Parents' Magazine, and gives the following three reasons why the average person stands badly. First, comes the possibility of a bodily weakness. Second, part of the clothing may be uncomfortable or badly adjusted. Third, the individual is indifferent to her stoop.

It is one thing to recognize a fault and another to do something about it. Here follow a few practical "don'ts" if we would acquire good posture for ourselves or for our children.

Don't wear high heels when working or walking any distance.

Don't go upstairs clumping or stooping but hold the spine just as straight as you can.

Don't sit with legs crossed—this position puts a great strain on the muscles of back and hips.

Don't go without abdominal support unless you are taking a great deal of exercise.

Don't neglect to supply the right table, chairs and light for yourself and for your boys and girls who have homework to do—and see that their school does it, too.

As for the "dos"—here they are: Hold your head well, chin up.

Try a little abdominal discipline.

Breathe deeply and often.

Take exercise, not necessarily a daily dozen at a given period but every now and again during the day whenever it is possible to do so.

VINCENT NEWS

Vincent's first cooperative sales day proves to be a success. Crowds gathered Saturday, September 28th to take advantage of the bargains offered by the Vincent Merchants. The guinea which was turned loose by Mayor Elliott on the depot at 2:30 P. M. was caught and the dollar won by Shellie Bowden.

Prizes were given to lucky ticket holders. Coach Bradley held the lucky ticket that won him five silver dollars. Mr. Curtis Fleming won the wrist watch given by Florey Drug Co. Many other useful prizes were given away at this time.

Be on hand for another such day October 12th.

Mr. Charlie Montgomery, of Abilene, Texas, spent last week visiting relatives here.

Miss Alyce Harris visited in Birmingham last week.

Mrs. J. K. Pearson had as her week-end guests, Mrs. Horace Pearson and Miss Irene Pearson, of Birmingham.

The Vincent Civic Club held its regular bi-monthly meeting in the Home Ec. Dept. of the High School Friday evening. The Methodist Missionary Society was hostess on this occasion.

The Home Ec. Club of Vincent High School (F. H. A.) met Sep. 18th for the purpose of electing officers for the year. The following officers were elected: Gertrude Conrad, President; Mildred Clinkscales, Vice-President; Ada Sue Gorman, Secretary; and critic, Fay Fancher. All of the members are enthusiastic and planning to do big things for the home ec. dept. This year. Plans are being made for the initiation for the first degree. Last Monday the F. H. A. and F. F. A. Clubs made a trip to the Fair in Birmingham. Every girl was required to take notes on everything she saw in the agricultural building and everything pertaining to home economics which was of special interests and importance. Everyone had a very nice time and we offer our thanks to Mr. Hunt, Mr. Horton and Miss Patterson. We also wish to thank Mr. Nivins for carrying us.

ROADS.

One road is a hill road,
Walking up the sky
I've no fear of hard roads
Straight, stern, high.

One road is a curved road,
One is wide and low.
Dearest, does it matter
Where roads go?

If you walk beside me.
Don't you understand?
Any road will lead us
T oa promised Land?

Valley, hill, or plain paths
Running near and far.
Heaven isn't one place—
It is where YOU are.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

THE STATE OF ALABAMA,
SHELBY COUNTY.

In Circuit Court, In Equity.

Rosalea Clark, Complainant, vs. Herman Clark, Respondent.

In this cause it being made to appear to the Register by affidavit of Paul O. Luck, Solicitor for Complainant, that the Defendant is a non-resident of Alabama, and further that in the belief of said affiant, the Defendant is of the age of twenty-one years; it is therefore ordered by the Register that publication be made in The Shelby County Democrat, a newspaper published in Columbiana, Alabama, once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring him, the said Herman Clark, to plead, answer or demur to the Bill of Complaint in this cause by the 3rd day of November, 1935, or in thirty days thereafter a decree Pro Confesso may be taken against him.

Done at office in Columbiana, Alabama, this the 2nd day of October, 1935. FRANK HEAD, 10-3-4t. Register.

"HOW TO KEEP HUSBANDS HAPPY".

The rules:

1. If you marry him—love him.
2. If he is sad—cheer him.
3. If he is talkative—listen to him.
4. If he is jealous—cure him.
5. If he cares naught for pleasure—coax him.
6. If he favors society—accompany him.
7. If he desires a kiss—give it to him.
8. If these above rules do not work—KILL HIM.

In fact, to save time and trouble, it might come first.

EXPLANATION.

You wonder why my songs are not of you—
These lilting things I weave to moons and men,
The dust from dreams long gathered, and the new White radiance on romance that has been.
"For if you love me only as you say,
Why do you find your themes so far away?"

Ah, dearest dear, it is because of this:
Mere poets sing of things that are not so—
Of fragileness, the briefness of a kiss.
Ours is the deathless thing for which we know
The world well lost or haply thrown away!
I feel, most deeply what I CANNOT say!

—(F. B. M.)

WISDOM.

I gave my heart to the eagle—a daring, death-tempting token,
I knew I would find it among the rocks—bleeding and broken.

I knew, though, the eagle would bear it to circle the heart of the sun,
And into the highest heavens—before he was done.

I gave my heart to the eagle—one swift magnificent flight—
Nor shall I regret certain darkness—remembering LIGHT.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

The Courthouse on Monday morning was the center of various activities. A regular term of the County Court was in session, Judge Len C. Walker, presiding. The Board of Revenue held its regular monthly meeting, President John H. Lyon in charge of the heavy business program scheduled. Superintendent J. L. Appleton's office was swamped with teachers from all sections of the County who were present to attend the first Teacher's Institute of the season. Pens and pencils were busily poised in the hands of officials. License tags and driver's licenses were being issued in the Probate office. L. C. Abbott was accurately checking his Tax Collections. Luther Fowler was seen busily engaged in his new official capacity of Tax Assessor, and apparently quite "at home" with facts and figures involved. Nina Fay Rinehart, secretary in the Register's office, was speedily tapping the typewriter keys for permanent recording. Henry Naish, issuing checks! Mrs. Gertrude Taylor, calm and competent as per usual, discharging the many duties she attends to daily in the Circuit Clerk's office. Everybody busy! Everybody happy!

Judge Wales W. Wallace and Harold Harlin left Columbiana Monday morning for the Clay County Court now in session in Ashland. The next term of the Shelby County Circuit Court will be held in November.

Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael ruled on Friday that a County governing body could not use money from the gasoline tax fund for an appropriation to a County Department of Public Welfare provided for under the Walton act of the 1935 Legislature.

The Attorney General said that a provision under which Counties could use tax money with which to match Federal funds, passed last January, expired on October 1st.

Sylacauga Defeats Shelby High, 26-13

Shelby County High School suffered its second defeat of the football season to Sylacauga High School last Friday by the score of 26 to 13.

Frequent penalties marred the good play of the two squads. Both teams played well and more scoring would have been made had the penalizing been less frequent. Shelby High regained the ball from Sylacauga in the latter stages of the first quarter and made a steady march to score the first touchdown of the game. Coach Hosmer's men literally passed the Sylacauga boys to death in the first quarter. However, the good line play of the Sylacauga offense enabled them to score two touchdowns in the second quarter. Sylacauga continued the line-plunging and end-running to score touchdowns in the third and fourth quarters while Shelby High was pushing over its last marker in the third quarter.

The offensive play of Sylacauga was the highlight of the game.

Among the outstanding players for Shelby High, were Wales Wallace, Frank Martin and Ernest Davis in the backfield; Bill Riddle, Olin Peoples and Dave Stone in the line.

Shelby County High opens its home stand with Maplesville High School, Friday, Oct. 11th. Rumors are that Shelby High's jinx will be broken.

VINCENT'S SECOND SALE DAYS SET FOR OCTOBER 11 AND 12

VINCENT, Ala.—Alert and progressive merchants of Vincent will stage their second community-wide Sale Days on next Friday and Saturday, October 11 and 12.

Profiting by a phenomenal success last month, when the first bargain days were held in Vincent, the following merchants again offer, from their respective stores, unforgettable bargains: McGraw Brothers, Gorman Brothers, Montgomery's Cafe, W. I. Norris, C. E. White, E. E. Florey & Co., J. D. Masters, Sharbutt & Florey, J. G. Harris & Son, Florey Drug Co., Lackey & Murphy, and A. A. Gorman. They have placed on sale their complete stock of merchandise at prices which assure you that a visit on these days to Vincent will be a profitable one.

An interesting and entertaining program has been arranged for the gala occasion, and every man, woman and child has received a cordial invitation to spend the day in Vincent and enjoy the savings you will find on the many attractive features arranged, financially speaking and from a recreational standpoint, you will be royally entertained. Dr. Card, a Sleight of Hand artist, will give a free exhibition on the street at 3:45 p. m., Saturday. There will also be a drawing of many valuable prizes which have been donated by the various merchants, from a centrally located box at 4:15 p. m., Saturday. Save your tickets for they are your chances to win the $2.50 cash prize and numerous other prizes of useful merchandise offered.

Several guinas will be turned loose, and if you are quick and nimble enough to catch one of these elusive birds, you will win, in addition to the guina, 50 cents in cash! So, get ready for the Guina Marathon!

One general Community Sale Week will be set aside each month in Vincent until the Christmas. Watch for these decidedly unique occasions.

County Singing Class Will Meet October 13

The regular monthly session of the Shelby County Singers will meet at the Bethel Church on next Sunday p. m., October 13th at 2:00 o'clock, instead of the 3rd Sunday as before. All singers and lovers of music are invited to attend. (Signed)

Chelsea Fair Will Not Be Held This Year

CHELSEA, Ala. — The Democrat has been asked to announce that there will not be any fair at Chelsea this year on account of poor crops, together with other developments.

PEOPLE OF COUNTY MUST COOPERATE TO GET PROJECTS

A challenging call to the spirit of cooperation for which Shelby County has long been famous, is now being made in order to obtain the pretentious projects, and huge building program contemplated by the Federal Government in improving and further developing Oak Mountain Park situated in Shelby County.

The magnitude of the proposed project, and its tremendous value to Shelby County is already known to citizens comprising this district. However, a few points of advantage to us, should the project be approved, consist of an increase in land values adjoining this property which will more than off set the loss in ad valorem taxes. The reclamation of this wild land, and its development into its proper usefulness, and moving the farm families to more fertile regions, will improve the entire economic structure.

The social aspects, and recreational advantages in which Shelby County is so sadly lacking, will be of inestimable value. Improvement of this territory in making it accessible to tourists, will induce many visitors to come to Shelby Couny. The project, if carried to completion, will furnish employment for local people during the construction period of the many proposed improvements, and will afford a lucrative maintenance in the operation of same when completed.

It has been suggested that citizens, civic clubs, and all county organizations unite in their efforts to swing this important deal for Shelby County.

Write your Congressmen and influential friends and politicians in Washington, and let's land this recreation park which will assure permanent development for this section of our county.

Blue Ribbon Health Programs Introduced

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—An important feature of many Alabama school programs this year is expected to be the introduction or continuance of Blue Ribbon Health programs, which already has been successful in schools throughout the State.

The Blue Ribbon program originated several years ago in Rutherford County, Tennessee, and met with such outstanding success that it was adopted soon in other Tennessee counties and the Alabama State Health Department has recommended its adoption in this State.

Several hundred Blue Ribbon health buttons were awarded last year, and wide interest was shown in inter-school contests. In order to win a Blue Ribbon button, a child has to make satisfactory progress, conduct himself properly in class, be free of remedial defects and protected against typhoid, smallpox, and diphtheria.

"Every child should be proud of his or her health club button" said Dr. J. N. Baker, Alabama's popular State Health Officer. "It is an encouraging sign when the child takes pride in having a sound body, and with a sound body he or she can 'shine' in class work. Many children may make slow or no progress in their classes because of some defect that may be easily corrected."

Parent-Teacher Associations are co-operating in the movement in many counties, and the campaigns are under the direction of the various county health units. In Blount County, for instance, Dr. S. D. Sturkie, Health Officer, reported that 547 children were examined in schools entering the contest last year, and an even better record is expected this session.

EXAMS TO BE HELD FOR POSTMASTER JOB AT CHELSEA

Receipt of applications to close on Friday, October 18th, 1935.

The date for assembling of competitors will be stated in the admission cards which will be mailed to applicants after the close of receipt of applications.

The United States Civil Service Commission has announced an examination, as a result of which it is expected to make certification to fill a contemplated vacancy in the position of fourth class postmaster at Chelsea, Alabama, and other vacancies as they may occur at that office, unless it shall be decided in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement. The examination will be held at Bessemer, Alabama. The compensation of the postmaster at this office was $598.00 for the last fiscal year.

Applicants must have reached their twenty-first birthday but not their sixty-fifth birthday on the date of the close of receipt of applications.

Applicants must reside within the territory supplied by the post office for which the examination is announced.

Application blanks, Form 9, and full information concerning the requirements of the examination can be secured from the postmaster at the place of vacancy or from the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

Applications must be properly executed and on file with the Commission at Washington, D. C., prior to the hour of closing business on the date specified at the head of this announcement.

HOW BANKS AIDED PROGRESS OF U. S.

OMAHA, Nebr.—Privately owned banking, despite its faults, has served America well, William A. Irwin, Professor of Economics, Washburn College, Topeka, Kansas, declared in a recent address here on "Banking in a Changing World."

"Under the leadership of individuals banking has helped to bring this country to a foremost place in economic development among the nations of the world," he said. "The small community has been developed by the individual bank. The frontiers of America have been pushed forward by the help and counsel of the individual banker. The shocks of wars and depressions in a century and a half have been withstood with the assistance of the individual banker.

Change May Be Necessary

"It may be that we have reached a tide in the affairs of America when new methods are needed. It may be that we have come to a point where the individual should be submerged for 'the greatest good of the greatest number.'

"It may even be that complete centralization of the banking system has become an economic necessity in our complicated social life. But the banker ought to be satisfied that these things are so before he should give up his fight for the system we have known. We came to greatness under that kind of banking; we should not give it up without unmistakable proof of the absolute necessity of such a change."

The American Pattern

Professor Irwin said that the proposal which has been advanced for coordinating banking operations in the national interest under "a 'Supreme Court' for banking is typically American and ought to have the most serious consideration of those elements which are clamoring for political control, which is typically un-American." It is not wise, he said, to oppose changes as such, but that bankers should "see to it that change, if and when it does come, shall preserve all that is good in the past and stick as closely as possible to the American pattern of things."

Banking is properly a conservative profession, he pointed out, and should cling to practices and principles of banking that are, and always have been fundamentally sound.

"It is to its credit that so large a group of its members never faltered, even in boom times, in their allegiance to those sound principles," he declared. "We probably owe our salvation from chaos to that fact."

MODERN SANITARY FACILITIES NEEDED FOR RURAL AREAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Need for adequate sanitary facilities in the rural areas was stressed to-day by Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer, who said that much illness could be avoided and many deaths prevented by a little regard for environmental sanitation.

The communicable diseases which are influenced largely by sanitary measures, Dr. Baker said, are typhoid, dysentery, hookworm, typhus, malaria, dengue, tuberculosis, diptheria, septic sore throat, and scarlet fever. Some of these, however, such as diptheria and scarlet fever may be contracted despite sanitary measures which can be taken.

"Typhoid fever and dysentery are often referred to as filth-borne diseases," the Health Officer stated. "Water, milk, food, flies and human carriers may transmit typhoid fever from one person to another. Dysentery may be spread in the same way as typhoid with the exception of milk.

"Flies coming in contact with improperly protected body wastes are often the means of transmitting typhoid and dysentery.

"To aid in the control of these diseases, typhoid and dysentery, it is, therefore, necessary to take all precautionary measures possible to insure water free from pollution, milk and food free from contamination and proper disposal of the body wastes or sewage, and fly control."

Hookworm also is controlled by proper disposal of human wastes, while proper screening will cut down the prevalence of malaria, dengue and yellow fever, as well as those diseases carried by flies. Diseases that may be transmitted by contaminated milk include tuberculosis, septic sore throat, scarlet fever and diphtheria. Cows and dairies should be kept under good sanitary conditions and the cows tested at regular intervals for tuberculosis, although bovine tuberculosis is not as serious a health problem in Alabama as it is in certain other portions of the United States.

SCHOOL CHILDREN TO BE EXAMINED FOR HOOKWORMS

This survey is to be made on every school child in the county. If teachers of the schools have any reason why their schools should not be visited on the date set, kindly notify the Shelby County Health Department at once. The following schedule will be followed as closely as possible but in any instance will not vary more than a day or two unless weather interferes. The schools which had a summer round-up will have a "check-up" on the same date as the hookworm survey.

Heart Drifts

BY THIS SINGING FIRE.

I have read poetry all this long day;
This lovely day of softly dripping rain;
When summer, like a cat replete and gray,
Is slipping off, and the year's gone again.
And reading, I have found all has been said—
Love is a moaning after something dead,
Love is a citidel, love is a bower,
Love is a circling bird, an ivory tower,
A broken trust, a poet's pretty lyre—
All this—but it is still most exquisite
When UNEXPRESSED, so, dearest, I would sit
In silence with you by this singing fire.
So light the candles on the shelf above you
And throw the book away—you know I love you!

NIGHT.

"Length'ing shadows, after sun;
Stillness, twilight-work day done.
Pale gold moon 'mid star alight
Peace, contentment, calmness——
NIGHT."

FACETS OF THE FALL.

The crystal of the year has turned once more;
The facets of the fall reflect the rays
Of a southward sun. The winter-presient days,
Like prisms, break the brittle light, whose store
Of hues is scattered on the riotous breeze
Until the very streams run red and gold
With bright reflections, and the blue lakes hold
A mirrowed rim of scarlet-lacquered trees.
This is the mad, brave burning of the year
Before it must, at last turn bleak and sere,
As in the heart a dying dream will rise
Sometimes to burn more clear before it dies.
Strange that a sun so cool should strike such flame;
Strange that my heart still flares to to hear your name.

Kiddies' Kolumn

Dearest Saranel Carter and
Jean Letson, alias—EZRA MASON:

Your letter last week signed Ezra Mason may have been sent as a joke, but it saved the Kiddies Kolumn from shooting a blank—and it should be a warning to the Kiddies, that unless they get busy and send in some letters—well, there just won't be any "little bright corner" in this paper.

It was a lovely little "attempt" and really was a credit to your intellectual ability. The name was a pretty one, and the little personal "I LOVE YOU" was the best part of it all. Come again "little ones", you have my O. K. on anything you want to do.

Yours,
Mildred White Wallace.

In one of the most important things to children—precious Vitamin B for keeping fit. Mighty few cereals have it.

● Many are nervous, poor in appetite, system out of order, because their daily diets lack enough of the precious Vitamin B for keeping fit.

Few things keep them back like a lack of this protective food element.

So give everyone Quaker Oats every morning. Because in addition to its generous supply of Vitamin B for keeping fit, it furnishes food-energy, muscle and body-building ingredients. For about ½c per dish.

Start serving it tomorrow for a 2-weeks test. Quaker Oats has a wholesome, nutlike, luscious appeal to the appetite. Flavory, surpassingly good. All grocers supply it.

The Man Who Knows

Whether the Remedy You are taking for Headaches, Neuralgia or Rheumatism Pains is SAFE is Your Doctor. Ask Him

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it — in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store — simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

WAR is on in east Africa. Mussolini's troops in Eritrea invaded Ethiopia because, according to a note he sent the League of Nations, of the Ethiopian mobilization, though this was not ordered until after the Italians had crossed the border and occupied strategic positions south of Mt. Mussa Ali.

Baltingheta Heroul

Baltingheta Heroul, the Ethiopian foreign minister, sent to the league this message:

"A telegram received October 3 from Ras Seyum, informs the imperial government that Italian military airplanes this morning bombarded Aduwa and Adigrat, leaving many victims among the civilian population, including women and children, and destroying numerous houses.

"A battle is at this moment taking place in the province of Agame.

"These events, occurring on Ethiopian territory, constitute a violation of the empire's frontier, and a breach of the covenant of the league, through Italian aggression."

A Reuters dispatch from Addis Ababa said the Italian force advancing on Agame had been defeated, but this report probably was false.

The Italians, moving south from the Asmara region, crossed the Mareb river frontier at widely separated points and converged in heavy columns toward Aduwa, the scene of the terrific Italian defeat 39 years ago. Government authorities in Rome at first denied that Adua and Adigrat had been bombed, but this action was reported by American correspondents with the Italian army.

Haile Selassie's order for general mobilization was carried throughout the empire by the ominous beating of the war drums, and his eager warriors responded by the hundred thousand. The emperor's first war order was to his chieftain, Ras Kabada, and three other generals, to take 50,000 men to Mt. Mussa Ali. The defense in the North was entrusted to the Negradas of Wollacho. It was estimated at Addis Ababa that the emperor could count on the services of about 1,250,000 fighting men, and the women also are ready for active work in the conflict.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the opening of hostilities in Ethiopia, Mussolini gave the signal for tremendous mass gatherings of all Fascists in Italy. Millions of Black Shirts in all the cities dropped everything and assembled to cheer for the Duce and his African adventure. From the balcony of the Venezia palace in Rome the premier shouted the words that committed his nation to a policy that may mean either victory or ruin. He reiterated his determination to seize territory from Ethiopia but declared he would do everything possible to prevent the campaign from bringing on a European war. But he warned the League of Nations and all nations to keep their hands off, saying:

"To sanctions of an economic character we reply with our discipline, our sobriety, and our spirit of sacrifice. To sanctions of a military character we will reply with measures of military character. To acts of war we will reply with acts of war."

Summoned hastily to a meeting of the league council in Geneva, the statesmen of Europe found themselves confronted by the fact that an undeclared war was being waged by a league member against a league member. Article XVI of the league covenant provides for severe penalties for such a war when the aggressor has been determined. The sanctions range through an economic and financial boycott to final military penalties. Before going to Geneva, Anthony Eden of Great Britain conferred with Premier Laval of France in Paris. He had instructions to throw the full support of his movement behind league efforts to isolate or halt the conflict in Africa. French officials believed that if sanctions were applied by the league, they would be only economic, which would shut off loans and raw materials from Italy. The mobilization of the British navy in the Mediterranean and the Red sea continued with accelerated speed.

FIRM assurance that the United States would not be drawn into a foreign war was given by President Roosevelt in his address at San Diego. He said:

"We not only earnestly desire peace but we are moved by a stern determination to avoid those perils that will endanger our peace with the world. As President of the United States I say to you most earnestly once more that the people of America and the government of those people intend and expect to remain at peace with all the world."

In Washington Secretary of State Hull made a strong plea for peace, declaring that economic recovery is being retarded by international political uncertainty. He warned that world political stability cannot be achieved without a revival of world trade and that war will block trade.

BULGARIAN conspirators formed an elaborate plot to assassinate King Boris III and seize control of the government, but they were foiled and many persons were arrested. Among them were 27 army officers and former Premier Kimon Gueorguieff.

Sources close to the government declared an attack was to have been made on the king as he appeared before his subjects to review a parade in celebration of the anniversary of his accession to the throne. Marching soldiers were to have been without ammunition, and in the confusion following the attack the plotters hoped to take control of the arsenal and public buildings.

MAJ. GEN. MALIN CRAIG, a veteran of two wars and commandant of the war college, was appointed chief of staff of the American army by President Roosevelt. He took office immediately, succeeding Gen. Douglas MacArthur who is on his way to the Philippines to be military adviser to the new island commonwealth. Craig is advanced to full generalship.

Gen. Malin Craig

Born in St. Joseph, Mo., in 1875, Craig was graduated from West Point in 1898.

Immediately afterward he saw service in Cuba during the Spanish-American war, and in June, 1900, participated in the China relief expedition made necessary by the Boxer outbreak. After service in various army posts in this country, Craig, upon American entrance into the World war in 1917, was assigned as chief of staff of the Forty-first division and sailed with that outfit for France.

Later he became chief of staff of the First army corps, serving in that position until the armistice was signed.

For his fine work in the World war he received the Distinguished Service medal, and he also was given the Legion of Honor and Croix De Guerre of France, Order of the Bath of England, Order of the Crown of Belgium, and Order of the Crown of Italy.

TREASURY report for three months ending September 30 showed a first-quarter deficit of $832,000,000. This was 34 per cent greater than for the corresponding period a year ago which at that time was a record deficit. Expenditures for the quarter amounted to $1,830,000,000. This was an average of about $20,000,000 a day.

The deficit occurred in spite of increased taxes and other revenues incident to improved business. Total revenues for the three months were $998,000,000 compared with $954,000,000 in the corresponding period of the preceding fiscal year.

A substantial amount of the increase in expenditures was due to AAA payments to farmers. Increased army, navy and other departmental spending, as well as larger allocations to veterans' adjusted service certificate fund, public debt sinking fund, and civil service retirement fund, contributed to the increase in regular expenditures.

POTATO control was the subject of discussion at a hearing called by the AAA in Washington, and officials, farmers and consumers were given a chance to say what they thought about the Warren act, which provides for quotas for potato growers with a prohibitive tax on production in excess of quotas, and is armored with jail penalties for willful buyers or sellers of bootleg potatoes.

Secretary Wallace

This act was opposed by the New Dealers, and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said at the conference that he does not want to enforce it and will do all in his power to avoid enforcing it. He offered several plans for voluntary methods which would reduce potato surpluses and raise prices. He continued:

"Potato growers are in real trouble and the AAA wants their judgment on possible cures for potato problems. Potato prices are about half of parity and the AAA desires to get the full benefit of the judgment of potato producers concerning plans for increasing their returns."

THE AAA announced a production program for cigar-leaf tobacco for the next four years. It provides a maximum acreage production of 40 per cent. Benefit payments will guarantee producers not less than "fair exchange value," or parity, for the crop. Contract signers will be prevented from growing tobacco on farms other than those covered by the contract.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Typical of the sort of thing that has made the Republican party in New York state, impotent since the passing of Bill Barnes from its leadership is the proposal of Charles Dewey Hilles to throw the Empire state delegation to Bertrand H. Snell.

Most Republicans agree that Snell would make an excellent President. He has force, character, and ability. He stays put. He takes advice, but without ever yielding one inch on deep convictions, or yielding to temporary expediency. Never a back slapper, never a user of weasel words, he nevertheless fought his way up through the house of representatives, and won the G. O. P. nomination for the speakership of that body against the whole strength of the Hoover administration. And his rather thin following since 1932 has never regretted its choice.

But the whole point is that no one, least of all Mr. Hilles, who proposes to commit the New York delegation to Snell, has the slightest idea that the Republican convention will nominate the able New York representative. The whole purpose of giving this big delegation to Snell is to hold it away from Herbert Hoover, to hold it away from Senator Borah—even to hold it away from Colonel Knox—for the purpose of permitting another smoke-filled room nomination reminiscent of 1920.

It is good old Republican tradition—Democratic tradition, too, for that matter—that a group of old party wheel-horses can sit around in a room and do much better in picking a candidate than can either the voters in primaries or delegates in an untrammeled convention. In fact, there is so much history to back it up that there seems to be some logic in the contention.

But it is a tradition which would not have a chance this time if it were not for one thing—fear that Herbert Hoover will win the nomination by pure force of lethargy. Hilles also wants to head off Borah. He was distinctly annoyed at the recent poll of county and other leaders by Robert H. Lucas, which showed such surprising strength for the Idaho senator.

It's an Old Feud

This feud goes back to the days when William Howard Taft was President, and Hilles was his secretary. Borah has frequently remarked that "Taft and Hilles wrecked the party." He still thinks so and Hilles knows it. Hilles would not be consulted much if Borah were in the White House. He knows that, too.

Another phase of the situation is that a great many New York Republicans would prefer the nomination of former Senator James W. Wadsworth, now a member of the house. Wadsworth, like Snell, has never equivocated about the New Deal. When it looked as though opposing Roosevelt's program was little short of political suicide, Wadsworth always backed Snell in opposing it, not just by his vote, but by vigorous denunciation—in sharp contrast with the number of other Republicans who gracefully yielded to the storm.

It so happens that neither one of these outstanding New Yorkers is of the boss type. Else the story of the New York Republican fiasco in the last 15 years might be very different.

After the passing of Barnes, when New York had a Republican governor, Whitman, and two Republican senators, Calder and Wadsworth, there was a considerable G. O. P. faction which wanted Wadsworth to be boss in Barnes' place. Another faction backed Calder. Calder wanted the job. Wadsworth didn't. He didn't want to be bothered with it. But while Calder went after it the stronger group, including Snell, backed Wadsworth. Which resulted in there being no Republican boss in New York at all.

Woman suffrage and prohibition divided the leaderless party. Calder was defeated for re-election by Doctor Copeland, and in 1926 Bob Wagner defeated Wadsworth. Then along came Roosevelt and Farley to build up the upstate Democratic organization in the country sections, as Al Smith had already built it up in the cities.

And now there is a new complication. It looks as though a new schism was about to divide the New York Republicans.

Puzzling Problem

What substitute for AAA—farm benefits and processing taxes—can the opposition to the New Deal offer?

That problem is causing furrowed brows among would-be candidates on the Republican ticket against Franklin D. Roosevelt next year. It is also worrying the wheel-horses of the party—those that are left—the men who know they can never themselves carry the standards, but who like tremendously to feel that they are powers behind the throne. Such men, for example, as J. Henry Roraback of Connecticut—the last of the old bosses. Such men as Dave Mulvane of Kansas used to be.

Reliable reports from the farm belt indicate that the Republicans must have some substitute—something that will satisfy the farmers—if they are to have a chance in that part of the country. The reports are interesting for another reason. They indicate that it will not be difficult to enlist the farmers against the New Deal if they are convinced they will fare just as well without it.

Apparently the farmers are not at all satisfied that the system, which is now paying them handsome benefits in return for their crop restrictions, is sound.

What most of the farmers would really like would be to have all restrictions on production removed, and then to have prices for all crops guaranteed by the government—prices that would yield them what they regard as a decent return for their labor and the use of their land.

Appeal to Farmers

This sounds more uneconomic than even the present scheme. But it would appeal infinitely more to the farmers, and, curiously enough, it is almost precisely what was offered as a farm plank by Former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, and which was so flatly rejected by Coolidge, Hoover and Mellon. In short it amounts to the export debenture, with its equalization fee provision. The only difference is that the equalization fee part of the scheme does not appeal much to the farmers. If any particular crop were very large, so that a heavy percentage of it had to be sacrificed at a sharp loss on export sales, then the equalization fee might easily deprive the farmer of that fair price he craves.

But the farmer is a natural gambler. He has to be. He gambles on every crop he plants—against nature. And up to now on the market price. The farm benefits for not raising crops are virtually the first sure thing the farmers of the world have ever had.

Perhaps because of the trace of gambling which seems to be in every human being, this is not the phase of AAA which appeals most to him. Or at least reports from all over the country indicate that it is not. He wants to gamble against nature—against surpluses of his crop from other countries competing in the world market. He wants the chance of an occasional killing with fat prices on a big crop on his land, even though that big price can be occasioned only by crop failures elsewhere.

But while this is what he wants, he is not going to give up the security he now has for the first time in the history of mankind for the mere privilege of gambling. And he will not vote that way.

Want Longer Hours

"Why doesn't the government work us sixty hours a week and give us enough to live on?"

That is the complaint of worker after worker on the famous Passamaquoddy tidal project, just outside Eastport, Maine, and close to beautiful Campobello, where President Roosevelt loved to vacation years ago.

"I work eight hours a day, five days a week," one worker told the writer. "For that the government gives me $11 a week. I have to pay $10 a week for my board and room, so you see I have to be pretty careful with that other dollar."

"It's just crazy," said a garage worker, who was intently listening. "The government ought to work these fellows ten hours a day, and six days a week. Then they would make some money. They could buy things. Isn't that what we are supposed to be needing?

"Don't talk to me about the men needing the time off for recreation. What do they do with their time off? Two days—they have—and they lay around the ends of the wharves and bum cigarettes from us natives. You see they can't afford to buy their own."

"But modern thuoght is that a man ought not to work as long as sixty hours a week," suggested the writer.

"Say, mister, we used to work sixty hours a week all the time, and we got along just fine," retorted the garage worker.

"But the government wants to take care of as many men needing work as it can with the money it can afford to spend," persisted the writer. "Isn't this the best way to do it?"

Anyway, More Money

"Well, maybe it would be better not to work them sixty hours," conceded the garage man, "but certainly they ought to get $25 a week. Why, mister, lots of these chaps have wives. I know a lot of them who have three children. What do you think a man can do for a wife and three children on $11 a week?

"Cold weather is coming on, and these fellows will have to buy a lot of warm clothes. That dollar a week over board money, for the single ones, won't go very far then."

Eastport looks like a boom mining town save for one thing—the money isn't jingling. Men walk around the streets in machinaws. High laced boots, sweaters and heavy fur caps give an Alaskan note to the picture. But there are no gambling hells. Cheap lunch rooms abound. They have to be cheap. Nobody has the mony to support an expensive one. Which is also the answer, of course, to the lack of gambling hells.

Not all the men are bitter at Uncle Sam. Some of them are pitifully grateful to get work, even at $11 a week. But mighty few of them understand the economic ideas behind that fight in congress last winter over the "prevailing wage" amendment. They do not realize the idea that this work is just to provide employment until private industry can absorb them—that the last thing intended is to make these jobs so attractive that men would not leave them to take private employment, even of humble varieties.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The Boston Lawrences came to California at the beginning of the gold rush, but the holdings of the family have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The family consists of Phil, the oldest, Gail, Edith, Sam, who is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel, something of a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly. At a roadhouse Gail sees Ariel, at midnight. Next day Ariel admits she was at the place, and displays no remorse. Dick Stebbins proves himself a true friend of the Lawrences, and Gail realizes that she loves him and not Van. Stebbins and Ariel elope, according to a note left by the girl. Phil and Lily are married and Lily and her three children make their home in the Lawrence house. Edith is fatally injured in an accident for which little Danny, one of Lily's children, is innocently responsible. After Edith's death Gail passes through a period of heartbreaking grief. Always a great reader, she begins to write and her first story is accepted by the editor of a leading magazine. The colossal Murchison fortune is swept away, and Van faces the world almost penniless.

"Is this you with me, Edith?" her soul would ask as she stamped and pencilled books and slips, smiled and answered at the library desk. "Are you helping me at last?"

And then, a week after the picnic, came a Sunday of deluge, when Phil and Lily went to a movie and Gail took the three little boys for a wet walk. The older two came back contentedly enough to blocks and crayons, but little Danny was almost too tired for luncheon, and quite too tired to play, and at three o'clock Gail sponged his sticky little face and put him down on her bed, with her old woolly dog, for a nap.

"Riff-raff," she said to him affectionately, straightening her big room, putting another log of wood—wood from the famous old Lawrence pine that had come down only a few weeks ago—into the little stove.

"Wiff-waff," Danny as affectionately returned.

Gail closed bureau drawers, straightened books on the shelves. She carried a finished, fat, satin-bound microscopic blue blanket into Lily's room, stood looking thoughtfully at Lily's upper bureau drawer that was already filling with bands and knitted jackets for Philip, junior.

In the hall, she called down to the sitting room. "Wolfe! Everything all right?"

"I'm down here," Sam called back. "I'm building these kids a cattle barn!"

Gail went back into her room. Little Riff-Raff was asleep, looking like a tousle-headed angel. The room was warm and orderly and still, rain tapped, tapped, tapped tirelessly on the tin of the kitchen roof. Clippersville was buried in wet tree tops, in the silent Sunday afternoon; here and there blue smoke struggled up above the oaks and elms and pear branches.

On Gail's desk lay a heap of paper—large sheets—and her own green fountain pen. She sat down, dreamy eyes fixed on space, the pen's smooth butt pressed against her cheek.

"I don't know why I shouldn't write stories," she mused, half aloud. "I've read enough!

"Ede, wouldn't it be funny if I were really to be a writer some day?

"'To the dear memory of my sister, Edith Partington Lawrence.'"

The pen touched the paper; began to move.

Danny slept deeply, luxuriously, in the center of the big bed, the old woolly dog tightly clasped to his shabby little underwaist. Rain streamed steadily down the high windows, and drummed on the tin roof; the high feathery new tops of the trees below moved gently in the constant onslaught of the warm drops. Wood fell in the stove, and flamed up and was quiet again.

After awhile Gail threw a covered sheet aside, numbered a second, covered that. She pushed back her hair; her face was pale, her eyes shining. The scratching of the pen recommenced. The clock struck, struck again. Danny slept on, and the rain continued to fall.

But at six, when Lily was home and the boys having supper in the kitchen, a hot, golden sunset suddenly broke over the world. Gail walked up past the old stables, and saw the light shining red on the trunks of the oaks and on the village and on the woodpile and straining itself through the screen of the young grape leaves. Everything sparkled and glittered, scents heavy, wet and delicious crowded the air; the broken tumbler, that had been on the pump ever since Gail could remember anything at all, was a diamond tonight, and the tiny yellow balls of chickens, cheeping and tumbling after their officious mother across the wet grass, were almost more of beauty than the human heart could bear.

She reflected that she would do her full share of the dinner work and of the dishwashing afterward. Then she would take a bath, and get into pajamas and wrapper, and arrange shoes and dress for the library day tomorrow, and carry her week's laundry—for this was Sunday night—out to the big basket in the upper back hall.

And she lighted her desk lamp, and drew those five scribbled pages toward her, and in a silence and solitude of her own room read them once again—and found them good.

The loss of Ariel, the deeper blow of Dick's loss, Phil's marriage had been earthquake, the unbearable last burden after the burdened years. And beyond that had been the consuming flame of Edith's going, the unthinkable thing, the death of something that was herself, that was her own life.

The earthquake and the fire. And now into Gail's heart comfort came creeping back, new interest, new hope—the still small voice of the Lord.

Thus began the new life, in the unchanged setting of the old. Gail did not know whether what she dreamed and what she wrote was good or was not good, nor did she care. It had to come, and the coming was a sort of ecstatic bearing—a giving of life.

In April she had the letter: a dozen typewritten lines:

"Dear Miss Lawrence:

"The readers report that, delightful as this story is, it is 'not quite in our tone.' The feeling of the Atlantic is that, when a tale is as intimately true to life as this is of yours, the tone is surely a tone for the Atlantic to adopt.

"It gives us much pleasure to accept so admirable a story.

"Very truly yours,
"The Editor."

The dull old grimy kitchen swooped and soared about her. She had been hulling strawberries, putting every twelfth one into Danny's expectant mouth, open at her knee.

"I Don't Know Why I Shouldn't Write Stories."

The letter from the Atlantic had strawberry juice on it; no matter. It shook like a tacking sail as she read it.

"Phil! Look here a minute."

"My—Gawd!" said Phil, upon reading it.

"Read it, Sam!"

"When'joo write a story!" Sam said, incredulous.

"Oh, Phil, you don't suppose—you don't suppose I'm—I'm going to write!"

"Well, for heaven's sakes," Lily said patiently, "the way you carried on, I thought some one was dead!"

Gail sat at the table, her elbows resting on the worn oilcloth, pressing the crushed letter against her face. She felt as if her body had taken wings and was about to lift itself up into the air.

"Phil Lawrence," she whispered presently, taking her hands down, regarding him seriously, "I've sold a story!"

He looked at her kindly from the old rocker. Lily tired easily now, and had established her shapeless person wearily on his knee. Phil's eyeglassed eyes looked over Lily's head.

"'Bout time something good came to you, Gail," Phil said simply. His sister felt the words to be an accolade.

"Oh, I can't believe it—it isn't me!" Gail whispered. "It's—it's the Lawrence luck, coming back!"

She got up and carried the glass dish of strawberries into the dining room. She lifted the cover of the pail, and poured the lightly tumbling hulls down into it. Then with a damp old rag she wiped the oilcloth, afterward at the sink rubbing her finger tips with a withered half lemon. And all the time the juice-stained letter blazed in the breast pocket of her old midshipman's blouse like a burning jewel.

CHAPTER X

So came Clippersville to be proud of another Lucky Lawrence. A thousand pleasant little episodes, as the summer wore along, told Gail that she was famous and that her old friends and neighbors were glad.

The Challenge ran her picture with a flattering article. Patrons of the old library, coming and going in the hot afternoons, smiled at her over the broad desk top.

"Tickled to death to hear we have an authoress!" the women whispered, nodding and smiling. Gail would flush brightly, joyfully, in return. She saw them all differently now, these busy, strained young mothers, with their babies in rompers and sun-bonnets; these shapeless big middle-aged women with their corsets showing under their dingy voiles. They were her marionettes now; they moved to the strings in her fingers.

Walking home, in the burning bright sunset, she looked at the hills that ringed sleepy Clippersville, those gauzy, transparent hills that were the color of the sky all summer long. She looked at the great oaks and the locusts that lined the Calle, and the magnolias and peppers on the lawns. She looked at the stout women in cottage gardens; women with hair wetly, smoothly dressed; women watering marigolds and wallflowers in the afternoon shadows. They were all beautiful to her.

If Lily telephoned her, and she had to stop in the market, she saw the market or the fruit store or the five-and-ten with new eyes. Their wilted wares, their wearied salesfolk, their anxious bargainers were newly dramatic. When some shabby woman from Thomas Street hill, with a fat, drooling baby on her arm, and another stumbling and whining at her knee, priced the pork chops, priced the chopped beef, looked worriedly from one to the other, Gail felt her heart go out on a rush of love and sympathy for all poverty—all motherhood. She did not know why.

She had letters from persons, faraway unknown persons, praising her story when it was published. Gail answered them simply, unable to believe the words that flowed from her fountain pen. She could presently write:

"If you liked 'Simply Impossible,' I hope you will like 'Post Office Closed Tomorrow.' It is coming out very soon in some magazine."

The great Barnes Rutherford, ill, idling in a palace on the Maine coast, wrote her. He, sixty-five, the dean of the greatest profession of all, could find time to write to a little Clippersville girl, and tell her he thought "Simply Impossible" was a good story!

Even more touching were the literary folk of Clippersville. It had so many! Wistful, discarded men and women, living in shabby little gas-lighted cottages smothered in dusty vines, suddenly appeared on all sides, and proudly claimed kinship with the writer. Gail accepted their condescensions graciously; she knew that she was not of their ilk.

Miss Libby Gatty had sold a story to the Black Cat twenty-five years ago; a story that one of the judges had thought deserved first prize. Miss Lou Bennett had known Edward Townsend, who wrote the Chimmie Fadden stories, when she had been in New York with her uncle in 1897, and had met Archibald Clavering Gunter.

"Oh, my uncle knew everybody!" said Miss Lou, tossing her withered head, growing splotchy in the face at the mere exciting memory. "He knew Frank Munsey; he knew everybody!"

Tottering old Kane Rissette had had quite a literary experience as one of the publicity agents of a big railroad in the days before he drank so hard. He lived with a widowed sister now, and Min Rissette Riggs kept him in order. He delighted in remembering all the literary lights who had come into the office of the railroad magazine and paid their written, and sometimes rhymed, tributes to California.

Then there were the poets, most of them women. They tremblingly brought out for Gail's inspection their hoarded clippings, discolored strips of newspaper or magazine pages. Mrs. Jadwin, who ran a boarding house down by the flour mills, had once won a twenty-five-dollar prize for a poem called "Cloud Voices."

"Oh, my dear!' said Hatty Schenck, who wrote women's club news for the newspapers all over the state, and nature poems beginning "Hail!" and whose pen name was "Lillian Lynne." "Oh, my dear, is there any moment in the world like the one when you know you're getting it, you're in the mood? For, you know, I can't always write," Hatty rushed on. "Sometimes . . ."

There were times when she just felt dull and blank, as if she'd never written a line. And then, suddenly, perhaps when she was in the kitchen with Mamma . . .

"Oh, I know!" Gail would sympathize, with dancing eyes.

And all the time, deep within her, she knew that she and Hatty were not alike. She knew that she could lean down to Hatty, but that Hatty could never reach up to her. It made her humble, and sometimes, when it came to her with a fresh pang of realization that only Edith could have shared all this truly, that only Edith would have appreciated it—indeed, that she owed much of it to the poem-loving, book-loving, truth-loving little sister—she felt a deeper sorrow even than the younger sorrow had been.

Lily sat sewing or idling on the side porch in the afternoon, and the three little boys worked in the wide yard. Sam and Phil had carried their work as far as trimming off the dry limbs of oaks and peppers; the shorn trees sent rich lacy shadows across the new sheen of the grass.

"Lily, what's for dinner?" Gail would ask out of a dream.

"The cream puffs and corn and the peaches, and there's a lot of cold rice. I thought maybe poached eggs."

"It's too hot for meat."

Silence again.

"Thinking up another story, Gail?"

"Well, there's one kind of teasing me."

"I can kinder tell by your eyes when you're thinking of your sister," Lily said once.

"Edith?"

"Well, I was thinking of Ariel, then."

"Ariel . . ." Gail always spoke the name on a long sigh. "She couldn't wait," she would muse aloud sorrowfully. "Doesn't it seem funny, Lily, for a person to go away—just as if she had died—and never to write—never to send any word?"

WHY BAY TURNS YELLOW

La Jolla Bay, near San Diego, Calif., had this summer a visitation of "yellow water," unique in that region both because of the prominence of yellow and the extremely small size of the causative organism, says the Collecting Net, published in the interests of marine biological laboratories. No satisfactory identification of this organism has been obtained. Individuals had a length of only about six-thousandths of a millimeter. They had four flagella. The case was also remarkable on account of the entire absence of other plankton organisms during the period of its noted abundance, from about July 27 to August 7.

Tries 35,000 Cases

Camille Kelley, noted woman jurist of Memphis, has tried more than 35,000 cases. Appointed to the bench in 1920, she became the first woman judge in the South, the second in the United States. She has been re-elected continuously since that time, four times without opposition.

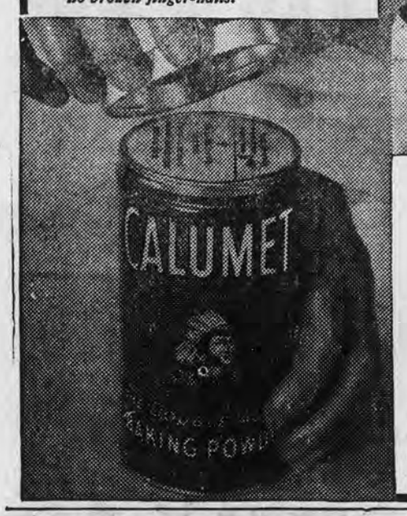
MRS. K. J. TOBIN, OF BEVERLY HILLS, ILL., WELCOMES



Calumet Baking Powder... in a big, new 10¢ can!

"WHAT'S THE SENSE in taking chances with second-bests when you can get a good, big can of Calumet for a dime?" asks Mrs. Tobin.

"I've never had a baking failure with Calumet," Mrs. Tobin said. And judging by the expectant faces of Richard and Patricia, Mrs. Tobin is not the only member of her family who knows how delicious Calumet cakes always are!

A SIMPLE TWIST... and the Easy-Off Top lifts off. No delay, no spilling, no broken finger-nails!

WHY DOES CALUMET give such astonishing "baking luck"? Why is Calumet different from other baking powders? Because Calumet combines two distinct leavening actions. A quick one for the mixing bowl. A slower one for the oven... and Calumet's double-action is so perfectly balanced and controlled that it produces perfect leavening—every time.

All Calumet prices are lower! Calumet is now selling at the lowest prices in history... the regular price of Full-Pound Can is now only 25¢! And be sure to see the new, big 10¢ can—a lot of good baking for a dime, with Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder. A product of General Foods.

NEW APRONS YOURS "FOR THE MAKING"

PATTERN 9617

Now's the ideal time to replenish your stock of aprons, and could you choose a more charming pair than these? The gingham, above, is ready for any and all chores, bar none. Large, easy-to-cut scallops form its interesting hem-line while criss-cross straps, a sash tie, and deep patch pocket enlist for kitchen duty. Its dainty companion, in batiste or voile, will love to preside over the informal dinner at home, where the hostess is maid of all work, yet wants to bring a hint of daintiness to the table.

Pattern 9617 may be ordered only in sizes small, medium and large. Small size requires 1⅞ yards 36 inch fabric for apron with scallops; 1¾ yards for other apron. Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

SMILES

CRACKING THE POTS

Jinks—You look dreadfully battered. What's happened?

Binks—Wife has been pelting me with flowers.

Jinks—Why, that wouldn't mark you up in that manner.

Binks—Oh, they were in the pots. —Detroit News.

Speed Not Necessary

Patient—Five dollars for drawing one tooth—just for a few seconds' work? You sure earn your money quickly.

Dentist—I can draw it more slowly if you like.

Always Vigilant

Dreamer—Do you ever pause and muse over the opportunities you have missed?

Hustler—No. It would be just my luck to miss some more while I was musing.

Gentle Hint

Long-Winded Speaker—I ask you once more, gentlemen, did you ever stop to think?

Weary Listener—And I ask, did you ever think to stop?

SORES
BED SORES BOILS RASH

For the treatment of sores on feet, legs or any other part of the body, Dr. Porter's Antiseptic Healing Oil will be found unusually effective. This oil, perfected by a distinguished surgeon of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, has a twofold action. First, it combats infection. Second, it aids healing. This is usually the treatment you want for a sore.

Besides sores, Dr. Porter's Antiseptic Healing Oil is good for the treatment of boils and skin rashes, itch, etc. Hundreds who have tried everything else for sores and broken out and itching skin, say nothing has given them the relief that Dr. Porter's Antiseptic Healing Oil has. Try this wonderful treatment for sores on any part of the body or for boils or skin itch and see how beneficial it is.

Dr. Porter's Antiseptic Healing Oil is made by the makers of Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine and is sold by all druggists at 30c and 60c with guarantee of satisfaction or money back.

Shivering with Chills
Burning with Fever
Sure Relief for Malaria!

Don't try homemade treatments or newfangled remedies! Take that good old Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. Soon you will be yourself again, for Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic not only relieves the symptoms of Malaria, but destroys the infection itself.

The tasteless quinine in Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic kills the Malarial infection in the blood while the iron it contains builds up the blood to overcome the effects of the disease and fortify against further attack. The twofold effect is absolutely necessary to the overcoming of Malaria. Besides being a dependable remedy for Malaria, Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is also an excellent tonic of general use. Pleasant to take and absolutely harmless. Safe to give children. Get a bottle today at any drug store. Now two sizes—50c and $1. The $1 size contains 2½ times as much as the 50c size and gives you 25% more for your money.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

HIGHWAYS ARE HAPPY WAYS.

"Highways Are Happy Ways", is the title of a once very popular song. Every citizen in Shelby County can soon sing this melody in reality, if they fall in line with the magnanimous proposal made by Gaston B. Scott, President of the State Highway Commission, in a stirring appeal to a representative audience on last Friday morning in the Courthouse auditorium in Columbiana.

There were present on this occasion influential citizens from every section of the County including the Members of the Board of Revenue; Members of the Board of Education; Exchange and Civic Club members; Dr. A. F. Harman, President of Alabama College; J. Alex Moore; Zollie Cowart; Dr. J. I. Reid; Representative R. A. Reid; Dr. E. G. Givhan, of Montevallo; B. B. Curry, of Wilton; J. A. Wade and Jimmy Gorman, of Vincent; and other distinguished persons, who attentively listened to the plan outlined by Mr. Scott in which Shelby County may share—IF—full cooperation from every citizen, and the necessary financial requirements can be arranged.

The proposed plan, as the writer understands it, is like the old Latin geographical description, "All Gaul is divided into three parts"—that is, the new Highway construction, in which we are vitally concerned, consists of a paved Highway extending from the Bibb County line to the St. Clair County line. The State proposes to pave the road from Calera to Montevallo FREE. The State Highway Commission authorities then ask that citizens of Shelby County finance "one third" of the expense required to complete the above mentioned Highway, and the Federal Government takes over the remaining "one third" of the expense incurred, to extend it through the territory mentioned above.

There is no argument AGAINST the advantage of GOOD ROADS running through the County. Without them, Shelby County will be as isolated as Ethiopia, about as inaccessible, and about as desirable a place in which to live.

It is an opportune time to PULL TOGETHER, and speed our unanimous approval of this proposed progressive improvement for Shelby County. Alabama is ready to lend her financial assistance "one third" of the way; Uncle Sam doffs his high top hat and magnanimously offers HIS "one third"—Surely, Shelby County can afford to bid "one third"! We CANNOT afford to sit still and play—DUMMY!

It is now our own little card game! The "diamond" (in the rough) is the unimproved roadway. SPADES are Trumps. HEARTS are united and have joined in the long procession of interested citizens. There are enough CLUBS in the hands of these "two fisted" custodians of the County's finances to knock away all discouraging obstacles. We have discarded JACKS! The victorious cry is: YEA SHELBY! One for all—All for one! Let's get going! It's forward march time!

Of wide interest to their many friends in Shelby County was the marriage of Miss Wilma Baker, of Wilsonville, to Mr. Woodrow Elliott, of Harpersville, on September 21st. The wedding took place at the home of the Rev. E. S. Pate in Birmingham.

Mr. and Mrs. Elliott, both graduates of Jacksonville Teacher's College, are teachers at the Fourmile school, having taught for a number of years in the schools of Shelby County.

We join a host of friends in offering our congratulations and good wishes to this popular young couple.

Mims Roberts of the National Park Service Department, now stationed in Birmingham, spent the week-end in Columbiana. Mr. Roberts speaks enthusiastically of the possibilities to Shelby County and the many advantages that may be derived to this section, if the proposed plan for further development of Oak Mountain Park project is approved.

Mr. and Mrs. John Curlee entertained with a dinner party on Sunday, honoring Miss Myrtis Acker, a bride-elect of October. Miss Acker has been extensively feted in Birmingham, where she has made her home for the past few years, and her many friends in Columbiana, were delighted to greet her in her former home on this occasion. Her marriage to Dr. E. B. Cooper, popular dentist of Columbiana, will be solemnized on October 22nd in Birmingham.

The Shelby County High School Football team was defeated in Sylacauga on last Friday by a score of 26 to 13. The boys, we understand, fought a brilliant fight on the Sylacauga athletic field, but were outclassed by the opposing aggregation. They will meet the Maplesville team on home territory next Friday afternoon.

Homer J. Walton, local Representative of the Brown Service Funeral Co., left Columbiana, Sunday, for Nashville, Tenn., where he plans to take a six months course in Funeral Directing.

Want some lovely Dahlias and Lillies? See Noland Barnett!

Dr. H. W. James, prominent Alabama College Instructor, was a featured speaker at the Teacher's Institute held in Columbiana, Monday.

Among the collegiates noted at home for the week-end were: Misses Mary Moore Hurst, of Birmingham-Southern; Ruth Luck, of University; Charlie Verne Tinney, of Alabama College; Ruth Isbell, of Howard College; and Harris Milton Gordon, of University.

Tune your radios to WSM, Nashville, Tenn., on Friday night at 9:30 o'clock and hear a cast of 50 WSM radio artists present the Auburn University program. A large orchestra, male chorus and some dramatic players will entertain you.

KINGDOM NEWS

The G. A. which was organized at Antioch recently under the leadership of Mrs. Porter Anderson, met at the church last Saturday for their first program. The girls are showing much interest in the new organization and are extending an invitation to all young girls of the community to join the organization. Officers elected to serve are: Lorene Ruston, President; Willie Jean Templin, Vice-President; Mira Nell Templin, Secretary; Marguerite Ingram, Program Committee; and Nora Riley, Social Committee.

Members of Antioch who made the honor roll for September are; Mrs. G. E. Lewis, Mrs. G. C. Payne, J. T. Lovett, P. P. Anderson, G. C. Payne, Misses Jewel Armstrong, Marguerite Ingram, Lorene Ruston, Louise Talton, Elizabeth Herren, and James Ingram, Jr., Fredric Anderson and Joe Thomas Anderson.

CRUMPTON—MOON.

The many friends of Miss Ollie Sue Crumpton and Frank Moon will be interested to learn of their marriage which took place at the home of the bride at high noon, Sunday, Oct. 6th. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. E. Wells in the presence of only immediate members of the family and friends. The bride was lovely in a tailored crepe model of navy blue with matching hat and accessories. She is the youngest of three daughters of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Crumpton. The groom is the youngest son of Mrs. W. H. Moon and the late W. H. Moon. The young couple have many friends in this and other communities who wish them much happiness together.

MASON—KIRKLAND.

Miss Ila Mason and Hubert Kirkland were quietly married in the presence of a few close friends in Columbiana last Saturday afternoon. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Mason and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. T. Kirkland. The young couple are at home for a few weeks with the parents of the groom. Their friends wish for them many years of happiness together.

Misses Betty Jo Davis and Virginia Ruston, who are spending the winter in Birmingham attending school, spent Sunday at home.

Mrs. T. R. Blackerby and two children, of Sylacauga, spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Crumpton. Mrs. Blackerby came over for the wedding of her sister, Miss Ollie Sue Crumpton.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Stamps, of Birmingham, were the guests of relatives here, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ovid Perry have named their little son, Ovid, for his daddy.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Crumpton and little son, of Sylacauga, were here Sunday to see relatives.

W. F. Bennett and Garland left last week on a business trip to Detroit, Michigan.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Crumpton have named their little son born September 21st, Billy Wayne.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire to thank our many friends for the helpful assistance they rendered in saving our home from burning on Monday, October 7th. Especially do we feel grateful to the Fire Department, and to Holland Cox, Misses Lena Cox and Mary Woolley, who were among the first to come to our aid. (Signed)

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Leonard.

THE STORY OF A CANTERBURY BLUE BELL

A SUMMER in Canada on an island in Lake Huron gave the opportunity for tramping miles over beaches of all kinds, smooth sand and stones, sunshine and shade as one's mood would lead. For a lover of beaches this was a paradise.

We discovered one day on an unusually long hike along a rocky shore, a canterbury blue bell growing alone, sans friends of any description. Our first thought was to carry it back, roots and all, to the cottage in the woods and give it a chance to live, with loving care. "No," we argued with ourselves, "others will come this way perchance and love it, quite as much as we." So we rested a bit, enjoying it, on the lovely coast line of lake and land.

Soon some children came sauntering lazily down the beach, among them a lad about ten years. Seeing the blooming flower, he came near to it, whipped it off with his stick, and walked nonchalantly on. There it lay, my beautiful canterbury blue bell, on the rocks, bruised and lifeless!

I sat for some time in silence on the shore, recalling the numberless times I had seen automobiles stopped on the highways in our own country, and I remembered watching with rebellious spirit the owners pulling off the limbs of beautiful trees, bordering the roadsides in the springtime, ruthlessly whacking away at nature's loveliest and most delicate handiwork, only to find them wilted and perished soon after they returned home.

Is this not another form of selfishness all too common in pleasure seekers? Surely there can be no thought for the enjoyment of others, when one is marring the roadside's beauty, where thousands pass daily. This crime, for such it is against nature and beauty lovers, is equalled only by the twin sin of putting up unsightly bill boards to advertise hotels, liver pills or what not, in a beautiful nearby field or forest.

What must mother nature think of man's crudity when she does all she can to beautify her handiwork and he does all he can to butcher it? Isn't there some reverence lacking in the older generation that these things occur? When children see with their own eyes such mutilation, why would they not do the same? We have not as yet included in the education of our youth the refining subtle study of Beauty, beauty not only of nature's loveliness but beauty of human nature as unselfishness, beauty in conduct, beauty in character. Beauty is a thing alive, it is a spirit.

GETTING BY

AN OWNER of an estate one day noticed part of the rock fence, which bounded his large estate, breaking down. He called a workman to repair it. "Do just one day's work on this fence as I do not wish to pay more than four dollars for it," he told the man. "All right," said the workman, and set to work. At the end of the second day the owner was surprised to find the man still working, about to finish an excellent piece of work. "What, you still here?" he inquired, somewhat angrily of the man, thinking he was trying to augment his pay bargain. "Yes," the man answered, "because I never leave any job half done. The pay I expect is four dollars, the amount we bargained for, the time I put on it is my own." The owner looked at the man surprised, then said suddenly, "I have been looking for a man like you. I need you in my factory. Report there tomorrow at seven."

This fence builder reminded me of my great grandfather's favorite maxim oft repeated to us children when we could scarcely grasp its meaning. It became so much a part of me that decades later I am writing on that very subject—"what is worth doing at all, is worth doing well."

Thoroughness is one of the neglected virtues in this age. Youth is taught today from the examples of middle age to be clever enough to get by. Stupidity comes through being caught. This is a get-by age whose momentum has been gathering speed during the last half decade when much of the high finance of speculation in our country has been done on paper, as unearned money, instead of work of head, hand and heart.

To get by is not cleverness, but simply broken faith. Traffic laws are made to protect man, not to prohibit him. The misuse of millions by some of the so-called guardians of funds was not cleverness, under cover of the dark; it was broken faith. The treacherous, insidious teachings of the movies one can only comprehend when one hears the applause by the front row of future young citizens when the policeman, the defender of right and the law, is outwitted by some chattering churl of the silver screen.

College students, too, defeat their own goals ofttimes in class and examinations by cheating. Let us build up faith in thoroughness, for honesty

Lesson for October 13

THE STORY OF JEREMIAH

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 1:6-10; 36:3-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt go to all that I send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Jeremiah 1:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of Jeremiah.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of Jeremiah.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Taking a Stand for God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Attacking Entrenched Evils.

I. Jeremiah's Call (1:1-10).

1. It was pre-natal (vv. 4, 5). Before Jeremiah was born God ordained him a prophet to the nations.

2. His diffidence (v. 6). This seems to have grown out of his youth and inexperience.

3. His hesitancy overcome (vv. 7, 8). God graciously appeared to him and made clear that he should go where sent, speak as commanded, and to be not afraid of the faces of his enemies. This was accompanied by the assurance of the divine presence. It matters little as to the strength of the foe if the presence of God is with the messenger.

4. The divine message given (v 9). The very words were put into the prophet's mouth, not merely the thoughts but the proper words to express the thoughts.

5. The nature of his ministry (v. 10). It was to be wider than that of prophesying. Six words were given as descriptive thereof. The first four are destructive in their implication; "root out," "pull down," "destroy," and "throw down." The last two are constructive; "build" and "plant." The destructive precedes the constructive.

II. Jeremiah's Grief (9:1).

The unbelief of the people made him feel that his efforts were fruitless. Seeing so clearly the awful doom which awaited this people, he wept sorely. The true prophet of God takes to heart the seriousness of his ministry and sorely grieves over the wicked unbelief of the people.

III. Jeremiah's Prophecy in the Temple Court (26:1-24).

1. Jeremiah's solemn warning to Judah (vv. 1-7). The Lord commanded him to stand in a conspicuous place in the Temple and proclaim the judgment which was about to fall upon them. The object was to provoke them to repentance. If they did not repent, God would make the Temple as Shiloh. Shiloh was once the dwelling place of God; now it had fallen into decay. So will it be with the Temple. Jeremiah was sent to speak the words which his Lord had told him and not to diminish a word.

2. Jeremiah on trial (vv. 9-11).

a. Cause of arrest. He was arrested for speaking all that the Lord had commanded.

b. The charge (vv. 8, 9). They charged him with a capital crime, which involved pretending to speak for God and speaking against the Temple and the city. This would make him to be guilty of blasphemy and sacrilege, both of which were to be punished by death (Deut. 18:20; Lev. 24:16).

c. The princes sit in judgment (vv. 10, 11). We thus see that matters of state were not entirely in the hands of priests, but in part were controlled by members of the royal family.

3. Jeremiah's defense (vv. 12-15). Threats of death did not deter him from preaching, but only inspired him to repeat his message with clearness and tenderness.

a. Reiterated the divine commission.

b. He urged them to amend their ways and to obey God and thus avert the divine judgment (v. 13).

c. He gave himself up (v. 14). He did not resist the powers of government. Knowing that God had sent him, he was content to trust God for deliverance.

d. Warns of fatal consequences. He frankly told them that God had sent him and if they killed him they would be guilty of defying God.

4. Jeremiah saved (vv. 16-24).

a. The princes pronounce him not guilty (v. 16). They were convinced that Jeremiah was speaking the truth.

b. The elders plead for Jeremiah (vv. 17-23). They cited two cases; Micah (vv. 18, 19) and Urijah (vv. 20-23). They argued that killing God's prophets did not turn aside his judgment but intensified it. The only way to avert the judgment is to turn from their sins.

c. Jeremiah rescued by Ahikam (v. 24). He was a man of such influence that he was able to interfere at such a critical time.

Daily Living

He is wise who can instruct us and assist us in the business of daily virtuous living; he who trains us to see old truth under academic formularies may be wise or not as it chances; but we love to see Wisdom in unpretending form, to recognize her royal features under week-day vesture.

POULTRY

VITAMINS NEEDED IN POULTRY FEED

A, B, D, E, G Are Essential for Healthy Birds.

By Roy S. Dearstyne, Head North Carolina State College Poultry Department.—WNU Service.

Although no one knows exactly what vitamins are, scientists no longer doubt that they are essential to the health and development of birds and animals.

One of the important factors in managing poultry flocks is providing the birds with an adequate supply of vitamins A, B, D, E and G.

Practical sources of vitamin A are: yellow corn, sprouted oats, milk and its by-products, cod liver and certain other fish oils, egg yolk, alfalfa, green and cured carrots, cabbage, green grasses and legumes and their hays, and vacuum-dried white fish meal.

Vitamin B is found in practically all cereal grains and their by-products, milk and its by-products, in green grasses and legumes and their hays, in certain tubers, and in yeast.

Sources of Vitamin D include: milk and its by-products, potent fish oils, green grasses and legumes and their hays, irradiated feed stuffs, and the action of the ultra-violet rays of the sun.

Vitamin E is abundant in green feeds and cereal grains. Vitamin G is abundant in pork liver feed, dried whey, milk and its by-products, fish meal, meat scraps, soy bean oil meal, green grasses and legumes and their hays, and in yeast.

Birds given a well-balanced feed and an opportunity to get out on a green range usually secure enough vitamins to meet their needs.

Vitamin deficiencies often occur when birds are kept closely confined and are given a diet overbalanced with scratch and mash feeds.

Expert Gives Advice on Dressing Market Birds

For dressing for market, where cutting the head off and scalding the bird in water just below the boiling temperature produces an inferior looking carcass, the semi-scald, or slack-scald, method is advisable, states a writer in the Rural New-Yorker. In this method, the bird to be dressed is hung up by the legs and bled, as in dry picking, by cutting the jugular vein through the mouth and piercing the brain with the blade of the knife. The fowl is then immersed for 30 seconds in water held at 130 degrees, or until the feathers pull easily. The temperature of the scalding water should not vary much from that recommended, though from 126 to 132 degrees may prove satisfactory. Neither should increasing or diminishing the time that the bird is held in the water be made in an attempt to compensate for water too hot or too cold.

If a large number of fowls are to be dressed at one time, it will be necessary to have some means of holding the scalding water at the required temperature. After this immersion, the bird should be again hung up and the feathers removed without rubbing the carcass. If properly performed, the feathers should come easily, with the pin feathers. Enough scalding water should be used to permit of easily immersing the fowl and moving it about to allow penetration to the skin. Care in having water at the right temperature and bleeding the fowl must be observed if a carcass equal in appearance to one dry picked is desired.

Cooling Eggs

Newly laid eggs cool faster on wire trays than in a galvanized bucket, wire basket, or in a wooden case, according to G. W. Knox, Jr., extension poultryman, University College of Agriculture, Arkansas, adding that when eggs are held in a room with a temperature of 50 degrees, eggs three layers deep on a wire tray require nine hours to cool to 68 degrees, while eggs packed in a wooden tray require 38 hours to cool down to the same temperature. A clean room with a temperature of around 60 degrees and a high humidity is the most desirable for holding eggs before they are marketed.

Roup in Cool Weather

Roup in poultry is caused by one of two things: too much ventilation, or not enough. Too much ventilation can be easily detected—the hen house is drafty. The cure, obviously, is to stop up the cracks and holes so as to shut off the excessive air circulation. If the cause is lack of ventilation, this can be detected by a sweaty roof, wet litter, etc. Naturally, if there is not enough ventilation more windows should be opened on the front side of the house.

Quality Eggs

To produce the best quality eggs in the warm months, according to a writer in Prairie Farmer, confine all broody hens away from laying quarters; provide one nest for each four hens; keep clean nesting material in nests at all times; gather eggs frequently and keep them in a cool place. If the air is dry, keep a damp cloth over the eggs so they will not be reduced by evaporation; market eggs at least twice each week; kill or market the roosters.

A PUPPET SHOW'S RECORD

The largest marionette show ever assembled, the Teatro dei Piccoli, comprising 800 puppets, 300 scenes and 30 operators, recently completed its 12,000th performance before 10,000,000 persons in 30 countries. Some of the little "actors" go through such intricate acts that they require 30 wires and four operators at a time.—Collier's Weekly.

If you feel tired, run-down, nervous and out of sorts

—there is usually a definite reason for this

Now let's reason sensibly.

Don't try to get well in a day . . . this is asking too much of Nature. Remember, she has certain natural processes that just cannot be hurried.

But there is a certain scientific way you can assist by starting those digestive juices in the stomach to flowing more freely and at the same time supply a balanced mineral deficiency the body needs.

Therefore, if you are pale, tired and run-down . . . a frequent sign that your blood-cells are weak—then do try in the simple, easy way so many millions approve — by starting a course of S.S.S. Blood Tonic.

You cannot afford to be without Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRES for Fall and Winter use on your car, truck and tractor. You will not need chains! They will give you the greatest satisfaction and save you money!

FALL RAINS and winter snows present a transportation problem to farmers. Firestone solved this problem when they developed the complete line of Ground Grip Tires for cars, trucks, tractors and all farm implements. There are three patented features that give Firestone Tires super-traction in mud, snow, sand, gravel or soft ground of any kind.

1. Gum-Dipped Cord Body

The High Stretch Cord Body of Firestone Tires is Gum-Dipped (soaked in liquid rubber) giving extra strength and longer flexing life to withstand the terrific stresses and strains of the extra pulling power with only twelve pounds of air pressure. Firestone Tires are the only tires built that are Gum-Dipped.

2. Ground Grip Tread

Built with 54% additional tough rubber and scientifically designed with heavy cross bars and deep grooves that are self-cleaning (chains are not necessary), giving super-traction and long wear. The bars of rubber are so placed that they will not bump when used on paved roads.

3. Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords

This exclusive construction feature locks the thick, heavy tread securely to the Gum-Dipped cord body, making them one inseparable unit. This makes practical the use of a wider, flatter, thicker, deeper non-skid Firestone tread with higher shoulders and more and tougher rubber.

CONTROL OF CREDIT A BASIC QUESTION

Economist Describes Conflict Between Opposing Social Viewpoints on Government Bank.

Agitation for government banking is a phase of the conflict between our present "personal competitive enterprise system" in America and the "compulsory state collective security system" of several European States, Virgil Jordan, President National Industrial Conference Board, says in an article in a recent issue of "Banking" published by the American Bankers Association.

"They involve irreconcilable principles of human conduct and philosophy of life and the conflict between them is the key to the economic, social and political struggles of today," Mr. Jordan says.

The enterprise system of which "the development of the United States has been the unparalleled example, depends for its motive power of progress upon the inexhaustible reservoir of energy in individual desire for personal advancement in prosperity, but it guarantees nothing to the individual save freedom of opportunity," the article says in part.

The collectivist security system, he says, "places all emphasis upon the maintenance of a minimum standard of living for the mass without regard to the creative power of the individual. Quite simply the security system involves the modern form of the philosophy of the slave society." He continues:

A Sign of the Times

"The many-sided movement toward governmental banking, deposit insurance and currency management is the most direct and decisive expression of the universal instinctive search for security which is the sign of the times. In America our so-called social security legislation is an important indication of the drift away from the enterprise system toward a collectivist security system with concentration of authority in a central Federal government.

"The nationalization of credit is crucial and indispensible for complete state control of the complex industrial and business structure of this country. The drive toward government banking and monetary control is most determined because the relation of the state to credit goes to the root of the enterprise system. A collective security system is inconceivable without nationalization of credit. An enterprise system is inconceivable with it."

Under a collective security system, based on government banking the controls "lie solely in the hands of a few persons and depend upon their judgment, will or caprice." Mr. Jordan says, adding that it is they who must determine "upon the basis of some predetermined plan or upon pure political expediency of the moment, what lines of industry and even what individual enterprises shall have access to the credit reservoir." The state, he says, has the power of life and death over all enterprise that utilizes credit.

"Every government is an organ of party power and must respond to the will of the party that put it in power," the Jordan article says. "Under unchecked government operation it is an inescapable tendency of every currency to depreciate and for credit to expand. However much it may be in the interest of the nation, deflation is too dangerous politically for any government to undertake it deliberately."

BANKS AND COLLEGE LAUNCH NEW SCHOOL

Aims to Offer Studies in Advanced Banking Subjects to Bank Executives—Public Duties of Banks Stressed

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J. — The Graduate School of Banking, an unprecedented educational project, operated under the joint auspices of the American Institute of Banking Section of the American Bankers Association and Rutgers University, with 220 enrolled students from 35 states and the District of Columbia, inaugurated here in June its first resident session.

The states represented and the number of registrants from each were as follows: Alabama, 2; Arkansas, 2; California, 2; Connecticut, 9; Delaware, 3; District of Columbia, 6; Florida, 2; Georgia, 3; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 8; Indiana, 2; Iowa 1; Kansas, 1; Kentucky, 2; Louisiana, 3; Maryland, 1; Massachusetts, 9; Michigan, 5; Minnesota, 1; Missouri, 5; Nebraska, 1; New Jersey, 31; New York, 50; North Carolina, 8; North Dakota, 1; Ohio, 7; Oklahoma, 1; Oregon, 2; Pennsylvania, 32; Rhode Island, 1; Texas, 5; Virginia, 6; Washington, 1; West Virginia, 1; Wisconsin, 4; Wyoming, 1.

The annual resident sessions of the graduate school will be supplemented between periods by continued extension work for the students at their homes. The purpose of the school is described as being to offer in a three year course a comprehensive approach to an advanced study of the various administrative problems in banking and trust institutions. The teaching procedure is a combination of the case system and the lecture discussion method.

The Curriculum

The curriculum embraces banking administrative problems and policies, bank investment problems, legal and managerial aspects of trust business, legal phases of bank administration and economic problems in the field of money and credit. The public relations and responsibilities of banks and methods for meeting these obligations are emphasized in the courses.

It is planned to set up similar schools in cooperation with other universities in various parts of the country. The school will add 200 registrants each year for two years until 600 are enrolled.

The Wilton Boy Scouts and their master, Moye Splawn, are doing great work as well as having fun. The following article will convey the idea:

The Eagle and Hawk patrols of the Wilton Boy Scouts took advantage of their school holiday Monday, to hike into the Mayberry hills several miles west of Wilton. It was one of the most interesting and educational hikes the Scouts have taken in a great while. The Mayberry hills presented many exciting things to be long remembered. The Scouts were highly interested in the many curious rock formations of this section, which is indeed interesting. They also studied plant and animal life which is abundant. The Mayberry hills are rarely penetrated, except by those who wish to study and appreciate their beauty; being the extreme southern tip of the great allegleniys, they are very rugged. Scouts who made the hike were: J. W. Ward, Clay Lucas, Bunn Canant, Earl Beasley, Earl Myowry, Fredrick Iucas, Fred Adams, Willard Milstead, Winston Hogan, Patrol Leaders Will Hamner Little, James Fancher and Scoutmaster Splawn.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

J. H. Fulton has been appointed Chairman of the Board of Registrars for Shelby County. Other members include, John P. Lee and J. M. Frost. They will meet in Columbiana on December 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 for the purpose of registering all persons who will be eligible to vote in the next election.

At a business meeting of the Board of Revenue for Shelby County on last Friday, Cecil Duke, former Clerk in the Tax Assessor's office, was elected Clerk of the Board of Revenue. Mr. Duke will take over the duties of this important position in January, 1936. He is an efficient and competent official, and has made many friends throughout the County since he moved to Columbiana several years ago, who will be glad to learn that he will again be a member of the Courthouse official family.

A term of the Shelby County Circuit Court will be held in Columbiana on the 3rd Monday in November.

Karl Harrison, Attorney, of Birmingham, has moved to Columbiana, and has opened his office in the Mitchell Building where he will engage in the practice of his chosen profession. Mr. Harrison is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Harrison, of Montevallo, and a former resident of Columbiana. This announcement will be of interest to legions of friends throughout Shelby County where Mr. Harrison is so well and favorably known.

W. L. Longshore, prominent attorney of Birmingham, spent Monday in Columbiana transacting business for the firm of Longshore and Longshore.

Frank Head, Attorney, who has successfully practiced law in Columbiana for the past three years, has moved his office from the Mitchell Building to the Watson Building. He may be found in the Register in Chancery's office, or in his new quarters next to Sam A. Lokey's law office in the Watson Building.

Judge Wales W. Wallace will complete the Criminal week of Clay County Circuit Court this week in Ashland, Alabama.

Shelby County motorists are urged to purchase auto tags and driver's licenses as soon as possible to avoid standing in line during the last minute rush. Both tags and driver's licenses become delinquent November 15th. On that day a 15 per cent penalty and $1.50 citation fee is added to the tag cost and motorists who drive without driver's licenses will be subject to arrest.

P.-T. A. Holds Very Successful Meeting

One of the best meetings of the P.-T. A. was held last Wednesday afternoon, October 9th, at the Shelby County High School.

The President, Mrs. Cecil Duke, brought the meeting to order. The song, "Blessed Assurance", was sung, after which a prayer was given by the Rev. D. Z. Wooley. Hermonie Wooley, Secretary, gave the minutes of the last meeting and a report was given by the treasurer, Mrs. L. C. Taylor.

Mrs. Pernie Hendrick had charge of the program which consisted of each teacher telling as concise as possible the advantages of their room and the things they needed most. Teachers taking part were: Mr. Hosmer, Mr. Stone and Prof. E. H. Childs; Misses Mildred Meroney, Irene and Gertrude Bishop, Jane Paulger, Vivian Nix, Mary Peters, Elizabeth Bell, Hermonie Wooley and Erie Woodem and Mrs. Lula MacKnight, Mrs. L. C. Taylor and Mrs. Charlie Nivens. Some of the most needed things were equipment for the lab and more seating capacity for the high school and a much needed school library for the high school. Playground equipment was the most needed thing of the Grammar school. Principal E. H. Childs stressed that it is up to the parents and teachers to work wholeheartedly in the P.-T. A. to have a successful year. Plans were made for a Hallowe'en party and turned over to Mrs. Howard Holcomb and the finance and budget committee to complete the arrangements. A round-table discussion was then had by the members for the best way to make this the most successful year of the P.-T. A.

FUNERAL SERVICES ARE HELD FOR W. E. MERRELL OCT. 14TH

W. E. Merrell, life long citizen of Shelby County, passed away at his home in Columbiana on Sunday, October 13th, 1935. Mr. Merrell was born in Shelby, Alabama on February 5th, 1868, and for a number of years was a successful merchant of Shelby. He was first married to Miss Louellen Rylant, of Mosteller, who died in 1923. Mr. Merrell was in 1924, married to Miss Lena Ray, of Birmingham, and they moved to Columbiana where they have resided for the past 11 years.

Mr. Merrell united with the Methodist Church during a meeting held in Shelby by the Rev. T. K. Roberts in 1895. He was a prominent figure in religious and political circles, serving Shelby County in the capacity of President of the Board of Revenue for four years, and taking an active part in the civic life of the community.

Funeral services were conducted from the Merrell residence in Columbiana, the Rev. T. K. Roberts, H. M. Hurst, Omar Burns and D. Z. Wooley, officiating. Music was furnished by Mrs. Purnie Hendricks. Interment in Shelby with Walton in charge.

Surviving Mr. Merrell are his widow and one sister, Mrs. Pinkie Jordan, both of Columbiana.

W. G. PARKER DIES AT HOME OF SON IN GULFPORT OCT. 14

Mr. W. G. Parker, one of Shelby County's oldest and most prominent citizens, passed away at the home of his son, Dr. Ed Parker, in Gulfport, Miss., on October 14th, 1935.

Mr. Parker was a Confederate soldier, and served during the entire period of the war between the states. He was a charter member of the Columbiana Baptist Church, and led a long and useful life in the community in which he lived.

Services were conducted from the Baptist Church in Columbiana, the Rev. D. Z. Wooley in charge, assisted by the Rev. T. K. Roberts, a life long friend of the deceased. Interment in Columbiana cemetery, Walton in charge.

Surviving Mr. Parker is one son, Dr. Ed Parker, of Gulfport, Miss., and other relatives.

Shelby County High Defeats Maplesville

Shelby County High School won its first game of the football season on last Friday from Maples by a score of 33 to 0.

A steady passing attack mixed with a few good runs netted the first touchdown. The scoring was stopped there for the rest of the first half.

In the second half, the passing was continued by both teams. Shelby scored two touchdowns in both the third and fourth quarters. Maplesville made noticeable gains on short passes while Shelby was running and throwing long passes.

Much improvement was noticed in the Shelby defense. Play after play coming over the Shelby line was stopped for no gain. The good tackling by Wilder, Lowery and Riddle was outstanding. Big gains were made by the passing of Wallace to Riddle and Martin.

Next Friday, the Thompson High Team from Siluria will come to Columbiana to play Shelby High. The two teams are evenly matched and a large crowd is expected to attend.

Singing School At Siluria Called Off

The Shelby County Singing School which was to have been held in Siluria next week has been indefinitely postponed.

DRIVER'S LICENSE ACT IS EXPLAINED BY ATTY. GENERAL

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—In compliance with the recent request of Chairman Gaston Scott, of the State Highway Commission, for advice as to the of the various provisions of the act exact legal application and meaning of the Legislature requiring all persons in Alabama who operate a motor vehicle to obtain a driver's license, the office of Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael forwarded to Mr. Scott a formal opinion embodying full information on the subject for his use in answering a flood of inquiries that the Commission has been receiving daily.

The effect of the law on every class of driver of every kind of motor vehicle and the amount of the license fee required in every case is set out in the opinion, the ruling of which are summarized as follows:

1. Chauffer license was repealed by general revenue law of 1935, and a driver for another would be required to take out a driver's license dependent on the type of vehicle he drove.

2. The driver of a truck for hire, a private truck, a bus for hire, or a private bus is required to pay a 50-cent driver's license. Such license would authorize him to drive his own personal car.

3. Where Mr. A. owns an automobile, which neither he nor any of his family drive, his driver will be required to take out a 25-cent license.

4. If Mrs. B. owns a car and her daughter owns a car, but Mr. B. owns no car but drives both, he will be required to take out a 25-cent license.

5. Where a non-resident comes into this state and drives a motor vehicle regularly licensed in Alabama, he would be reqoired to obtain a proper driver's license.

6. Where a non-resident is the owner of a motor vehicle, duly registered in another state not requiring licensing of operators, he may, on condition that he have in his immediate possession a registration rard, evidencing such ownership and registration in his home state or county, operate motor vehicles on the highways of this state for the same time and to the same extent as like exemptions are granted residents of this state under the laws of the home state or county of such non-resident.

Where such a non-resident is not the owner of a motor vehicle registered in states or counties not requiring an operator's license, he may operate on the highways of this state any motor vehicle properly registered in his home state or county, without driver's license or time limit, on condition that he be prepared at any time or place to prove lawful possession of the motor vehicle and proper identity.

7. Where D. (the head of the family) owns no motor vehicle but drives a motor vehicle furnished by someone else, he is liable for a driver's license of 50 cents or 25 cents depending on the type of motor vehicle driven.

8. A person securing a license for which 50 cents is required is authorized to drive any type of motor vehicle.

9. A federal employe driving his own personal automobile is required to obtain the proper driver's license.

10. The chief of the highway patrol has no discretion in revoking a driver's license of any person for a period of 90 days upon receipt of certified record of the clerk before which proceedings were had in which any person was adjudged guilty of the offenses enumerated in the first part of Section 6 of said act.

11. The latter part of Section 6 being Section 6, subsection (b), makes it discretionary with the chief of the highway patrol to suspend the operating privileges of any person who was found guilty of the two offenses enumerated in subsection (b) of said Section 6.

12. A rural mail carrier or other Government employe using his own motor vehicle on the highways of this state is required to obtain the proper driver's license.

13. The driver of a taxicab is required to take out a 50-cent driver's license. If the owner of the taxicab does not drive it himself, he is not liable for license.

14. Where a person has paid for a 25-cent license and he should afterwards drive a truck or other vehicle for which a 50-cent license is required, the act does not require him to take out a further or additional license fee of 50-cents. If such person, at the time of obtaining the license contemplates operating a truck and applies for a 25-cent license therefor, he is subject to prosecution under Section 10 (b) of the act.

Corn-Hog Farmers Will Vote Oct. 26th

AUBURN, Ala. — Do corn-hog farmers of the nation want the AAA corn-hog adjustment program to continue another year?

That question will be answered on October 26th when farmers of Alabama and other states go to the polls and vote. "It rests with farmers themselves whether or not there is enough interest in and demand for a corn-hog adjustment program to justify the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in offering such a program in 1936," state AAA officials.

Every corn and hog farmer in the state, whether or not he signed a 1934 or 1935 contract, will have a chance to vote on the corn-hog adjustment program.

NEW ROAD WILL BE DISCUSSED AT MASS MEETING OCT. 21ST

A County-wide mass meeting has been called by J. M. Lyon, president of the Shelby County Board of Revenue, for Monday, October 21st. Every citizen in the county is urged to be present. The main discussion will center around the contemplated paved highway extending from the Bibb County line to the St. Clair County line.

This proposed highway will be of vital importance to the entire county, and if plans can be perfected for its completion, will mean more for the future progress of Shelby County than any other project yet attempted.

It seems to the writer, an especially opportune time to take advantage of the "three-way" plan for financing the highway. Its value to every citizen is inestimable. Make your arrangements to be in Columbiana on next Monday, and with united effort, let's put it over the top.

Alabama Power Co. Pays School Taxes

Alabama Power Company Friday paid $330 514.65 in taxes assessed for the special educational trust fund of Alabama, to Henry S. Long, chairman of the state tax commission.

The payment covered the hydro-electric kilowatt hour tax assessed for the special educational fund.

From distributions over previous years, counties are expected to receive $200,000 for elementary and high schools with state institutions obtaining $130,000.

800 MEN WILL GET TO WORK ON PARK WITHIN FEW WEEKS

Orders for purchase of 11,000 acres of land in Northwest Shelby County at a cost of $102,578 arrived from Washington last Saturday as the Government's plans to develop a picturesque million-dollar recreation center 15 miles from Birmingham took definite shape.

Alabama officials of the Resettlement Administration immediately began exercising options obtained weeks ago, with the view of putting more than 800 men to work on the Oak Mountain Park project within a few weeks.

The park site, lying in a rugged, mountainous area which lends itself naturally to the development of a great forest park and game preserve, is two miles wide and 10 miles long and includes a section of Double Oak Mountain Range.

It is bounded on the southwest by the Birmingham-Montgomery Highway; on the northeast by the Florida Short Route; on the northwest by the Pelham-Leeds road, and on the southeast by a dirt road which connects the Montgomery Highway and the Florida Short Route.

A paved road to connect the Montgomery Highway with the Florida Short Route will be constructed, and a valley road will be built to make the site of Oak Mountain Lake easily available to motorists from either highway.

A lake, according to plans announced by the Resettlement Administration, will cover 150 acres and require a dam about 100 feet long.

Camp sites will be developed and cottages constructed for vacationers. Special camp facilities will be provided for organized groups of underprivileged boys and girls from Alabama's industrial sections.

There will be an administration building, a public pavilion, bath and boat houses, ball diamonds, tennis courts and other playing fields.

Other plans already approved call for roadside cleanup and firebreaks and forestry cleanup and reforestation.

Part of the park will be used for conservation of animal life. A pack of wolves now at large in the region will be captured at once by professional trappers assigned by Government agents.

In the park area there are a score of rangy peaks and the cabins will be built high enough to make them comfortable on the hottest days.

Resettlement officials and representatives of the National Park Service emphasized that the great park is to be developed primarily for the use of the "average" industrial family, whose members heretofore have found week-end excursions or Summer vacations too expensive.

Officials said a meuseum probably would be built in the park to preserve things of historical value found in the area.

A log cabin constructed in the park area 75 years ago by William Brasier and his bride will be left intact. Mr. Brasier now resides near Pelham and is seriously ill.

Families now living on the park site will be moved to homsteads on more fertile land.

Studiosis Club Holds Meeting Last Week

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The business meeting of the Studiosis Club last week was conducted by Mrs. F. H. Hardy, President. Miss Lillian Worley, of the Alabama College faculty gave a paper entitled "Alabama Indians". Miss Katherine Farrah, roprano, was heard in a group of selections accompanied by M. Ziolkowski, also of the college faculty.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses who were Mrs. C. G. Sharp, Mrs. T. H. Napier, Mrs. J. K. Harris, Miss Kate Jackson, Miss Hallie Farmer, Miss Alfreda Mosscrop and Miss Minnie L. Steckel.

Don't Guess But Know

Whether the "Pain" Remedy You Use is SAFE?

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

THE person to ask whether the preparation you or your family are taking for the relief of headaches is SAFE to use regularly is your family doctor. Ask him particularly about Genuine BAYER ASPIRIN.

He will tell you that before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin most "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as bad for the stomach and, often, for the heart. Which is food for thought if you seek quick, safe relief.

Scientists rate Bayer Aspirin among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and the pains of rheumatism, neuritis and neuralgia. And the experience of millions of users has proved it safe for the average person to use regularly. In your own interest remember this.

You can get Genuine Bayer Aspirin at any drug store — simply by asking for it by its full name, BAYER ASPIRIN. Make it a point to do this — and see that you get what you want.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Italy Is Outlawed by League of Nations, Austria and Hungary Objecting—Hauptmann's Death Sentence Upheld by Appeals Court.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

BECAUSE it was prosecuting an undeclared war on Ethiopia, Italy was condemned as a violator of the covenant of the League of Nations and virtually declared to be an outlaw against which economic and financial sanctions are to be applied. That was the decision of 52 members of the league in a memorable meeting of its assembly in Geneva. Three nations, Italy itself and Austria and Hungary, refused to associate themselves with the assembly's action. The Austrian and Hungarian representatives already had announced that they would not participate in any sanctions against Italy because of their political and economic relations with the Fascist government.

Baron Aloisi

If any of the nations concurring in the league's decision wishes to declare war on Italy, it now has the legal right to do so. The nature of the penalties to be imposed and the manner of procedure was to be determined by a committee including all members of the league council, except Italy, and all Italy's neighbor nations except Austria and Hungary.

The meeting of the assembly first heard an eloquent speech on Italy's behalf by her chief delegate, Baron Pompei Aloisi. He charged that the league had been unfair, that it had used "two weights and two scales" in its work, that it had acted against Italy where it did not act against Japan in the Manchurian crisis, that it did not even consider Italy's complaints against Ethiopia.

"Why not Japan?" he asked. "Why not Bolivia and Paraguay in the Chaco war? Why Italy?"

Before the decision nation after nation registered its adherence to the league covenant.

"I shall make only a brief declaration," said Pierre Laval of France. "France will face her obligations. I said this before the council. I repeat it before the assembly. The covenant is our international law."

"Action must now be taken," said Anthony Eden of Great Britain. "I declare the readiness of his majesty's government to take full part in such action."

Vladimir Potemkin of Russia announced that his government was determined to fulfill its obligations. Switzerland also emphasized its willingness to participate.

"No other delegation has asked to speak," said President Benes quietly. "I interpret the silence of all as indicating the concurrence of their governments with the opinion of the members of the council. The assembly will place this on record."

Austria and Hungary cannot of themselves supply Mussolini with much in the way of raw materials for war; but there is the chance that he may receive, through those countries, materials from Germany if the neutrality proclaimed by Hitler does not prevent. Already the big packing companies of Brazil have suspended negotiations for the sale of 22,000 tons of meat to Italy, and Greece has stopped the shipment of donkeys to the Italian armies. The economic sanctions also will put an end to much of Italy's export trade, as well as her imports.

MAKING good on his threats and promises, Benito Mussolini sent his armies crashing across the border of Ethiopia, starting a war that gave all Europe the jitters. Under the command of Gen. Emilio De Bono, chief of the Italian colonial armies, the Italian troops laboriously advanced from Eritrea, crossing the Mareb river frontier and capturing Adigrat and other towns that had already been practically ruined by bombardment from planes. The immediate objective was Aduwa, the scene of the terrific Italian defeat 39 years ago. After several days of hard fighting against the defending Ethiopians, who lost probably 2,000 killed, the invaders marched into Aduwa, and considered that the disgrace of 1896 had been avenged. The Italian soldiers of General Marivigna's command entered first, carrying to the principal square and there erecting a big stone monument inscribed "To the fallen heroes of Aduwa."

Gen. De Bono

Italy officially announced that all of Tigre province was in Italian hands, and at the same time her columns were advancing into Ethiopia from the south and east, with the city of Harrar and the country's one railway as their objective. Squadrons of bombing planes were flying here and there, destroying towns and killing many of the inhabitants.

Recent reports from Addis Ababa said the Italian minister, whose departure had been requested by the emperor, announced that the Italian forces in the north sector had occupied the holy city of Aksum, the ancient capital of the queen of Sheba. There was no resistance, and the Ethiopians saved their sacred relics.

The king of kings asked that other Italian legation officials depart with the minister. The legation, he declared, had kept its radio communications in use after being requested to desist.

In Rome it was announced that Mussolini would retort by giving passports to the members of the Ethiopian legation and would launch a new drive toward Addis Ababa.

Ethiopian cavalry made a daring raid into Eritrea, killing some Italians and capturing others; but there was a report that a son-in-law of the emperor and another Ethiopian general lost their lives in this operation.

FIRST giving assurance, in his speech at San Diego, that the United States would not be drawn into any foreign war, President Roosevelt issued two important proclamations. One proclaimed the embargo on all shipments of war material to the belligerent nations. The other warned Americans that travel on Italian or Ethiopian vessels would be at their own risk. Since Ethiopia has no shipping, the latter proclamation was directed solely against Italy. In yet another statement the President reversed our national policy by declaring that Americans who engage in "transactions of any character" with either of the warring nations "will do so at their own risk." In the past the United States has argued for the right of neutral citizens and commerce to "freedom of the seas."

The task of preventing shipment of American arms and munitions to Italy and Ethiopia was undertaken by the coast guard and customs service.

UNANIMOUS decision of the New Jersey court of errors and appeals is that Bruno Richard Hauptmann was given a fair trial on the charge of murdering Col. Charles Lindbergh's baby son; that his conviction was in accordance with the evidence and that his death sentence was legal. Every contention raised by the defense was overruled. In its opinion the court said:

Bruno Hauptmann

"Our conclusion is that the verdict is not only not contrary to the weight of the evidence, but one to which the evidence inescapably led. . . . From three different and, in the main, unrelated sources the proofs point unerringly to guilt—viz:

"(a) Possession and use of the ransome money.

"(b) The handwriting of the ransom notes.

"(c) The wood used in the construction of the ladder."

Hauptmann's attorneys immediately began preparations for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Their only way is to ask that tribunal for a review of the New Jersey court's action.

To prevent the death sentence being carried out while such a petition was pending in the Supreme court, it would be necessary to have a "stay of execution" issued by the New Jersey courts or by a justice of the United States Supreme court. If a review is denied the case will be closed and Hauptmann probably will die in the electric chair late in November or early in December.

GREECE changed back from a republic to a monarchy overnight in a bloodless coup d'etat engineered by the royalists in the armed forces. Led by Gen. George Kondylis, the army officers demanded that Premier Tsaldaris immediately proclaim restoration of the monarchy. He refused and resigned, and a new government with Kondylis as premier took hold. This former minister of war then forced out President Zaimis, abolished the republican constitution, decreed the restoration, and was named regent by the national assembly pending the return of King George II, who was called back from exile. Though the change of form of government thus seemed completed, the assembly directed that a plebiscite on the question be held November 3, and in London the Greek king's equerry said George would await the result of this vote.

QUITE inadvertently, Secretary of the Navy Swanson revealed the fact that our government is preparing to take part in another naval conference in London within three months. Mr. Swanson, replying to some question at his press conference, said he would send Admiral William H. Standley, chief of operations, to the London meeting as the navy's representative because of his good work at the last conversations on naval limitation. It is supposed the naval powers will try to formulate a limitation program which would take the place of the treaties that are to be terminated January 1, 1937.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington. — American admirals and naval aviators of course are all hoping that Great Britain and Italy will not become involved in a war—but—if they do, they will be watching with great interest to see how Mussolini's terrific air force comes out with the superior British navy.

Britain's attempt—regarded as certain if she keeps on her present course—to blockade Italy, and close the Suez canal will as surely be followed by attempts by the Italian air force to bomb the British fleet out of the water.

Which is highly interesting to Gen. William Mitchell and naval aviators, on the one hand, and practically all American admirals, on the other. Since shortly after the European war, they have been fighting this question of how important the air force was, and primarily whether a battleship can live against an air attack in force.

Mitchell's part in this wordy encounter is chiefly remembered because he refused to recognize any limitations on his public utterances. It will be recalled that he was finally court martialed and convicted in 1925 after he had denounced the high command as guilty of "treason." Hardly anybody could be found to agree with that word "treason," whether they agreed with Mitchell on the idea that battleships were obsolete or not.

But on the main points of the fight a great many military aviators, both army and navy, agreed absolutely with Mitchell, always recognizing that he purposely made his attacks as sensational as possible so as to attract public attention.

Naval aviators, in particular, however, have been gagged ever since by the mechanics of the navy's promotion system. Every so often a board of senior officers considers the list of officers of various ranks. It picks out those it considers eligible for promotion. All promotions are made from this list. The selection board is changed every time, but if an officer is passed over twice, normally, he might just as well give up. He will not be promoted. His career is ruined.

Why They Are Mum

Now remember that virtually all the admirals believe in battleships, and regard airplanes, for the most part, as mere adjuncts. And remember that a given percentage of younger officers in any grade must be passed over in the selection processes. And it becomes clear why very few young aviation enthusiasts in the navy speak their minds in public. They cannot afford to antagonize the men who will be passing on their eligibility for promotion.

But if worst comes to worst in the Mediterranean, the ability of the airplane and the submarine to crush the surface ships will be demonstrated beyond any power of argument, or the old battleships, so dear to the admirals, will vindicate their faith in it.

Incidentally if the admirals win, it will be just too bad for Mussolini. Their contention has always been that the airplane was splendid for scouting, and annoying the enemy—much as the cavalry used to be in Civil war days, when Jeb Stuart raided all the way around the federal army, which was highly spectacular and profitable in captured supplies, but did not change the character of the war very much.

After everything else is swept away in the fighting, the admirals contend, the battleships will still be floating, and still able to hurl destruction-dealing broadsides. Their masts will have been torn away by bombs dropped by planes. Their hulls will be leaking in various compartments from torpedoes fired by submarines. But they will still be on the job, and—and here is the brunt of their argument—nothing else will.

If they are right, Italy will be blockaded—the Suez will be closed—Mussolini will be unable to send supplies to his African legions. If they are wrong, nobody knows what the answer will be. Always assuming that in the early clashes the tremendously superior Italian air force crushes the British air force.

Cotton a Trouble Maker

Cotton is apt to produce tense diplomatic situations again, with fears, that the United States may be forced into a world war, just as it did in the early days of the 1914 conflict. It will be far more important than wheat, for the simple reason that the United States this year has no wheat of consequence to sell. In fact, it will probably buy some from Canada. Copper may be the runner-up to cotton as a trouble maker, thus curiously enough effecting a possible combination of the West and South in another political alliance.

This situation is far more serious than the news from Washington or anywhere else has indicated. It is glossed over the word "sanctions" in reports from Geneva, Paris and London. Stripped of diplomatic language, consider just what it will mean if France, as Washington expects, goes along with Britain in applying league sanctions to Italy.

It means nothing else but a virtual blockade of Italy. Not just for goods declared to be contraband of war, but everything. It means that the United States, even in its own ships, could not send a pound of cotton or a piece of machinery or a basket of food to Naples and Genoa. It means that every American ship traversing the Mediterranean would be crossing a war zone, with all the possibilities that act involves.

Which presents a very tough nut for President Roosevelt to crack. Either way he moves means trouble, either foreign or domestic.

Save that he has made it clear he has no intention of seeking to put the United States in the League of Nations, President Roosevelt has stuck rather closely to the Woodrow Wilson policies. Two of these were freedom of the seas and international cooperation for the preservation of peace. On the last, of course, Wilson was willing to go the whole way. He opposed a senate reservation to Article X, saying that article was the "heart of the covenant" of the league. Article X was the one which promised that every league member would contribute armed forces to enforce league decisions. It is still a part of the league covenant!

May Have to Choose

But the point is that Roosevelt will be forced to choose, unless the Italo-Ethiopian situation clears up most unexpectedly, between two of those policies. He may choose freedom of the seas, and insist on America's right to trade with Italy even if the league proclaims a blockade under the guise of sanctions. Or he may choose cooperation to preserve peace.

The first would lead to an extremely dangerous international situation. It might easily involve the United States in war. Even the contention that we had the right to trade with Italy would put this country in a curious and difficult diplomatic hole. For it would be contended by league members that their action would force peace very shortly—that Italy could not possibly continue her aggressive war if blockaded—cut off not only from supplies from abroad but from supplying her forces waging the war. Hence that the action of the United States would be the one thing that made possible the continuance of the war the world is so anxious to avert.

To take the other course would cause vast resentment among those anxious to see the price of cotton boosted, and the surplus of cotton which has been hanging over the market since the Hoover days, sold at a profit.

If this seems unlikely, one has only to remember 1915. Great Britain put cotton on the black list. She knew it was being used to make explosives. But even before this official act she was interfering with shipments. So Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia made a long prepared speech coming very close to demanding war against Britain, on the side of Germany.

It was in reply to this that Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, referring to the Lusitania, commented that "a dead baby floating on the water is a more poignant sight to me than an unsold bale of cotton."

No New Taxes

President Roosevelt has definitely decided that there are to be no new taxes until after election. There are two motives for the recent budget statement attacking critics and saying there is no need for new taxes.

1. Politics. The President has learned of the increasing tax consciousness of the ordinary citizen, and of concern even by farmers as to where the money would be coming from to finance the New Deal. He is also concerned about the worry of business over tax prospects. For example, he has been told that one consideration holding back investment in new enterprises is the "play safe" attitude of rich men who are not willing to gamble when the government promises to take so large a proportion of the profit if they win, but does not help on losses if they lose. Change in the income tax laws, which permit deduction of only $2,000 for net losses in one year, is part of this.

2. Soldier Bonus. The President laid great emphasis on the point that this happy situation of no more taxes, despite gloomy prophesies by critics, can be attained only if there are no new expenditures. He was hitting directly at the soldier bonus, and at courts which will pass on the processing taxes.

He can play both reasons at the same time in January, when the bonus comes up in congress, by using the tax consciousness of the people as an argument to congress not to override his certain veto of bonus legislation.

Present study of the available figures indicates that the President is "holding out" about half a billion dollars, which will be unused on July 1 next, and, as congress provided for the availability of the four-billion-dollar fund for two years, this half billion can be used in the fiscal year beginning on that date.

But nobody thinks this will be enough for that fiscal year. Experts all agree that no upturn of business within reason is going to absorb all the three and a half million men who are to be on work relief projects. Hence there must be another work relief appropriation.

IT'S NOT IN MANY CEREALS

● Nothing anyone eats is more important than Vitamin B—the vitamin for keeping fit. Yet it isn't in many cereals, when cereals are supposed to be our best source of this food element.

Many are nervous, poor in appetite, system out of order, because their daily diets lack enough of the precious Vitamin B for keeping fit.

Few things keep them back like a lack of this protective food element.

So give everyone Quaker Oats every morning. Because in addition to its generous supply of Vitamin B for keeping fit, it furnishes food-energy, muscle and body-building ingredients. For about ½c per dish.

Start serving it tomorrow for a 2-weeks test. Quaker Oats has a wholesome, nut-like, luscious appeal to the appetite. Flavory, surpassingly good. All grocers supply it.

"She may have a houseful of kids by now," Lily, whose mind rather dwelt upon this subject, might suggest.

"Even if she had—!"

"Did you like Richard Stebbins, Gail?"

A quick twist at her heart. A quick memory of a man's ugly, fine face and slow smile. But Gail's voice would come quietly enough.

"Oh, very much.

"Even if I could account for Ariel, I couldn't account for him," she said once.

"Every family has some member in it that acts that way," Lily generalized shrewdly.

* * * * * * * *

In September Lily's daughter was born. Gail carried the newcomer down through the big open house to the kitchen, where she tremblingly wiped and oiled the mottled, writhing, weeping little scrap of womanhood.

"God grant that I don't hurt you, baby!" said the Second Gail Lawrence to the Third, aloud.

The baby did not die under her ministrations, anyway. She whimpered, as her waving little saffron arms were introduced into the microscopic shirt, but when Phil and Lily's mother came down, hot and anxious, half an hour later, the little Gail was sound asleep in her namesake's arms.

"She's real pretty, Phil!" said the grandmother proudly.

"Is she?"

"Well, she's jest as cute's she can be. I don't know's Lily's ever had a better-lookin' baby. She's got the Lawrence look, all right."

"Look at the Lawrence eyebrows, Phil."

"Gee, she's sleeping hard," Phil observed, in a half-amused, half-resentful tone.

"Lily all right?"

"I suppose so!" he muttered discontentedly. "My G—d!" he said, under his breath.

He went to sit on the doorsill, his chin in his hands, elbows resting on knees. There was the silence of a dreaming autumn Sunday afternoon in the house that had been ringing with agony for the last endless hour. Old Mrs. Crowley went through the room with an unsightly bundle of linen. She lingered on her way to the laundry tubs to smile at the youngest Lawrence.

"She looks kinder mad at the way she was treated—yes, she does! She says, 'Why did ye yank me 'round that way, and spank me good, when I ain't done nothing!'" crooned the toothless old washwoman. "How do, Mis' Wibser. How's all your folks?"

"All real well, thanks, Mis' Crowley. How's Hazel?"

"Hazel had a bad spell last Sunday—'twas a week ago."

"You'd oughter be glad you don't have to have 'em!" Mrs. Wibser said to Phil's still bowed and horrified back in the doorway. She chuckled.

"Look at her sleep—the darling," Gail murmured.

"I always say that if the men had to have 'em every other time, there'd only be two babies, his and then hers, and then no more!" old Mrs. Crowley said with relish.

"Ain't that true?" approved Mrs. Wibser.

"Wiff-waff, come here and see your sister!"

"It's about time you got married, Gail, and had a few of your own!"

"Children have to have an old maid aunt."

"What say?"

"I said that all children have to have an old maid aunt."

"Baby?" asked Riff-raff, at Gail's knee, with a solemn upward glance.

"Your baby sister."

"Mrs. Lawrence," Betty Crooks, sailing into the room in all her formal nurse's regalia, said authoritatively, "Mrs. Lawrence wants some one to go over to the Williamses' for the other children, and she said to tell you, Mr. Lawrence, that she feels fine and wants some tea!"

"Tea!" Phil echoed, outraged.

"Certainly. She feels fine, only she's sleepy. And she can have some tea before she goes off to sleep. Say," said Betty, who had been in school with Phil and Gail, "you aren't too tired to go up there and see her a minute?"

"Too tired, no!" Phil said dazedly. "But—but she doesn't want—you heard her—she feels as if I was to blame—"

"Oh, for goodness' sake, that was just at the finish!" Betty said wholesomely. "You go up and see her, and tell her I'm bringing up some tea!"

Phil, with one wild glance about, fled to the accompaniment of women's laughter.

"You're going to be lucky," Gail murmured to the child. "The girl that is born on the Sabbath day is wise and lucky and good and gay!"

The little, warm, pulpy hand held tightly, confidingly, to her finger. It seemed gripped already about her heart. There was a smell of household oils, of clean new flannels, of sweet baby dampness. The baby seemed to sag limply against her arm.

"You look like you could sit there forever, holdin' that child, Gail!"

"I feel as if I never wanted to let her go, Mrs. Wibser."

"They won't do that with every one," Mrs. Wibser said—"lay so quiet, and act so good! I'll bet you're goin' to think a sight of that baby."

"I'll bet I am," Gail said seriously.

"Well," said the old woman to her granddaughter, "you've started on a hard journey, young lady! Some day," she added to Gail, "some day she'll be tellin' folks, 'Why, yes, I was born in a place called Clippersville in California.' Ain't that funny?"

"Maybe life is just a succession of births," Gail thought.

"If they take 'The Bells of Saint Giles,'" she mused, "I'll go to New York for a visit."

A little laugh broke over the new baby's head. Gail's novel was barely begun; she did not know that it would ever be a novel. But still she thought: "If they really do take 'The Bells of Saint Giles,' I'll go to New York."

She loved to hold the baby at this time of the day, and when Lily was downstairs again and autumn was deepening, darkening into winter, five o'clock often found Gail, with her little namesake in her arms, rocking, gossiping in the old kitchen, while Lily bustled about the dinner-getting, and the little boys stuffed themselves on fresh-cut bread and peanut butter at the table.

"I'll thicken that stew, Lily."

"I don't mind anything," Lily would say, "as long as you'll keep that young one quiet. What used to drive me nearly crazy was when they'd all begin to squawk just as I'd get my hands into the dinner!"

"Keep her quiet!" Gail would laugh. Gail the Third was a very model of babyhood. Nobody ever had any trouble keeping her quiet.

The days grew shorter; it was dark now when Gail came home from the library at five o'clock. As she sat cuddling the baby she could see the oak branches tossing in the dusk of the yard and the leaves scurrying down. The snap of the wood in the old French range and the smell of toast and tea were very grateful now; there was a sense of coziness, of homeness about it.

At this hour she would often fall to dreaming. It was an hour in which to remember Edith, talking eagerly of poetry, of drama, of utopias and philanthropy, as she buttered pudding dishes and peeled apples—an hour that brought back Ariel, spoiled, petulant, beautiful, always to be excused and adored by her sisters. Ariel, willful and discontented, scolding, raging, threatening, and presently to be whisked, limp and pitiful, upstairs to be comforted and sponged and soothed to sleep.

Above all, in the winter twilights, with the soft lump of babyhood that was another Gail Lawrence in her arms, Gail dreamed of Dick and of the brief moment of romance that had somehow seemed to give her her true values in life. She had been playing, playing idly and superficially, with Van Murchison, and she had awakened to the full realization of what her heart needed, what her heart could give, just a moment too late.

It had been Ariel, all the time, for big, sober, quiet Dick. He had never seen Gail; she had never tried to help him find her.

But she knew in her heart, that she could have given him a thousand times what Ariel could give. Ariel must be changed indeed if she had become a helpful, tender mate for a struggling lawyer. Her restlessness, her haughty discontent, would not be cured by anything that Dick could provide for her. Ariel's ideal was not one of home making, of quiet and domesticity beside a fire. Hollywood—supposing them still to be in that neighborhood—would only inflame Ariel with a desire for luxury, fame, money.

It was almost three years now since that memorable Christmas day before Ariel's eighteenth birthday, when she and Dick had run away from them all. Gail had had two communications from her since; the first was the scribbled note she had left in her deserted bedroom, the note they had all read with such amazement and consternation; and the second had come a few months after Edith's death, and had been postmarked Phoenix, Arizona:

"Gail dear, I am so horribly sorry about darling Ede, but Gail she was happy. She was too good for this world and only would have had trouble and disappointment. I am well and so is Dick, and we are coming home soon to tell you all the news, so no more now except that I adore you."

It had been signed simply "Ariel," and had borne neither date nor address.

One day Gail had driven Phil's car, full of small boys, out to the Stanislaus ranch. It was prosperous now, and the Lawrence's money troubles, preposterous and unexpected as the situation seemed, were over. Phil was doing well, Gail had had a raise, the oil station paid its hundred a month faithfully, and that money Phil handed over untouched to his sister.

The remains of the once magnificent Lawrence estate were divided; the old house was Phil's, the corner had been surveyed and measured and given to Gail, the Stanislaus property was wholly for Sam and Ariel. Rent went monthly into the bank in Ariel's maiden name. Sam paid his board to Lily.

Gail looked at the old ranch wistfully. She had dreamed once a brief dream of coming there with Dick, of being mistress of these acres of orchard and pasture and wheat fields.

They could have been happy there, living in the moon-faced old farmhouse, under the great towering oaks and eucalyptus trees, surrounded by a tangle of sheds and fences, corrals and pastures, barns and fowl runs. They would have had children, would have driven into town in an old car, stopped for mail, for feed, for needles and egg beaters and ink at the five-and-ten. Dick would have had cases in the big courthouse in the shady square, where scared little Ariel had been summoned years ago, and Gail would have gone into the library to ask the girl at the desk for the new novels.

And on Sundays they would have telephoned Phil and Lily to ask what the chances were of a picnic up at the old dam. It was going to be hot today, and the children would love to get near to the water. Gail had cold chickens and tomatoes. If Lily would stop for cake somewhere. . . .

"I might have had a boy and a girl by this time. But certainly I wouldn't have had time for any writing. There's that to think about! . . . Dick, I'd give up the chance of writing another Iliad to have had you love me, to have been Mrs. Dick Stebbins these three years."

Gail was twenty-seven now, and the birthdays were coming faster and faster. Men had wanted her, some of them fine men, men who could have given her at least the position Dick's wife would have had. But Gail was barely conscious of their existence. She was only vaguely regretful when she had to hurt or disappoint them.

At twenty she might gladly have accepted any one of them, and made a success of it, too. At twenty-seven they found her coldly kind. She was very happy, living in the old house with that preposterous wife of Phil's, and the children, and her brothers, and the characters in her books. Her blue eyes would be almost absent-minded under the faintly knitted, heavy Lawrence brows as she explained that she was not going to marry anyone.

It just did not seem to mean anything, marrying anyone else than Dick, and until it did, Gail would not consider it.

But sometimes she did consider the strangeness of the situation should Dick and Ariel come back to Clippersville. They would never know that this brother-in-law was shrined deep in Gail's heart. They need never know. But it would be hard—it would be hard to see him, to have him kiss her in fraternal fashion, to hear Ariel complaining of his treatment of his new clothes and of the care of his children!

Once, after Edith's death, Gail had written a simple, friendly letter to Dick's mother, trusting the post office to forward it to her in Oregon, where she lived now with a widowed daughter. Did Mrs. Stebbins know just where Dick was now? Gail had asked. She, Gail, had a book that he had wanted—and so on—and so on.

And Mrs. Stebbins had answered, in a painful hand, on ruled paper, that Dick was just about the worst letter writer that ever was; he had been some in L. A., and after that up to Las Vegas, and last she heard he was in Phoenix for three weeks, but he was coming home, according to what he wrote, and just as soon as he did Mrs. Stebbins would see he wrote Gail. Seemed like he had lost sight of his old friends.

There was no mention of Ariel or Dick's marriage in either letter. Gail had not dared risk the secret, and either Mrs. Stebbins had been equally cautious, or Dick had not taken his mother into his confidence.

Gail suspected, as the months wore along, that there was but one adequate explanation of Dick's and Ariel's silence. They were not happy; the impulsive marriage that had found her so young had proved a mistake. They were quarreling, perhaps already separated. The secret would remain always a secret—no one would ever know. And perhaps Ariel would come home some day, bitter and disillusioned, and take her old unhappy place in Clippersville society.

"Poor Ariel, poor Dick, poor all of us!" Gail would think. "It's hard to clasp air and kiss the wind forever! I can be a writer, I suppose. I certainly mean to make myself one, if work and trying will do it. But it would have been wonderful—wonderful, to be a wife!"

CHAPTER XI

One rainy October afternoon Lily and the three older children were delayed at her mother's house down on Thomas Street hill, the shabby cabin light-hearted Gail and Edith and Ariel Lawrence had once so despised, and Gail found herself writing alone in the big house with the tiny Gail.

Sam traveled up and down the coast now, doing press-agent work for a string of vaudeville theaters, and was as often in Portland or in Los Angeles as at home in Clippersville.

Tonight Gail half expected him, and half-expected that when Phil discovered his family's absence he would drive at once to the Wibser house and bring them all back. Meanwhile, in a rainy twilight that made the lights and shadows of the old kitchen more than usually pleasant, she fussed away contentedly with preparations for her own supper tray, for although the clock said only half-past five, this was a special night at the library, and she had to go back for a directors' meeting.

Wholewheat toast neatly buttered, thin hot tea, a piece of Lily's applesauce cake, and the remains of the corned-beef hash reheated and browned in a pan, and Gail felt herself ready for a feast.

Suddenly she heard a motor car on the old side drive, and heard the engine stop and a car door slam. Then there were footsteps on the porch, and the handle of the kitchen door turned. A second later, as Gail turned an inquiring glance that way and said aloud, "Phil?" the door swung open, and the dimly lighted aperture framed a woman's slender figure.

Lesson for October 20

THE MESSAGE OF JEREMIAH

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 7:1-26.

GOLDEN TEXT—Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people. Jeremiah 1:23.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What Jeremiah Said.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jeremiah's Stirring Message.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Doing What God Commands.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Will of God for Our Times.

The prophet stood in the gate of the temple in order that the multitudes might hear him. The occasion was the coming together of the people from all over the country to attend a feast. From this place of prominence Jeremiah called the people to obedience.

I. What God Requires (vv. 1-7).

1. Amend your ways (v. 3). This means that their course of living should be reformed by exchanging bad deeds for good ones. On the basis of this change God would permit them to remain in their city and country. Failure to comply with this demand would eventuate in their expulsion.

2. Personal experience (v. 4). The people regarded the temple as a charm against evil, irrespective of the condition of their hearts. Without a heart experience, the most sacred institution and ordinances are valueless. Trusting in religious forms while lacking a vital experience is the height of folly.

3. Social justice (v. 5). The proof of their having reformed was the execution of justice between man and his neighbor. The evidence of one's being in touch with God is his fair dealing with his fellow men.

4. Not to oppress the helpless (v. 6). The stranger would likely be ignorant of the laws of the land. The widows and orphans would usually be imposed upon. Protection and defense of the weak is a sure sign of godliness.

5. Not walk after other gods (v. 6). The worship of idols and conformity to heathen customs go hand in hand. True morality is determined by the individual's attitude toward God.

II. Some Solemn Warnings (vv. 8-15).

1. The teachings of false prophets (vv. 8-11). These false prophets taught the people that attention to ceremony and observance of religious form exempted them from strict attention to morals. Those who heeded the words of the lying prophets did not hesitate to steal, murder, commit adultery, swear falsely, and practice idolatry. They would even come into the Lord's house and claim freedom to practice such abominations. The sacred temple itself, filled with such worshippers, would be a den of robbers.

2. By the destruction of Shiloh (vv. 12-15). God caused his tabernacle to be set up in Shiloh, but in Eli's time he gave it into the hands of the Philistines because of the idolatry of the people (Ps. 78:56-60). The prophet declared that God would do even so with the temple, the city and the whole country. This he had already done with Israel and the northern kingdom.

III. The Hopeless Condition of the People (vv. 16-20).

Their propensity to do evil was so strong that all efforts at reclamation were futile.

1. Pray not for them (v. 16). There is such a thing as sinning unto death, in which case prayer is useless (v. 16; cf. I John 5:16).

2. Entire families devoted their energies to that which provoked God's anger (vv. 17-19). This was done by young and old, men and women. They did it with the definite purpose to provoke God's anger. The prophet assured them that the outcome of such conduct would be their utter confusion.

IV. Judgment Sure to Fall (v. 20).

Because the people poured out their offerings to idols, the furious anger and wrath of God would be poured out upon men, beasts, trees and the fruit of the ground. How this has been fulfilled the history of the Jews makes clear.

V. Obedience to God Better than Sacrifice (vv. 21-26).

The prophet appealed to history to show that God requires heart service rather than the observance of religious forms. Blessings came to Israel through obedience, while cursings followed disobedience. On condition of obedience to his requirements God promised to own them as his people and to bless them.

The Seventh Wave

The man who waits for some seventh wave to toss him on dry land, will find that the seventh wave is a long time coming. You can commit no greater folly than to sit by the roadside until someone comes along and invites you to ride with him to wealth or influence.—J. B. Gough.

Conciliation

The essence of all fine breeding is in the gift of conciliation. A man who possesses every other title to our respect, except that of courtesy, is in danger of forfeiting them all. A rude manner renders its owner always liable to affront. He is never without dignity who avoids wounding the dignity of others.—Lytton.

Duty

He who in questions of right, virtue or duty sets himself above all ridicule

Uncle Sam's Man Hunters Generally Get Their Men

In the federal case books there are no old mysteries; every federal crime is sooner or later cleared up. It is not fair to contrast their record with that of the average city police department, since the government men are not fretted by the great mass of petty crimes and misdemeanors which take up the time of the metropolitan detectives. Even the major crimes of violence are far less numerous against national laws than against state laws. (For instance, murder in itself is not a federal offense.) Federal penalties, moreover, are severe, and federal judges stern and aloof. Only the most daring and resourceful criminals of the underworld care to break a lance with Uncle Sam's man hunters.

But conceding that the federal detectives have fewer crime mysteries to solve and have unlimited resources behind them, still, the nation may well glory in their record. The federals are actually so few in number. The government's six principal detective offices—the ones that handle all the major crime cases—number only about three thousand operatives in all. Only three thousand men to curb some of the most violent impulses of a mixed population of one hundred and twenty-two million!—Forrest Wilson in Cosmopolitan.

World's Most Famous Babies Eat Oatmeal

The Dionne Quintuplets, wards of the King, eat the same cereal that is eaten by millions of babies who don't get their names in the papers—oatmeal. The Canadian government chose a staff of special experts for the care of the Quints. And these experts, their scientific knowledge endorsing the instinctive choice of mothers the world over, have chosen oatmeal for the cereal of the famous five.

Oatmeal, eminent medical authorities agree, has an abundance of everything a child's cereal should have—body-building minerals, muscle-building protein, and the supremely important Vitamin B for keeping fit.

Food science says that Vitamin B is the best safeguard against those dangerous enemies of childhood—nervousness, constipation, and poor appetite due to lack of that vitamin in the diet.

KINGDOM NEWS

Mrs. Frank Ingram, of Kingdom community, entertained with a miscellaneous shower, Saturday afternoon, October 12th, honoring Mrs. Leo Crumpton, a bride of a few months, and who is remembered to her many friends as Miss Vida Stone, of Wilsonville. The house was decorated with lovely vases of dahlias, fern and lilies, which added to the brightness of the occasion. The bride was lovely dressed in green crepe. Mrs. Frank Moon, a bride of one week presided over the bride's book. The guests registered thirty-five. Mrs. Ingram entertained in her gracious manner with games and contests. Mrs. Braxton Mooney and Mrs. Alfred Ingram won the contestant prizes.

Mrs. Clifford Duncan with her guitar made some special music for the occasion, after which little Melba Jean and Rachel Albertine Ingram pulled a wagon loaded with many lovely, and useful gifts in to the bride. Mrs. Clyne Boaz and Mrs. Frank Moon unwrapped the gifts and displayed them to the guest. Then everyone was invited into the dining room and served cake, hot chocolate and coffee. The guests departed declaring an evening of real pleasure and wishing to this young couple much happiness throughout the journey of life. Mr. and Mrs. Crumpton will make their home in Leeds, Ala.

Auto Death Toll Reaches New High

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Census Bureau counted 1934's automobile death toll at 33,980 Sunday, a 15 per cent gain over 1933, and "a new all-time high."

It averaged the death rate at 26.9 persons out of every 100,000. In 1933 the rate was 23.3. In 1934, in addition, 1,789 persons were killed in collisions between automobiles, railroad trains and street cars.

Later figures covering 86 major cities for the 52 weeks ended September 28th, have indicated the death rate was continuing upward in 1935.

Farm Boys Offered Production Loans

AUBURN, Ala.—A new program for farm boys in 4-H clubs, FFA chapters, and other organized agricultural student groups to finance crop and livestock projects of their own is announced by the Farm Credit Administration.

The plan makes it possible for organized groups of farm boys to grow crops or raise livestock under the direction of a vocational teacher, county agent, or other responsible group leader.

The urgent need for nitrate of soda for explosives during the World War led to the establishment of our own nitrate of soda industry. The famous plant at Hopewell, Virginia, was completed in 1929.

FARM NOTES

Census report shows that there were 3,398 bales of cotton ginned in Shelby County from the crop of 1935 prior to October 1, as compared with 2,166 bales ginned to October 1, crop of 1934.

The ammonia equivalent of nitrogen may be found by multiplying the nitrogen figure by 1.2158. Thus the guaranteed 16% nitrogen content of American nitrate of soda is equivalent to 19.45% ammonia. Actually, however, the nitrogen content and correspondingly the ammonia content is usually in excess of the guaranty.

The Alabama Experiment Station recommends that farmers use a great deal more nitrogen. In addition to top and side-dressing, farmers should use a mixed fertilizer with plenty of nitrogen in it.

The first sulphate of ammonia made in the United States was produced in 1893.

HAPPINESS.

"Which is the road to Happiness?
Asked a youth of a bent old man—
I've heard that you are very wise—
So, tell me if you can".

The old man's face grew brighter
His wisdom to portend,
As he answered, "Son, it's any road
That is trod beside a FRIEND".

So, we again pause amid the busy hum of a work-a-day world, to offer sincere gratitude for thoughtful friends who have, by their many kind expressions, brightened our days during this week, and brought to us that ever elusive thing called—HAPPINESS.

Our thanks for beautiful potted ferns and plants, are offered to Mrs. T. K. Roberts and Miss Agnes Wingard. The office this winter will be a brighter and a happier place in which to continue the daily grind incident to a newspaper, on account of this lovely "color" scheme these ever green plants afford. To Mrs. J. L. Davis, we are indebted for a vase containing "The Last Rose of Summer"—possibly more carefully cherished because we knew it would soon be gone. However, its beauty lingers in that cloistered spot known as—Memory's Garden. To Mrs. J. M. Leonard and Mrs. Noland Barnett, we proffer sincere appreciation for the loveliest dahlias we have seen this season. For letters and renewal subscriptions bespeaking continued interest, we are always thankful, and this week has brought us a long looked for "lucky break". Thanks again to FRIENDS who made it possible.

Jatie Lawrence Longshore, of Birmingham, noted pianist and violinist spent Monday in Columbiana. Mrs. Longshore will be happily remembered here by both pupils and friends, for she taught in Shelby County High School for a number of years before moving to Birmingham. In addition to her full musical schedule in the Magic City, Mrs. Longshore has a large class of violin and piano pupils in Clanton, Alabama.

If Mayor Harry Gordon wears as many "feathers in his cap" as projects he has successfully manipulated recently for Columbiana, he will be "well-plumed" for the winter. The latest improvement for Columbiana which has been approved is a WHITE WAY for the business section. Work will begin immediately. A little "light on this dark subject" will be one of the most welcomed improvements for Main Street yet attempted. So it is HURRAH again for MAYOR GORDON. We heard a prominent financier in Birmingham say last week, if the Magic City had a Mayor like Harry Gordon, Birmingham would have had half the Federal projects on the "All States" program, already copped for Jefferson County. Whatever it "takes to get it— HARRY GORDON has it". And we say—Amen and Amen—and "more power to him".

"Fully 90% of Americans are still strong for President Roosevelt" says John Clark, political writer in The Washington Post, after completing an extensive trip which took him from the Atlantic Coast to the Rocky Mountains. ROOSEVELT certainly has our little "curbstone O. K."

An announcement from the Managers of the new Columbiana Picture Theatre states they will probably be ready for opening by November 1st. When this up-to-date movie Theatre swings wide its doors to Columbiana and surrounding territory, patrons will have the privilege of seeing one of the prettiest as well as modernly equipped and comfortable theatres in the state. Watch for details next week!

Hon John J. Haynes, of Montgomery, Alabama, Assistant Attorney General, and former beloved resident of Columbiana, will address the Men's Bible Class at the Baptist Church on next Sunday morning at 9:45.

Franklin Norris, Jr., of Station WBJY, Gadsden, Alabama, spent the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Norris, in Columbiana.

It has been said by medical men and psychologists that in a moment of acute anger the nicest person may kill someone. When the cog slips into place a minute later, the remorse is terrific. There are many times when human minds seem to slip a cog and WORDS are hastily spoken with little thought to their truthfulness or consideration for the other person's feelings in the matter. Perhaps it is just the human mind slipping a cog—and the readjustment period will come later. At any rate, we will put it down as "simply out of gear"—and let it go for what it may be worth.

The Democrat considers itself fortunate in having secured thhe services of Frank MacKnight to write the sport news from Shelby County High School. Young Mr. MacKnight inherits a great deal of originality and journalistic ability from his late grand-father, H. K. MacKnight, who was Editor of the Sentinel for a number years in Columbiana. A promising future is predicted for this brilliant young student and writer.

Next best to going to a real honest to goodness reception in the Magic City, is being the recipient of a lovely corsage worn at the party. Our thanks for this charming courtesy and beautifully combined corsage of sweetheart roses and forget-me-nots, go to Mildred Curlee, who thoughtfully remembered our intense love for flowers, and "carted" home her corsage from one of the many parties which she attended, given by friends of Myrtice Acker in the Magic City honoring this charming bride elect who will be married on October 22, to Dr. E. B. Cooper, of Columbiana. Miss Acker is a sister of Mrs. Curlee and has often been a popular guest in the Curlee home.

A. E. (Bud) Norwood, of Calera, was a visitor in Columbiana on Monday. Mr. Norwood is successfully engaged in buying and selling livestock. We refer you to his advertisement elsewhere in this current issue of the Democrat. We also tender thanks for a thoughtful and friendly call in the office which we enjoyed. Happy-go-lucky "Bud" is a rather good tonic for a "Blue Monday"! Bring the "Mrs." next time, "Bud". We haven't had the pleasure of welcoming her in Columbiana in many moons.

The Cooke Players are entertaining crowded houses in Columbiana this week. See their feature play on Friday night.

Did you know Columbiana was soon to have an up-to-date Picture Show? Watch this paper for complete details.

Did you know that Mayor Gordon motor-paraded Main Street arrayed in his handsome dressing gown on Sunday morning, proudly displaying a telegram stating the entire Airport project had been approved for Columbiana? With this project there is included a Municipal Swimming Pool, Club House, Golf Links et cetera. No where to go? Did we hear you say? Just wait until Oak Mountain Park opens up, the new Picture Show blazes forth with a first run cinema, and the Airport projects become a reality. And last but by no means lleast, the new paved highway from Bibb County to St. Clair County line becomes a permanent monument to all progressive thinkers for the future development of ye old Shelby County! Do not forget to attend the Mass Meeting to be held in Columbiana on October 21st. Come on in and express yourself. Forget individual advancement and work for the good of the COUNTY! Everything and everybody is on the "up and up"! Better join in the procession and lets make it UNANIMOUS.

"When you are no longer criticized you have finished, and the world will speedily forget you"——H. M. H.

We call your attention to the advertisement of The Birmingham Post and other nationally known magazine combinations in this issue of the Democrat. If you are contemplating subscribing for any of the periodicals listed, we refer you to James Leonard, Jr., of Columbiana, who is the Rural Representative of the Post, and who gives to his wide territory a service of promptness and courtesy which is largely responsible for his successfully handling The Birmingham Post's interest in Shelby County for the past few years.

When Mr. Leonard calls to deliver your Post, talk over with him your reading requirements, and give him your order for the magazines you prefer. It is not too early to begin thinking of Christmas gifts. Nothing can give more pleasure through the year than a subscription for your favorite magazines.

At a meeting of the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Church in Columbiana on Sunday evening, the following members were elected to serve for the coming year: Dr. James H. Crawford, Chairman; J. L. Davis, Vice-Chairman; W. L. Christian, Secretary; Howard Whittaker, Treasurer; J. R. White, J. W. McGiboney, B. J. Owen, A.. A. Lauderdale, Gerald Fulton, Dr. E. B. Cooper, S. A. Lokey and E. H. Childs.

The Columbiana P.-T. A. is going to give a Hallowe'en party at the High School, Thursday night, October 31st. Plans are being perfected, and some of the main features will be the crowning of the Hallowe'en queen; prize for the most original Hallowe'en costume; the awarding of a beautiful embossed cake and a grand prize of two dollars and a half in money. Other features will include the House of Horrors, fortune telling, and don't forget there will be lots of candy, peanuts, popcorn and hot dogs on sale. Start saving your money now, and don't forget the date—Thursday, October 31st.

Mussolini at the Phone
Who Is the Man?
No Fear in Vatican City
A Shot at a Bird

Something new in war is Mussolini sitting in his office at the Palazzo Venezia in Rome, talking on a short-wave radio telephone with Gen. Emilio de Bono, his commander-in chief in Ethiopia. Mussolini should have been photographed as he received the message, "We have just taken Aduwa, where 8,000 of our colonial troops, 6,000 of our Italian troops, were killed 40 years ago, and Italy humiliated." That was a proud moment in Mussolini's life.

Arthur Brisbane

After Mussolini gets the news by radio-telephone he telephones it to the Italian king's summer residence.

For a change from war, consider this incident. Before the entrance to the "Recess club" frequented by Wall Street's "Who's Who," stood George C. Haigh, banker; Matthew S. Sloan, who used to run New York's electric light and now runs the "Katy" railroad, a learned friend of Mr. Sloan's and this writer.

Mr. Sloan said, with finality that marks greatness, "Mr. Blank," mentioning the name of a well-known Republican candidate, "will be elected in 1936." Your narrator buttonholed the first man passing, a Wall Street denizen, well-dressed, asked him "Who is Mr. Blank?" mentioning the name of Mr. Sloan's candidate.

"Never heard of him, don't know who he is. Who is he?" the pedestrian replied and went on. Of the next ten, nine would have said, similarly, "Never heard of him," but all ten would have heard of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Republicans must take somebody whose name is known if they can find him; failing that, they would do well to select him now and see to it that his name is known before election day comes around.

Despite possibilities of widespread bombing of cities if "that war in Europe" should come, Vatican City, ruled by the pope, does not consider anti-bomb defense necessary. Osservatore Romano, representing the Vatican, denies reports that shelters against air raids would be provided in Vatican City. It says:

"The Holy Father has reason to believe that the dome of St. Peter's, regardless of whatever the occasion might be, is the most inviolable defense, firstly, because of the celestial protection of the Prince of Apostles, for whom the dome is the sacred sign and symbol, and because its mass indicates so clearly the holy place, respected and venerated during the most obscure centuries."

That the magnificent building erected by Michelangelo, with his priceless statues and paintings within it, would be respected by even the most barbarous invader seems certain.

Little things start big things. Doctor Potter, formerly professor of political science in the University of Wisconsin, one of an international committee of four that tried to settle a quarrel between Italy and Ethiopia in 1934, says that Italy has good ground for complaint against Ethiopia, and that a soldier's casual shot at a bird probably caused the present trouble.

Mr. Joseph E. Uihlein, an able citizen of Milwaukee, who takes information with him on his travels and is therefore able to bring information back, returns from England with the impression that, despite greatly improved conditions in Britain, English and other Europeans are expecting something unpleasant to happen. What it is, where it will start, what will cause it, nobody is prepared to say, but there is a feeling of apprehension, a vague anticipation of some catastrophic event.

The President assures the nation that on this occasion America will not meddle with what does not concern it.

What will the United States do about selling food to Italy, if, through "sanctions," the League of Nations tries to starve out the Italians, as Germany was starved?

If a chain is no stronger than its weakest link the chain that makes up the human race is not strong.

Authorities in Java report fifty natives of New Guinea, including seventeen children, arrested as "head-hunters." They got the heads of two native women and ate the two women.

Mussolini spoke to twenty million Italians gathered in Italy's public squares, and to the people of the world. You could not mistake the meaning of that voice.

Newspaper men, gathered near the radio, said: "His voice made the shivers run up and down our backs, although we could not understand a word of it." Shivers do not often run up and down those backs.

The proper treatment for a bilious child

A cleansing dose today; a smaller quantity tomorrow; less each time, until bowels need no help at all.

ANY mother knows the reason when her child stops playing, eats little, is hard to manage. Constipation. But what a pity so few know the sensible way to set things right!

The ordinary laxatives, of even ordinary strength, destroy all hopes of restoring regularity.

A liquid laxative is the answer, mothers. The answer to all your worries over constipation. A liquid can be measured. The dose can be exactly suited to any age or need. Just reduce the dose each time, until the bowels are moving of their own accord and need no help.

This treatment will succeed with any child and with any adult.

Doctors use a liquid laxative. Hospitals use the liquid form. If it is best for their use, it is best for home use. The liquid laxative they generally use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Any druggist has it.

ITCHING SMARTING CRACKED

SKIN

BROKEN OUT PEELING SCABBY

For skin troubles—itch, cracking, smarting and scaling—there is nothing like Dr. Porter's Antiseptic Healing Oil. There may be fancier preparations but nothing that will do the work like this famous oil. It not only destroys the parasites that cause many skin troubles but, at the same time, helps heal the sore and damaged skin.

The most stubborn cases of itching and scaling skin that defy every other treatment usually yield to Dr. Porter's Antiseptic Healing Oil. Try it on your itching or broken out skin and see how effective it is. Dr. Porter's Antiseptic Healing Oil is made by the makers of Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine and sold by all druggists at 30c and 60c with guarantee of satisfaction or money back.

MILNESIA the Original MILK OF MAGNESIA WAFERS

Latest Millinery Style Trends

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THERE'S no such word as "can't" when it comes to finding a becoming hat. Yes, indeed you can. Somewhere in the vast showing of millinery fashions your hat is waiting for you, for there is simply no limit to variety of types that appear on the program of modish headgear this season.

To enumerate a few—there is the turban (very smart in Paris with high whimsical crowns and amusing veils) and the off-face types, especially the halo brims which Agnes launched at the first of the season. The Tyrolean sports effects top tall tweeds to perfection. These are notably in felt but they are really at their best in genuine Austrian velour trimmed with a jaunty multi-colored quill. Then there is the ever beloved beret answering "present" to the roll call. However it is a beret of many moods this season.

As to brims, it is the brim with the forward plunge, the brim that goes streamline right over the forehead, that carries a message of real importance, because it is distinctly new. Then, too, these brims fold up so as to hug the crown at the back, which makes them delightfully wearable with high coat collars.

New, too, is the peaked crown which is decidedly conical in shape. Usually a coil of velvet forms the turban headline for the pointed crown. As to more startling millinery news, bonnets and hoods are here to broadcast it to style-seeking enthusiasts who are looking for something "different."

In recording latest millinery style trends special highlights flash across the picture, such as the new braided effects done either in soutache or rattail. Gold cord and tassels, drum-major pompons bespeak the military influence which is so widely exploited.

As to the models illustrated, the little felt at the top to the left carries a Breton sailor brim, for Bretons are even more popular than they were. The crown is pressed in a novel way which is a characteristic feature of the newer hats. Note two ostrich tips.

If you are the type that looks well in the new halo brims, it's your good fortune for they are "it" this season. The one shown at the top to the right in the group, is velvet with bandeau of velvet ribbon. "Bow at the front" is a favorite theme among milliners at present.

Going to wear feathers on our hats? Three out of the half dozen models here pictured answer in the affirmative. A parrot with long tail feathers in brilliant red, yellow, blue and green graces the side of a black felt sports hat as centered in the picture. Pleats are pressed into the brim and crown.

The velvet hat in the lower left corner has gone military with its trimming of gold cord and tassel semi-circling the crown. It has the new forward brim.

The Mercury hat as shown to right below, of pleated felt simulating a feathered wing, is extremely smart. It's wine-colored felt.

Comes last, but not least, in the inset below the new baby bonnet which makes youth look fresh, coy and demure all at once. It is of black velvet and fits like a skull cap. Curled ostrich tips crest the crown.

WOOL-SLEEVED FUR

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's a smart new idea; one of those touches that tells at a glance that 'tis a high fashion. We are referring to the wool sleeves set into a swagger fur coat, as you will note if you look close. Soft gray flecked woolen and gray kidskin are beautifully combined in this stunning street ensemble. Note the high turnover cowl of the gilet, which is worn over the blouse for extra warmth on chilly days. The coat may be fastened high at the throat. Gray is regarded as one of the leading colors for fall.

Cellophane Flowers

A cluster of cellophane flowers which look as though they were made of glass is tucked into the collar of an evening wrap.

Bag and Gloves

An outstanding accessory rule this fall is for gloves and bag to match in color.

FURS OUTSTANDING ON STYLE PROGRAM

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

According to early season predictions furs will be the outstanding fashion note of the season, whether it's just an ascot or a full-length mink. The American woman is beginning to realize that furs are no longer luxuries, but are absolutely necessary to her wardrobe. The demand this year is tending more towards higher priced furs rather than for inferior unreliable types.

According to latest reports, mink, caracul and Persian lamb will be the most popular dress furs this season with Hudson seal, kidskin, leopard and leopard cat leading in the sports furs.

Paris couturiers are outdoing themselves in a most beautiful working of furs. Notably in the early showings is a white broadtail evening wrap, also a silver fox cape employing 12 skins of feather weight. Velvet trimmed with chinchilla is another intriguing treatment exploited.

With Paris style leaders featuring fur in every conceivable manner America has accepted the challenge with the result that during national fur week set for the near future furs will be dramatized in a way that will outclass all previous showings.

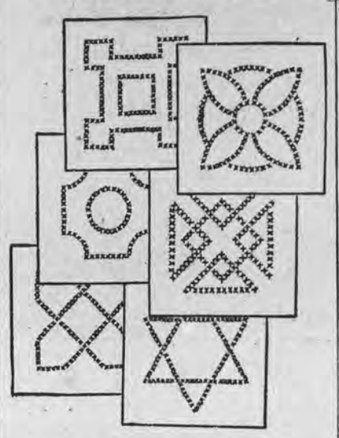
Revival of "Dog Collar" Heads New Autumn Ideas

Key-shaped bar pins and a revival in "dog collars" of the type worn by dowagers at the turn of the century head the list of new fall ideas in costume jewelry.

The key pins are shown in gold or silver hued metals of several styles. The 1935 version of the "dog collar" has a youthful air, with a definite appeal to the college girl without a sign of a double chin or wrinkled throat.



One style was of rhinestone studded links. Another was of three strands of pearls. The black velvet band in narrow or wide widths is back. One 2-inch velvet band had a large rhinestone ornament in front. A ½-inch band had a tiny rhinestone ornament in front and one in either side.

Flaring Collar

A charming dinner dress of black transparent velvet has wide flaring collar and cuffs of novelty white velvet. Fullness in the sleeves comes from shirring at the shoulders, and with shirring at the soft neckline.

CROSS-STITCH QUILT BLOCKS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Cross-stitch is about the simplest thing in handwork. Little girls make their stitches in cross-stitch. These six-inch blocks are stamped in cross-stitch designs on white muslin and little girls to grandmothers will enjoy making them into everything from small doilies to pillow tops, scarfs and bedspreads. Easy to carry around, working one at a time and then assembling into article wanted when all the squares are finished.

Outfit No. 46-4 consists of 6 of these six-inch stamped squares and will be mailed to you for 10 cents.

Arabic in Everyday Use

Housewives of the world use Arabic in everyday conversation, said Dr. Henry Farmer when he lectured at Glasgow university, Glasgow, on "Arabian Influence on Western Civilization," recently. "Housewives, for instance, scarcely imagine that when they talk of sugar, cotton, damask, taffeta, orange, muslin, lozenge and perhaps soap and the loofa, they are using Arabic words," he continued. "Men of learning use Arabic continually, probably without knowing it. In medicine, 'alcohol' and 'alembic' and hosts of other words are pure Arabic, and again, when astronomers speak of 'zenith' and 'nadir,' and mathematicians of 'algebra' and 'cipher,' they are using Arabic words."

OUR GLAMOROUS GIRLS NOT IN IT WITH OLD TIMERS

I do not think the modern girl is so devastatingly glamorous. Not by six city blocks as glamorous as the girls of a decade or so ago. In many quarters this will be regarded as the bleat of a chimney-corner curmudgeon but I stick to my guns. And repeat: The gals don't glam!

I can see a figurative rush to the roof-tops to shout rebuttal naming the fabulous Tallulah or that dewy drop from the Milky Way, Miriam Hopkins. Too, there are the wondrously wide-eyed Ilka Chase, the petulant and sinuous Myrna Loy and the off-key chanteuse, Ethel Merman. And Miss Hepburn.

Gorgeously beautiful and sweepingly entrancing all. I've sat in an aisle seat and watched Miss Bankhead caper and cart-wheel through a dozen boudoirs and I've worshiped as she boldly strutted her hard-bitten stuff. And yet, much as I admire her, Miss Hopkins, Miss Chase, et al., I find myself harking back to other days, other epochs.

I insist we have neither a Jeanne Eagels today nor a Lillian Lorraine, an Olive Thomas or a Dolores. But likely the chroniclers of this decade will say the same thing of Tallulah Bankhead, Miriam Hopkins and Myrna Loy. And just as likely all of us will be wrong.—O. O. McIntyre in Cosmopolitan.

$330,000 For Schools Paid By Power Company

Above is a picture of the $330,514.65 check of the Alabama Power Company delivered last week by its President, Thomas W. Martin, to H. S. Long, President, State Tax Commission. The check covers hydro-electric kilowatt hour taxes assessed for the special educational trust fund of the State. These taxes are approximately $40,000 more than in 1934.

The entire amount of this check will be devoted to educational purposes. From previous years' distributions of the Educational Trust Fund, it appears that from this payment of the Power Company today, counties will receive for elementary and high schools, $200,000, and State institutions, $130,000. Among the larger beneficiaries appear: Alabama College at Montevallo, $16,000; Alabama Polytechnic Institute, $38,000; University of Alabama, $30,000; the seven Teachers' Colleges, $23,000; Jefferson County, $14,000; Mobile County, $4,200; Walker County, $7,600; Cullman County, $7,200; Marshall County, $6,000; Lauderdale County, $5,000; Crenshaw County, $5,700.

Textiles, Costumes On Exhibit At College

More cigarettes are smoked today because more people know about them—they are better advertised.

But the main reason for the increase is that they are made better—made of better tobaccos; then again the tobaccos are blended—a blend of Domestic and Turkish tobaccos.

Chesterfield is made of mild, ripe tobaccos. Everything that science knows about is used in making it a milder and better-tasting cigarette.

We believe you will enjoy them.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

By MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

A pleading term of the Shelby County Circuit Court was held in Columbiana on Thursday, Judge W. W. Wallace presiding. The Circuit Court docket for the November term, was also set for trial.

In an executive session of the Board of Revenue held immediately after the mass meeting in the Courthouse on Monday morning, for the purpose of determining what Shelby County's position would be in the matter of approving the three-way plan offered by the State and Federal Governments to Shelby County, a vote was taken, and the members tied on the project. C. R. Tinney, of Columbiana, and S. E. McGraw, of Vincent, voted for the project; S. M. Tatum, of Siluria, and Tom Naish, of Helena, voted against it. President J. M. Lyon then untied the vote, and the project for the paved highway extending from Bibb County to St. Clair County line carried favorably. Plans are now being perfected for work to begin immediately on this vitally important road project for Shelby County's permanent development.

Probate Judge Len C. Walker again urges that licenses be bought now to avoid the last minute rush. He reminds us that Privilege Licenses will be delinquent after October 31st. Automobile and driver's licenses will exact an additional penalty after November 14th. Judge Walker has employed extra clerks to take care of your requirements along these lines.

About the time we were discussing "Privilege License" with Judge Walker, and wishing we had one to do whatever we decided we wanted to do. Dr. E. G. Givhan walked in with a gentleman who wanted a Marriage License. Good bye — Privilege License!

T. J. Godwin, attorney, has been appointed Special Judge to try the condemnation proceedings on new road projects. Judge Len C. Walker being disqualified on account of personal interests.

Horace Davis, charged with murder, resulting from an automobile collision on Saturday night, was released on bond by agreement on Sunday afternoon. It is reported that during the altercation following the wreck, Mr. Davis was severely cut, and that Mr. Davis stuck a screw driver through the head of the negro and instant death followed. Preliminary trial will be held before Judge Leonard on Friday.

Somebody recently asked why the well-known fertilizer is called "Arcadian". Mr. Webster's dictionary tells us that Arcadia was a district of Greece "distinguished for contentment and rural happiness".

VINCENT IS ALL SET FOR 3RD SALE DAYS ON OCTOBER 25 - 26

VINCENT, Ala.—The third cooperative Sale Trade Days program will be staged within the hospitable gates of Vincent, Alabama, on Friday and Saturday, October 25 and 26. The merchants of this wide-awake town are offering dependable merchandise at the lowest market prices of the season. It is a veritable golden harvest occasion, and friends, citizens and customers of the following enterprising merchants are cordially invited to come to Vincent on the above named days and share in this entertaining and profitable program they are sponsoring for this week-end. The merchants responsible for this third unusual civic occasion, are as follows: McGraw Brothers, Big Bud and Little Bud; Gorman Brothers, Tumpy and Jimmy; E. E. Florey; A. A. Gorman; Florey Drug Company; Sharbutt and Florey; Lackey & Murphy; J. G. Harris & Son; C. E. White; The Cash Store, W. I. Norris; Montgomery Cafe; and J. D. Masters.

The writer had the pleasure of talking with a few of the above named business men, and it is refreshing to enter a town where civic pride is a paramount issue, and in which the merchants are banded together in a spirit of cooperation, with a unity of purpose to put over a program of helpfulness to the residents of the community. This program has been utilized for the best interests of the "home folk", and has brought a more congenial relationship between the business men, and promoted a better spirit of understanding on the part of both buyer and consumer.

Merchants from adjoining towns should take a trip to Vincent on one of these cooperative Sale Days and observe how this carefully planned program has helped build one of the most prosperous communities, from a business standpoint, and one of the most desirable locations in which to build a permanent home in Shelby County.

PUBLIC APPROVES PROPOSED ROAD THROUGH COUNTY

On Monday morning at ten o'clock, one of the largest crowds from all parts of the county assembled in the Courthouse auditorium for the purpose of discussing with members of the Shelby County Board of Revenue the advisability of making financial arrangements to take advantage of the three-way plan for constructing a paved highway extending from the Bibb County line to the St. Clair County line—through the heart of Shelby County.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman John M. Lyon, who enthusiastically and unqualifiedly endorsed the project. In the absence of Gaston B. Scott, President of the State Highway Commission, who was scheduled to be present, Mr. Lyon called on Judge W. W. Wallace to make the opening talk. Judge Wallace appealed to members of the Board of Revenue and to citizens of Shelby County to seize this golden opportunity for permanently building this highway, which if completed would serve a greater number of Shelby County residents than any other road in the county. Judge Wallace was followed by Dr. E. G. Givhan, of Montevallo; C. M. Mauldin, of Beat 10; W. H. Pope, of Wilsonville; Cecil Cowart, of Calera; Solicitor Paul O. Luck and Tax Assessor Luther Fowler, of Columbiana; J. A. Wade, of Vincent; and Henry Cosper, of Harpersville; all of whom expressed themselves one hundred per cent in favor of the road, and they gave many convincing reasons why the Board of Revenue should accept the plan worked out by the State and Federal governments in a program of cooperation with the county.

A rising vote was taken, and out of the vast audience only three persons were opposed to this decidedly worthwhile permanent improvement for Shelby County. The meeting then adjourned, and the Board of Revenue was called into executive session to deliberate on "ways and means" for financing the project.

THE NEW STRAND THEATRE IS OPENED ON MONDAY NIGHT

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — The New Strand Theatre in Montevallo, Alabama, staged a most successful opening on Monday night, October 21.

Representatives from Civic, Fraternal, Patriotic and Collegiate organizations from Montevallo were present to extend congratulations to Mrs. Watson, Eddie and Morris Watson, owners, upon the completion of this Cinema achievement made possible through their united efforts for the past 15 years to bring to Shelby County citizens the best entertainment the moving picture world afforded.

The Strand Theatre now stands a worthy monument to the Watson family. A capacity-filled building attested the appreciation on the part of Shelby County citizens for this beautiful and artistically arranged Cinema Palace.

Preceeding the feature picture, "Red Salute", Manager Eddie Watson, on behalf of the owners of the theatre, extended thanks to the contractors, architects and laborers for their splendid cooperation in perfecting the completion of this modern and luxuriously furnished theatre.

Dr. C. T. Acker, speaking for the Mayor and Councilmen of Montevallo, paid a beautiful tribute to the Watson family who have for many years been prominently identified with the cultural and civic life of the community in which they reside. An especially beautiful tribute was paid Mrs. Watson, whom he stated was the "moving spirit" which had made possible the handsome structure recently completed.

Dean Napier in a few well chosen words extended thanks and appreciation from the College. He stated the Theatre, as it now stands, should be an inspiration to spur further developments in commercial and artistic circles in Montevallo.

The entire theatre is restful, tastefully and elegantly furnished. The newest type opera chairs assure your comfort. A fitting setting for the week-end will feature Will Rogers in "Steamboat 'Round The Bend".

The Democrat joins legions of friends throughout Shelby County in extending congratulations and best wishes to the Watson family for many happy and prosperous years in their new Strand Theatre in Montevallo.

FFA Boys Plan To Aid Crippled Clinic

The F. F. A. chapter of Columbiana plan to aid the Crippled Children Clinic with not less than $80.00. This money goes to buy food and beds for the children while they are being treated. We are going to give plays and sponsor other entertainments to make this money. We are trying to make this much and we want to make enough to go on our annual educational tour also. We ask the citizens of Shelby County to cooperate with us by attending our entertainments and in any other way that they can.

MONEY IS NEEDED TO BUY INCIDENTAL NEEDS AT SCHOOLS

The following letter is being sent to all patrons of the Columbiana High School. We believe it will be of interest to the general public to know the condition of our schools at the present time. Since the Legislature has passed a law making it unlawful to collect fees in the elementary grades (1 to 6), it forces us to run both of our schools from the fees collected in the high school. From these fees we pay for coal, water, lights, oil, paper, chalk, mops, brooms, erasers etc., which are used by the pupils in our schools. Therefore it is absolutely necessary that fees be collected if our children are to come to a clean, warm, comfortable building during the cold winter days.

If any patron wants to pay the usual fee of one dollar (as a donation) to the elementary school we shall appreciate the favor very much.

Columbiana, Alabama
October 22, 1935.

Dear Mr. Patron:

The local board of trustees of the Columbiana schools met last Tuesday evening with the following members present: W. L. Christian, Chairman; C. E. Niven, and J. C. Curlee. We discussed thoroughly the financial condition of our schools this year and find that it is absolutely necessary to collect incidental fees if our schools are to continue on their present RATNIG. We feel sure that you want them to do so.

The board discussed the ability of each family to pay who have children in school and we feel that most of them are able and should pay for so great a cause as our schools. We feel sure you want your child to have the very best opportunities that can be given it, and it is impossible to give the best opportunities which our schools are capable of giving, without collecting school fees, which are used to pay off our school obligations.

We are very badly in need of these fees NOW. Won't you please do what you can about it? If it is impossible for you to pay yours now, please let us know when you will be able to do so. Yours very truly,

W. L. Christian, C. E. Niven and J. C. Curlee, Board of Trustees.

E. H. Childs, Principal of Columbiana Schools.

Kiddies' Kolumn

Dear Kiddies:-

Do you remember your old friend, George W. Knight, of Bourbon, Indiana, who wrote to us last year stating that the Kiddies Kolumn was the most interesting feature he had ever seen in a weekly, and subscribing for the Democrat? Well, this week he sent to the writer a lovely jar of Wild Cherries which the robins had left intact, and this morning here comes a letter to you. I am passing it on. I know all of you will enjoy it and appreciate it. It may also serve as a stimulus for some letters from you Kiddies, who, I am afraid, have been too busily engrossed with your new books and school to write me. What do you think?

Sincerely yours,
Mildred White Wallace.

Bourbon, Indiana.
October 13, 1935.

Dear Kiddies:

Just a few lines to tell you that the robins have left us for the winter. I saw two in my yard today and I believe they will stay until Spring. All the others have gone South.

Two weeks ago, I was shaving in the bathroom one morning early, and looking out of the window at the North lawn, watching a robin looking at the ground very intently, I suppose the little fellow was looking for his breakfast in the shape of a fish worm, which he expected to pull out of the ground, but he was being fooled by a ground mole lying in the sod. I rushed out and soon had the mole lying on the grass. Then I thanked the robin for telling me it was there.

Last Saturday we had our yearly parade of boys and girls with their pets and dolls, and prizes were given in the different classes. One little girl was leading a little white pig about six weeks old by a string and it minded every word she said to it. It was just too cute for words.

I have been watching for your letters in the Democrat and have missed them.

Yours very truly,
George W. Knight.

BUDGET.

We could hang my Charters upon a lamplit wall.
We could put your brasses on a table in the hall.
We could put my Morley where the sun would strike the blue,
And I think your heavy chair is big enough for two.

We could put my curtains in the window to the west.
We could put your Chinese rug wherever you like best.
We'd write all the morning, and talk all afternoon,
And there will be a fire escape for looking at the moon.

THE LITTLE THINGS.

My dear, when I am gone do not remember
The tears, the angry words that brought the end;
I think, I'd have you dear, instead, remember
The best of it—the way things once have been.
Remember all the fun we've had, the laughter,
The very best of love, when love was new,
The little things we magnified to matter,
Sunsplashed memories — dreams — and love-notes, too.
Such things we hardly miss until they vanish—
My dear, remember these when I am gone—
One starry night of tranquil, silver silence,
With peacefulness that few have ever known.
Let all the other fade and just remember—
Two in love—the way we used to be,
At parting—how the trees made lacy shadows,
And how the moon laughed down—so openly.

Laval in Uncomfortable Position as Anglo-Italian Relations Grow Worse—Senator Vandenberg "Not a Candidate."

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

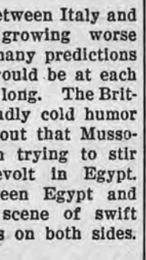
PIERRE LAVAL, premier of France, found himself in a tight place because of his efforts to retain the friendship of both Great Britain and Italy and to keep his government from being upset by its foes at home. In the process of trying to find a way to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian war, Laval proposed that Britain withdraw its big home fleet from the Mediterranean to mollify Mussolini. This suggestion was laid before the British cabinet and turned down flatly.

Pierre Laval

The cabinet gave hearty approval to the policy at Geneva of Capt. Anthony Eden and Samuel Hoare, secretary for foreign affairs. Its stand was reported to be substantially this: Mussolini will respect nothing but force. He would interpret any withdrawal of Britain's Mediterranean forces as a sign of weakening. If Mussolini wants to clear the way for Italo-Ethopian peace talks, let him halt his armies in Ethiopia and accept league terms as basis for negotiation as Ethiopia already has done.

Furthermore, the British government called on Laval for a definite reply to its question whether France would cooperate with the British fleet if there were an open break with Italy. The French answers to this query had been too wabbly to suit Downing street. Particularly the English wanted to know if their fleet would be permitted to use the French naval dockyards. It was believed that if Laval could not satisfy the British, the latter would withdraw from active leadership in the League of Nations and refuse to renew the Locarno commitments on which France relies for protection against Germany.

DISPATCHES from the African war front are subjected to so severe a censorship that they are not only unsatisfactory but often quite unreliable. All kinds of sensational stories are circulated and some of them may be true. One such is the report from Djibouti, French Somaliland, that Italians killed a number of British Somaliland subjects near the Ethiopian frontier, some of the victims being members of the camel corps that is a part of the colonial army. British Vice Consul Lowe heard, also, that Italians had gassed and shot a lot of cattle and goats in British Somaliland.



Certainly relations between Italy and Great Britain were growing worse daily and there were many predictions that the two nations would be at each other's throats before long. The British have been in a deadly cold humor ever since they found out that Mussolini's friends had been trying to stir up an anti-British revolt in Egypt. Now the border between Egypt and Italian Libya is the scene of swift concentration of troops on both sides.

ETHIOPIA'S representatives in Geneva were told by delegates of several nations that Mussolini was ready to end the warfare if he were given considerable cessions of territory and certain large economic advantages. This tentative offer was transmitted to Addis Ababa, and the reply of Emperor Haile Selassie was a determined "No." The Italians want virtual control over the entire country, and the emperor is not willing to give up a yard of territory.

The Italians in northern Ethiopia were jubilant over the desertion of Degiac Haile Selassie Gugsa and several thousand warriors. This Gugsa is a son-in-law of the emperor and a descendant of King John who reigned in the last century. The traitor was installed as ras or chieftain of the occupied territory.

Seemingly reliable reports from medical missionaries in the southern sector, the Ogaden zone, said the Italians were making free use of chlorine gas and of dum-dum bullets which for many years have been outlawed in all "civilized" warfare.

SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG of Michigan, who has been mentioned frequently as a possible Republican nominee for the Presidency, came back from a summer tour of Europe and declared flatly he is "not a candidate for anything on earth." He did not attempt to predict who would be named by the Republicans, but did say he felt the G. O. P. would win in 1936.

Senator Vandenberg

"I think President Roosevelt wrote his obituary in his first speech in congress in March, 1933," he said, "and historians will show it, when he said 'most liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policies and we must take care to avoid that.'"

Liberal spending by the New Deal was defended by Senator Fletcher of Florida, chairman of the senate banking committee. In an interview he said that "government activities and expenditures have restored about $10,000,000,000 of bank credit lost in the $21,000,000,000 deflation of 1930-33.

"Business is going to get the benefit of that. The money the government is putting out is going to people who are putting it in the banks. It is increasing purchasing power and likewise expanding the credit facilities of the banks."

The senator expressed the belief business was "reviving," declared relief and other emergency expenditures would drop as continued improvement was shown, and predicted many work projects would be of lasting benefit.

IT DOESN'T take much these days to cause the Republicans to rejoice. The latest event hailed by them as a harbinger of victory next year was merely a by-election in Massachusetts to fill a vacancy in the state senate. The district normally is Republican and this time as usual a Republican was elected. The reason for the G. O. P. shouts was found in the decreased vote polled by the Democrats, and the fact that Salem, a mill town and former Democratic stronghold, was captured by the Republicans.

Democratic leaders said that the issues in the election were purely local and that the reverse at most was a rebuff for the administration of Democratic Gov. James Curley. The Republican leaders asserted that the New Deal no less than Curley was involved.

VICE PRESIDENT JOHN GARNER and a large number of senators and representatives sailed from Seattle for Manila to represent the United States at the formal establishment of the Philippines commonwealth and the inauguration of President Manuel Quezon on November 19.

For the first time in history both the President and the Vice President were outside United States territory at the same time. Secretary of State Hull was the ranking official left in Washington and consequently was the temporary head of the government. However, Mr. Roosevelt was in close and continual communication with the capital by wireless throughout his cruise.

IN SOME quarters Col. Theodore Roosevelt is credited with considerable influence among the Republicans of the eastern states, and often he is mentioned as a possible Presidential candidate. Another potential candidate, strong in the West, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, recently wrote to Colonel Roosevelt proposing that the 1936 Republican campaign be based on a "trust-busting" issue. The colonel turned down the plan. He replied that, while he was in sympathy with the senator's attitude on monopolies, he felt there are many other issues as great or greater. Among these he named "scandalous waste of the people's money, government extravagance, multitudinous taxes, and attempts to subvert our type of government."

Col. Theodore Roosevelt

"I entirely agree," Colonel Roosevelt wrote, "that monopolies are evil, for I am a firm believer in the established American principle of competition. I have stated this over and over again during the last eighteen months.

"I do not agree, however, that this will be the major issue of the campaign."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT turned his back on the Pacific and began his return voyage on the cruiser Houston. The vessel was started through the Panama canal while the President went to Fort Clayton and other posts to inspect the garrisons, and to the new Madden dam on the Chagres river. He boarded the cruiser at Pedro Miguel locks and, with President Arias of Panama and Mrs. Arias as guests, proceded to the Atlantic.

MAJ. GEN. WILLIAM L. SIBERT, one of the three men who really built the Panama canal and last surviving member of the canal commission, died at the age of seventy-five at his country home near Bowling Green, Ky. He was buried in Arlington National cemetery with full military honors.

General Sibert's career as engineer and soldier was distinguished. He was made brigadier general by special act of congress for his services in connection with the building of the Panama canal. During the World war he commanded the First division of the A. E. F.

He retired in 1920 to engage in private engineering work and subsequently served as chairman of the Alabama state docks commission in construction of the state docks at Mobile. From 1928 to 1932 he was chairman of the Boulder dam commission, and in 1929 and 1930 was president of the American Association of Port Authorities.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—With the President and congress both away, Washington is a hotbed of rumors, most of which have absolutely no basis whatever, but all of which are interesting.

For instance, there is the one about Henry Morgenthau, Jr. The secretary of the treasury is enjoying a holiday in Spain, whereupon there is seriously circulated the story that he is to be eased out of the treasury, and is to become ambassador to Madrid. Several details are added, for example that the administration is most anxious to have Claude G. Bowers, now ambassador to Spain, back in this country for the next campaign. He is a spellbinder of parts, and has been keynoter on many big Democratic occasions.

Now it is beyond denial that certain very important figures in the New Deal are convinced it would be an excellent thing if Morgenthau were sent to Spain—or to the Fiji islands—anywhere out of touch with Washington. They regard him, to put it mildly, as a flop as secretary of the treasury.

But to anyone who has watched Roosevelt it is simply unthinkable that Morgenthau would be thus humiliated. He went to extreme lengths to avoid humiliating William H. Woodin, who was a far worse secretary—from the White House standpoint—than Morgenthau. Woodin disagreed distressingly with most of the New Deal policies. His personal loyalty to Roosevelt prevented his resigning, for a long time, despite the excellent excuse of his health, but he actually had nothing to do with formulating the more important phases of treasury policy.

Whereas Morgenthau has been the ideal "Yes Man" to the President. His first thought at all times is to do just precisely what the President wants, and to tell the President that any Rooseveltian idea is simply swell. He has never sought self-glorification in the public prints, and has not joined in any conspiracies to unseat Presidential favorites from their places near the throne.

Morgenthau Will Stay

So this observer believes that Mr. Morgenthau will serve as secretary of the treasury as long as he wants, and, when his time comes to go, will get a wonderful send-off, and with no such lame excuse as "promoting" him to be ambassador to Spain.

Then there is the story about Herbert Hoover's motive in attracting so much limelight. This is that Hoover really has no idea of being a candidate, but intends to hold the limelight and make no statement which would take him out of the apparent race before, say, next February. The explanation given for this is that Hoover wants to shield any other possible Republican nominee from being put on the spot as to the soldier bonus. By February, Washington believes, the bonus will have passed into history, with its passage over Roosevelt's veto, and hence will no longer be an issue.

This writer still believes, and on excellent authority from close lieutenants of the former President, that he craves a vindication, that he would like to have the nomination forced on him, but that with very little urging he would step out actively and go after it.

Most of the stories going around are just as silly as that one now exploded about Roosevelt's shelving Garner and putting up some one for Vice President next year who would draw strength in some state or section more doubtful than Texas is expected to be.

No Real Conflagration

Belief that Italy will eventually have to yield to economic pressure is very strong in diplomatic circles here. The opinion of the diplomats, perhaps the best informed persons as to actual conditions, is that there will not be any real conflagration. They do not believe, for example, that Britain will ever actually blockade Italy, which dire possibility would lead to tremendous consequences.

They point out, however, that, contrary to popular opinion, Germany is not sympathetic with Italy, but anxious to go along with Great Britain. They do not believe, therefore, that Germany will supply Italy with the needed munitions—using munitions in the broad sense of things necessary in time of war, and not confining it, as the United States neutrality act does, to "arms, ammunition and implements of war."

Several well-informed diplomats were questioned by this writer as to what they thought Germans anxious to sell goods would do if they saw a chance to make a nice profit by selling to Italy—especially as it has become increasingly difficult for Germany to market goods she would like to export.

Invariably the answer has been the same—that German merchants would not hesitate to go against the policy of their country if they could turn a good deal for themselves, but that they would hesitate a long time before selling anything to Italy on credit.

Italy's credit, at the moment, is not too good. Diplomats here say that despite the refusal of Austria and Hungary to commit themselves in advance to league sanctions against Italy, this distrust of Italy's ability to pay will dry up these sources of supply.

Italy Short of Gold

The gold reserve of the Bank of Italy has shrunk tremendously in the last 18 months. She is now down to something like $300,000,000 gold in terms of American dollars. Roughly this is $100,000,000 less if calculations are made in terms of the American dollar before devaluation.

Importance of this last is not generally realized in this country, save by persons who have traveled in Europe since devaluation. But actually the purchasing power of the lira has not changed in the meantime, either in Italy or on the continent of Europe.

Italy always buys a great deal of food from across the Adriatic, cattle especially. The Yugoslavians do not like Italy at all. Neither do the Greeks. They are afraid of Mussolini's imperialistic dreams. Washington believes that Italy has been compelled to pay cash for merchandise, with credits closely held, and that this is the really important explanation of the drop of three billion lire in the gold holdings of the Bank of Italy.

To the contention that Germany was able to go on fighting for years while under virtual blockade, diplomats answer that the cases are very different. Within the central powers was a stretch of territory from the Baltic to the Black seas, and extending beyond the Black into Asia. This territory has tremendous diversification of products, including those essential for war—metals, oil and food. Moreover, Germany was able to buy from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland and Switzerland. Italy must buy virtually all her metals and oil, and a great deal of food.

After effects of the World war demonstrated rather forcibly what could happen to credits. Conviction that Italy will take a ghastly economic beating in the present war, no matter what military glories she may achieve, lends point to this. And her gold supply does not promise long continuance of cash payments.

Neutrality Act

A fight to broaden the neutrality act so that the President would be authorized to prohibit export to belligerents not only of "arms, ammunition and implements of war," as the present act reads, but "munitions," so as to include cotton, copper, chemicals, acids, in fact, all materials, ranging from foodstuffs to mules, usually regarded as war supplies, will start with the tap of the gavel when congress convenes in January.

The administration is embarrassed now by the lack of authority in the neutrality law, but will be even more embarrassed when the fight in congress comes—especially because of the political pressure against even the grant of authority to ban cotton and copper.

At the time the neutrality act passed, President Roosevelt expressed only one regret—that the act did not ban foreign loans for war purposes.

The narrowness of language in the neutrality act defining war supplies was not at once noticed by officials. It was assumed until very recently, for example, that the President could add cotton, or copper, or chemicals and acids used for explosives, etc. In fact, there was a broad inference in official quarters after the President's proclamation that items would be added from time to time.

Watch Shipments

The government does not intend to hamper export trade unduly in seeking to discover if shipments to neutral countries are intended for belligerents, officials insist, but they point out that they have been catching such violations, with respect to Latin-American wars, "every week or so," and say the same sort of watch will be kept on shipments to any country which might pass them on, either to Italy or Ethiopia. Which of course means primarily Italy.

For instance, if there should be a heavy shipment of explosives or guns to Germany, the government may require substantial proof that the shipment is not going any further, or is not going to replace similar supplies sold to Italy.

Newspapers, according to officials, have enormously exaggerated the amount of raw materials Italy bought in anticipation of this war. They do not deny that Italy has laid in a supply of raw materials, but insist that in most instances the amounts purchased are not greatly in excess of normal purchases.

On the other hand is the tremendous shrinking in the Bank of Italy's gold supply.

Which would seem to indicate, especially as unofficial information is that the gold supply has been coming down sharply since September 20, that Italy has been buying heavily, despite official reports to the contrary.

Which brings up the whole question of credit. Leaving out the dire possibility that Great Britain may declare war on Italy, and blockade her, will Italy be able to buy American cotton, copper and other "war supplies" other than "arms, ammunition and implements of war?" Certainly there would be plenty of political pressure to encourage this, but would American bankers be willing to extend credit to finance such sales after Italy's gold supply has been stripped down to the danger mark—wherever that is?

Germany fought the war without much credit from neutrals, but she had tremendous supplies of the vital war requirements.

Gail stood, stricken, motionless for a moment. Then Ariel came, with a bird's flight, across the kitchen and flung her arms tightly about Gail.

"Oh, my darling—my darling!" Gail whispered, her wet cheek against Ariel's wet cheek. "You're back!"

"Gail!" Ariel sobbed.

"Oh, dearest—dearest!"

There was no bitterness, no memory, now. It was Ariel, the adored youngest, here against her heart again, living, loving, sorry, eager to be forgiven; there was nothing in Gail's feeling but one great ache of joy and pain and love.

"Gail, I've wanted you so!"

"And I you!"

They drew apart, hands linked, and looked at each other.

"You look—older, Ariel. You—I hardly knew you!"

The exquisite transparent skin flushed; Ariel shrugged in the old indifferent way.

"Oh, well—"

"Oh, well, naturally!" Gail finished it for her with a laugh.

Ariel saw the basket and the baby; she gave Gail a frightened glance.

"Gail!"

"Oh, no, no. That's Phil's baby. Lily's baby."

Ariel's proud mouth curled in the old haughty way.

"I heard he had married her," she said, displeased. "That horrible Wibser!" in an impatient tone. Suddenly they were back in their old relationship, and there was reproof in the voice in which Gail said:

"Be careful, Ariel! She isn't here, but Phil may be any minute."

"They're living here!"

"They have been, from the first."

"But this is our house!" Ariel exclaimed, head in air.

"Oh, Ariel dear—" Gail pleaded, patiently.

"Do you mean to tell me that Joe Cass' divorced wife—"

"Joe Cass died, Ariel. And they were here," Gail said, as the other voice stopped on an indignant note—"they were here when Edith— And they've been here ever since," she added, after another pause.

"I see," Ariel said, in a gentle, lowered tone. The old hoarse, boyish voice, and the old penitent look in the hazel eyes—how they brought back the days of long ago!

"Is Dick with you, Ariel?"

"Dick? Oh, yes! He's coming in with the bags."

"And are you going to stay in Clippersville?"

"Are we—? Oh, heavens, no!" Ariel said expressively.

"But are you happy, darling?"

"Nothing to cable home about, collect," Ariel answered drily. Something seemed to shrivel in Gail's heart at the tone.

"Can we announce your marriage now, Ariel?"

Instead of answering Ariel fastened bright curious eyes on her sister.

"Do you mean to say that nobody's ever suspected?"

"Nobody."

"Oh, come now, Gail!"

"Well, it surprised me. Of course I told Lily. But she never told even her mother. And people have all taken it for granted that you were down in Los Angeles with Aunt Annie Ralston's family. Anyway, if anyone has ever connected your name with Dick Stebbins' I never heard it. His mother never did. Or if she did she was as mum as I was about it."

"I've often wondered," Ariel said, listening attentively. "Not," she added, with her own little favorite air of arrogance—"not that it made any difference to me! But I've often wondered what the old ladies in town were thinking about it."

There was a moment's silence, for Gail sensed something unexpressed in her sister's tone and waited, puzzled, for an explanation.

"I'm terribly glad—" Ariel began hesitatingly. "Gail!" she added, suddenly, on a more definite note. "I've got to tell you something—it's going to surprise you." She fell silent.

"You must have known that there was something funny about all this?" she interrupted the pause to ask irrelevantly.

There was a sound behind Gail at the kitchen doorway. She turned and faced Dick Stebbins.

Bigger, browner, with more of that sweet, homely, kindly air than ever. Some quality, reliable, trustworthy, restful, seemed to emanate from him; there was infinite strength for Gail in the mere touch of his big hand. He kissed her, very simply, and looked beyond her to Ariel. Gail, blue-aproned, tawny of hair, her thick eyebrows drawn together questioningly, her sapphire eyes and the disciplined sweet wide mouth accenting her feeling of bewilderment and non-comprehension, sent her glance from one face to the other.

"Had your talk?" Dick asked, and the remembered voice sent waves of thrilling weakness and joy and pain through Gail's whole being.

"Not yet," Ariel said. "Tell her. Tell her the truth, Dick."

Dick had brought two rain-spattered suitcases into the kitchen. Now Ariel glanced from them to her sister's face.

"First," she said, "you can put me up, Gail?"

"Put you up!" Gail echoed, in an almost shocked tone. "But, darling, this is home! Papa's old room is the guest room, anyway. You and Dick can have the guest room all to yourselves."

"I'd rather double up with you," Ariel said, without embarrassment, but with an appealing little touch of shyness.

"Well—" Gail colored to her forehead, laughing again, and sending Dick an apologetic glance. "If you don't mind?" she said. "Of course we have to talk all night."

"There's a man in town I have to see, anyway," Dick answered immediately.

"But not tonight!"

"Well, I thought I'd go down to the Empire and telephone him, anyway. Willoughby—he's the attorney for the ship people," Dick explained.

"Oh, yes, I know him. Mrs. Cantor's father. But he's quite sick, Dick—she was telling me yesterday in the library. He's in the hospital."

"I know he is. But you see," Dick persisted uncomfortably, with a red face, "it'll be better for me to be at the hotel, because then if he gets better—we've been working on this case together—"

"But, my dear," Gail said in her big sisterly tone, "you can't go to the Empire, and leave Ariel here! You know what Clippersville is; there'd be any amount of talk! What does the illness of a casual stranger like Mr. Willoughby matter?"

There was a pause. Then Ariel, balanced on the edge of the kitchen table in the old fashion, said explanatorily, "Mr. Willoughby and Dick have been working on this case together. And if he goes to London, Dick'll probably go, too!"

"But tell me—before the others come in—before anything else," Gail said, "you're going to announce your marriage now, aren't you?" Something odd in their silence bewildered her, and she turned sharply to Ariel. "Aren't you going to announce it even now?" she demanded.

"Oh, My Darling—My Darling!"

"Immediately," Ariel agreed briefly.

"Well, then! Surely Dick ought to stay here!" Gail argued. Her keen look moved from face to face. "There isn't any trouble?" she asked quickly.

"No, dear, there's no trouble," Dick said reassuringly. "You have your talk and I'll be back. Of course I want to see Phil. You don't know what it is to get home. I can't wait to start talking."

When the kitchen door was shut and the car in the side yard had chugged away, Gail turned toward Ariel. "What's—queer?" she asked.

"Nothing's queer," Ariel said in her proud, faintly hoarse voice. "But your cramming me and Dick into one room was rather funny," she said slowly, airily, "because we aren't married, not the way you think—not any more. We never cared for each other—that way."

"You and Dick Stebbins aren't married!"

"I said we weren't, Gail."

"Then—then—" Gail stopped short, and there was utter silence in the kitchen. "Divorced," she said. "Then who's been supporting you all these years, Ariel?" she demanded seizing at random the first of a hundred questions.

"Dick," the other girl said airily.

Gail's honest face reddened; she spoke sharply.

"What are you talking about!"

"Oh, not what you think, and what all Clippersville would gladly think!" Ariel answered. "He never put a finger tip on me," she said proudly. "He despises me, I think. Not—not that I care!"

"Tell me, dear," Gail said patiently.

Ariel softened suddenly. She spoke coldly, with a sort of proud reluctance and on a long sigh.

"What you never knew, Gail, and Ede never knew was that I had fallen in love with Van Murchison!"

"You mean—!"

"Yes. While you and he were going about together. I couldn't help it; in fact I didn't know it," Ariel confessed dispassionately, her hazel eyes narrowed. "I just went nutty—gaga—about him!" she said.

"Did he know it?"

"Wait." Ariel paused. "Do you remember a Saturday," she began again suddenly—"a Saturday when you were going over to Los Gatos with Van, and you'd sort of—sort of maneuvered to get away from the library?"

Remember it! How often, with shame and regret, Gail had remembered that old undignified juggling with business and home obligations, just to get free for those exciting, unsatisfying week-ends with Van!

"Yes, I remember. It was hot. And you came down to the car and said good-by to us."

"Well, while you were in the house he kissed me," Ariel said.

The indignant color blazed in Gail's face.

"He didn't!"

"Oh, indeed he did." Ariel reflected for a second, and then added, "I made him."

"Oh, darling, darling, if I'd only known! For I was getting so tired of the whole thing then. You could have had him! You could have gone to Los Gatos—"

"Well, anyway," Ariel said, when Gail paused, "he said to me, 'What chance Del Monte tonight? Some of the fellows and I are going over to Del Monte late, for the golf.' I said there was no chance at all, and you came out with your coat."

"I remember! I went back for my coat."

"Well. Anyway, it was very hot and stupid, and Dorothy Camp, Larry, and Buddy Raisch came 'round and asked me to go over to somebody's yacht in Santa Cruz. So I left a note for Ede, and went off with them.

"Do you remember," she went on, thinking it out, "that after we'd had lunch we passed a sign that said 'Del Monte 38 Miles,' and the boys teased us to go down there for dinner and dance? I thought of Van then—I knew he'd be there.

"And such a funny feeling came over me, Gail. It was just as if—I knew. It was just as if I knew that if we went to Monterey all the rest would happen.

"Well, we went down there, and we got rooms in a small hotel in Monterey. Buddy and Larry drank too much, and that made us mad, and we didn't quite know what to do. But about ten o'clock, when we were all over at Del Monte, I left the others and went to the desk and asked if Mr. Van Murchison was there. The man said yes, that he had just registered.

"I telephoned upstairs to his room, and said, 'Well, I'm here.'

"He was awfully nice, and said he was coming down to dance. But when he came down Buddy was acting so badly that I was terribly embarrassed, and Dot and Larry had disappeared. Van was wonderful. He said I must go to the hotel and lock my door, and go straight home the next day, and give persons like Buddy and Larry a wide berth in future."

She was silent awhile. "I really loved him." She added the words thoughtfully, as if thinking aloud.

"He said he would take me to Monterey, Gail, only a mile away. But first we went out past the Presidio to Cypress Point, and we parked the car and went down to the shore.

"Van told me he loved me, and I said that I loved him, and we were engaged. There's—there's no other excuse for it, Gail. . . .

"Except," she said, in a dead silence, "that we'd both been drinking—not too much, but enough to make everything seem unreal and—oh, I don't know—unimportant. If I thought at all—if I thought at all, I thought that nothing mattered! Anything was better than being an old maid, like the Foster girls.

"You and Edith never knew that, did you?"

"Knew it!" Gail said, on a breath of agony.

"Yes. But—but I wasn't eighteen!" Ariel said, in her hoarse, appealing voice.

"You weren't eighteen," Gail said heavily, swallowing with a stiff throat, "but you knew better than that."

The other girl seemed to wilt suddenly. She looked away.

"Oh, yes, I knew better than that. A girl is born knowing better than that!" she conceded dully.

"And you despise Lily!" Gail muttered, trembling.

The resentful color stung in Ariel's face.

"She's common," she said quickly.

"But she didn't do what you did!" Gail wanted to say. No use. No use. She was silent.

"I'm sorry!" Ariel said then impatiently, in the tone she always used when it was too late. "I'm not proud of myself! But—but it happens all the time," she added resentfully, "and girls get away with it."

"Ariel! Don't talk that way," Gail commanded, with an angry flash of blue eyes.

"It's true," Ariel murmured, subdued.

"You didn't," Gail began, thinking—"you didn't marry Dick Stebbins that Christmas, not telling him?"

"No," Ariel said, with an indignant look.

"He knew?"

"Everything!"

"And loved you in spite of it?"

"He got me out of it," Ariel said.

"And did you stop caring for Van afterward?"

"You don't understand," Ariel said. "Dick and I never were married. We aren't married now! For nearly three years I've been married to Van. That's the marriage we're going to announce."

Gail stared at her, stricken dumb.

"You and Van Murchison married!"

CROCHETED FLOWERS FOR POT HOLDERS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Pot holders crocheted with heavy string are very practical and when made in flower forms are really lovely. They are heavy enough to protect the hands without requiring padding. These three pot holders are crocheted in the same manner but in different combinations of red, yellow and green. The petals are crocheted separately of one color and then slip stitched together and finished in contrasting colors. Size when finished about six inches.

Instruction sheet No. 731 with illustrations and instructions how to crochet these holders, also how to arrange the colors, will be mailed to you for 10 cents. Material can also be bought from this department. Information and price are given when mailing instructions.

laxative, and keep reducing the dose until the bowels need no help at all.

Reduced dosage is the secret of aiding Nature in restoring regularity. You must use a little less laxative each time, and that's why your laxative should be in liquid form. A liquid dose can be regulated to the drop.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara — both natural laxatives that form no habit even with children. Syrup Pepsin is the nicest tasting, nicest acting laxative you ever tried.

VINCENT NEWS

The Vincent Yellow Jackets won their third consecutive victory over Maplesville, Friday, 32-0. Vincent had their passing and running working perfect. Passes from Looney to Embry and the shifty running of Carr and Beavers was something that would give any grid fan a thrill.

The first touchdown was a determined drive from mid-field. Looney carried the ball over the double striped line. Looney passing to Embry was good for two more touchdowns.

Southern, Vincent's right end, caught a blocked punt and ran 45 yards for a touchdown. Beavers, with a great exhibition of broken field running, made the last touchdown. Beavers also made several fine returns of punts. Willis, Denty and Gardner played a fine defensive game in the line. Maplesville made only two first downs. Vincent has not had her goal line crossed yet. Vincent plays Minor High, Oct. 25 at Vincent.
